Mr. Foulds: I think you have explained the position of the Chair very well. I wonder if you could cite a precedent or two, or the case for your definition as it is included in rule 86.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I do not have any precedent as such, but I think the precedent is very simple. Any imposition or increasing of a tax is considered to be imposing a tax, and the fact is that the motion increases the amount of taxation, which makes it out of order.

Are there any further discussions on Bill 25?

Mr. Foulds: That is a good amendment.

Mr. Laughren: I regret that the Chair has ruled the member for Hamilton Mountain out of order.

Mr. Peterson: If you don't like the ruling, challenge it.

Mr. Laughren: I was worried about that, I must confess to you. For that reason, I have prepared another amendment on the same section.

Mr. Peterson: The one-two punch of the NDP party.

Mr. Foulds: The P stands for party.

Mr. Laughren: I move that section 1(1)(e) of the bill be amended by deleting the words “and does not exceed 90 cents” in the sixth line.

Further, Mr. Chairman, I could move on to clause (f) if you wanted to do them at the same time.

I then further move that section 1(1)(f) of the bill be deleted.

If I could speak to my motions, they clearly are not the same kind of amendment as put by my colleague from Hamilton Mountain.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'll have to say actually the same thing about this amendment as I did about the last one.

Mr. Laughren: You're predictable.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I believe it's contrary to rule 86 of the standing orders, and as such I rise on a point of order and ask for your decision, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Laughren: I don't want to delay this on a technical hassle. I really would ask the Chairman to look at it seriously and consider the fact that "does not exceed 90 cents" is simply deleting a proposed change in the legislation and does not impose any new tax on cigars. That's in clause (e). In clause (f), deleting the section, you would have to use some legal gymnastics to interpret that as imposing a new tax on cigars.

I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to try to make the distinction between the amendment that was put by the member for Hamilton Mountain and this amendment. Truly there is a distinction in the fact that while in the other you might, and you did, put the case that it was the imposition of a tax, in this one you can hardly do that in view of the fact that it's just asking you to delete an existing one, and secondly, to delete a section which makes reference to the price of a cigar and the amount of tax.

Mr. Charlton: To reiterate and perhaps further clarify what the member for Nickel Belt just said, the Tobacco Tax Act as it presently exists imposes a tax of two cents for every five of retail price over 15 cents with no ceilings. That tax is already in existence. All that the member's amendment is doing is deleting a new cap on that tax. The deletion of that cap will merely leave the existing tax in force. It is not a new tax and it is not an increase in tax. As for as we can see, this is a perfectly legitimate amendment.

Mr. Foulds: On the point of order, I would draw to your attention before making any decision, Mr. Chairman, that in my view the proposed amendment by my colleague from Nickel Belt is an administrative amendment rather than a taxation amendment. It's virtually a housekeeping amendment. I would point out to you that rule 86 specifically uses the word "impose." The amendment, as suggested by the member for Nickel Belt, does not impose a tax.

Mr. Laughren: That's right.

Mr. Foulds: Nor does it, as is specifically outlined in that section, specifically direct the allocation of public funds. Those are the only two operative points of standing order 86.

The two verbs are "impose"—this amendment does not impose a tax; and the other verb is "direct"—this amendment does not direct the allocation of public funds.

Those are the only two conditions—because they are the operative words in the rule—that prohibit a bill, resolution, motion or address, from being put forward to deal with the matters subsequent. Thank you.

Mr. Peterson: May I assist on this? It's strictly my understanding of this, and I would again have to agree with the minister, where under standing order 86 it says, "the passage of which would impose a tax." It is my judgement that this would impose a specific tax.

Let me use a specific example: If you had, for example, a $3 cigar, the kind which the Premier (Mr. Davis) is used to smoking.

Mr. Laughren: The tax exists.

Mr. Peterson: As I read the legislation now, the maximum tax on that cigar would now be 39 cents.

Mr. Charlton: That is not legislation.

Mr. Peterson: If that section was removed, there would be an incremental tax, an additional two cents for every five cents over 15 cents. So in fact there would be a very much higher tax at a higher level.

Mr. Charlton: That tax already exists.

Mr. Peterson: And I think that in effect what you're doing is imposing a higher rate of taxation on that particular item—

Mr. Davidson: The tax is already in effect.

Mr. Peterson:—in my judgement, at least, is precluded under 86 of the standing orders.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you. I would draw to your attention the parallel situation in debating of the estimates. It is generally accepted that the opposition parties have the right to reduce expenditure, that a motion could pass to delete the minister's salary, for example, or part of the salary, or we could eliminate a vote. What is generally agreed is that the opposition doesn't, in the estimates debate, have the power to add to the estimates, I would suggest that the tax exists. We're not imposing a tax by the amendment as proposed. We are simply, as my colleague from Nickel Belt said, introducing a housekeeping administrative amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I've listened to the debate on this point of order and of the previous point of order as well. I would not like to differ with my colleague from London Centre but I'd like to make this clarification, and make this very clear to the Chair.

An earlier comment by the minister concerned me when he said there was a proposed amendment to this Act. I clearly had the impression from the statement by the minister that it would become exceedingly difficult for the opposition to bring any amendments to any legislation dealing with any taxes or any revenue legislation. That concerns me. I would like to make very clear to the Chair the importance of its role in this, that each amendment must be looked at very closely so that if we in the opposition feel that a particular amendment is an amendment that has merit and it receives the support of the majority of the members in the House, then that amendment should not be ruled out of order because it happens to be a particular amendment to revenue legislation.

I just wanted to make that point very clear. It's important that the Chair, in reviewing whatever amendment is brought forward, look at it and scrutinize it very closely, so that standing order 86 is not used as a shield or as an umbrella to deflect any amendment brought forward by the opposition pertaining to revenue legislation. I just wanted to make that point clear.

The other point is that, obviously, the first amendment brought forward was clearly an additional tax, but I'm not sure on this one. My colleague, the member for London Centre, understands this type of legislation better than I do, but possibly the minister will tell us this; what happens if this is deleted? Is there an open ceiling then, as my colleague from London Centre says, so that there's no limit up to 90 cents and then the tax is imposed for every other above? If that is in fact the case, that may well be an additional tax and in that sense may well be out of order.

I am not saying anything about the merit of it or not, I am just saying on a point of order, if it is not in fact—if we revert to the legislation that at present exists as to how that is taxed—then that is another matter. I must admit to the Chair that I am not very clear on it and possibly we should get some clarification or some undertaking on the part of the ministry, because it seems to me that this amendment is one that, on its face, is not absolutely clear as being an additional tax.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, could we just reiterate again that the legislation, the Act, as it at present exists, already imposes the tax of two cents for five cents of retail price with no limit. That tax already exists, is already in force, is already being collected. We as an opposition party, with this amendment and these deletions, are just very simply stating our preference for the existing legislation as opposed to the new and proposed legislation. We are not proposing an amendment which creates a new tax. We are not proposing an amendment which increases the present tax. We are proposing an amendment which deletes sections of an amending bill and shows a preference for an existing piece of legislation.

Mr. Roy: Just on that point, if I may, Mr. Chairman, to the member for Hamilton Mountain, I am not sure that that is in fact the case. You are not deleting the whole section; you are deleting parts of it. I am just wondering whether the existing part of the section in fact becomes the operative section if the amendment is allowed to pass. That's just what I am wondering.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would first like to thank the member for Nickel Belt for giving us a copy of this earlier. I have had a chance to study the amendment and the effect of the amendment, and compare the amendment to the existing legislation. If the bill were amended as recommended by the member for Nickel Belt, the net effect of the total bill would not leave the tax as at present on cigars over 90 cents.

The net effect of the total bill would increase the amount of tax on cigars over the price of 90 cents. As such, the effect of the amendment as proposed by the member for Nickel Belt would increase the amount of taxation over the present amount and therefore the amendment is out of order because it is imposing a tax.

Mr. Foulds: Just on a point of clarification, Mr. Chairman, are you saying it raises the level of taxation or simply that the revenues—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The amount of taxation on a cigar over 90 cents would be more under the bill if it were amended under the terms of the member for Nickel Belt. It would be more than the present amount of tax; and therefore it is imposing a new tax and therefore in my ruling would be out of order.

Hon. Mr. Macck: Mr. Chairman, if I might just clarify a little bit—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You cannot debate a ruling.

Hon. Mr. Macck: I wasn't really going to debate it but there are some questions on the opposite side and I only wanted to clarify them. I am not going to debate it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: When we get to the section then.

Mr. Foulds: On section 1(e), it seems to me that the form of taxation that the minister is suggesting in this clause is an unfair form of taxation. Basically the bill pretends to be a luxury tax bill, but by putting the limitation that he has in this particular clause, it seems to me he has refused to take that luxury tax concept to its logical conclusion. That is, he is not using a progressive form of taxation within this kind of taxation, because on the more expensive item he has put a limitation on the taxation level, and therefore the tax does not escalate as it does with other parts of the tax, and that the expensive cigars that have been referred to previously, proportionately speaking, get off at an easier rate of taxation than do middle-income cigars. I would therefore oppose this section.

Mr. Chairman, I think you have ruled out of order a couple of what I thought were pretty sensible amendments but the section as it stands does not deserve to pass. I would feel it is a bad section and that the minister should rethink the section and either amend it himself so that there is a form of progressivity in the taxation or withdraw it.

Mr. Roy: In relation to section 1(1) on the raising of taxation by taxing cigarettes and cigars, I was at one time going to make a long-winded speech on the demise of the five-cent cigar—

Mr. Peterson: But he smokes so much he can't speak that long.

Mr. Roy: —and small wonder with the taxes being imposed. I would just like to say to the minister that I know he is not the initiator of the tax but, as we have seen over the years, the fellow who takes the flak is often not the one who causes the problems. Be that as it may, it is your function and you will have to suffer the slings and arrows of the opposition, considering that your boss, the minister imposing the tax, is not around.

It just seems to me, and I think my colleague from London Centre said this before, that this government over the years has lacked an awful lot of imagination in relation to the raising of revenue in this province. It seems that every time they overspend—and, God knows, they have been doing that regularly since 1971—the only thing they can possibly turn to is either liquor or tobacco. In this case, we have tobacco.

I find it somewhat strange that a government with the number of experts and the so-called competence of some of the people within that government can't find more imaginative ways of raising revenue, apart from every year imposing a new tax on cigarettes or alcohol.

Mr. Foulds: You will note they found OHIP recently.

Mr. Roy: OHIP is another matter, and I don't want to be out of order. But I do want to say that it's some reflection of the competence and the imagination of that government that from year to year when the budget comes along, there are only two things that are really certain, at least since we've been here and many of us have been here since 1971. One is, there is going to be a deficit, and a huge one. Second, taxes are going to be raised in the areas of cigarettes and liquor. I find it passing strange that this government which prides itself on having imagination, competence and so on can't find a more imaginative way of raising revenue.

As a closing shot, I might say I suppose that the Premier knew some time ago they were going to be raising additional revenue from cigars and that's one of the reasons he switched from cigars to a pipe.

Mr. Foulds: They are not raising it as much.

Mr. Peterson: He wants to be like you.

Mr. Roy: Yes, he wanted to have a bit of class. I am sure the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) would have us believe that it was on his expert medical advice the switch took place. But I would hazard to think that possibly he had some lengthy forethought. He had some premonition of what the Treasurer was bringing forward and he thought it would be cheaper to suck on that pipe than those big, fat cigars.

Mr. Eaton: A great contribution. We could have got along without that.

Mr. Peterson: An excellent contribution.

[9:45]

Mr. Charlton: I just don't think subsection 1(e) of Bill 25, the section that we in this caucus find objectionable, can be supported. I am very disappointed that both our amendments were ruled out of order.

Mr. Eaton: Wasted the time of the House and now you are leaving, eh, Albert?

Mr. Laughren: You would see it that way.

Mr. Charlton: A number of the government members feel—and one is shouting out there—that we're wasting the time of this House—

Interjections.

Mr. Eaton: I was referring to the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Charlton: This may seem like a trivial point to some, but the principle that is laid out in this bill in subsection 1(e), this precedent of reducing taxes on a luxury item at the most expensive end of that luxury spectrum is just a principle which is not acceptable. It may be a small thing in terms of dollars but it is just not acceptable. Where will this particular direction take us next? OHIP increases are bad enough, but this kind of principle is just outrageous and we find that we cannot accept it. We cannot accept this subsection 1(e) of the bill as it presently stands.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Very shortly, the member for Hamilton Mountain completely ignores the fact I stated earlier that there are some small cigar manufacturers who produce expensive cigars. If we were to go ahead with the type of taxation that is being proposed by the NDP we could effectively put some of those people out of business.

Mr. Peterson: In Havana.

Mr. Haggerty: Why don't you buy it from Cuba?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's one of the reasons we decided not to impose the tax on the more expensive cigars. I mentioned that in the debate this afternoon. You chose to completely ignore it and that's your privilege, but I think it should be taken into consideration. There is more to this story than just the one side.

Mr. Peterson: This is supporting your friends, the cigar makers in Havana.

An hon. member: You should consider it overall, before you propose a tax.

Mr. Haggerty: I just want to speak on section 1(1) of the bill for clarification. It says, "Every consumer shall pay to Her Majesty in the right of Ontario a tax computed as follows: 1.1 cents on every cigarette purchased by him." It goes all the way through there in four sections; it says, "by him." Does this tax not apply to both sexes?

Mr. Foulds: I fail to follow the logic of the minister when he says that the ministry considered this matter long and hard and decided not to impose a tax on luxury cigars because there are one or two small manufacturers of such items in this province.

Mr. Breaugh: Who are they?

Mr. Foulds: If that is the main argument of defence that the minister is going to use, I would suggest that he apply that right across the board and give up the whole idea of taxation, because any form of taxation on any manufacturer large or small, but particularly small, will in fact perhaps, using his logic, adversely affect that industry. Yet in another bill the minister says the imposition of the sales tax, for example, on rolling stock will not affect the manufacturers.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that the minister and his colleague, the Treasurer, cannot have it both ways. When a tax is imposed either it affects the manufacturer or it doesn't. If he's going to use the argument that the imposition of the sales tax on this item will adversely affect the manufacturer, then he must also accept that logic when talking about the retail sales tax with regard to rolling stock for railways.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion on this bill?

Shall the bill be reported?

Mr. Foulds: No. You haven't asked us if the sections are carried.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. Shall section 1 carry?

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Section 1 agreed to.

Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 25 reported.

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 27, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments or discussion on Bill 27? Mr. Charlton, are you talking to the entire bill or to one section of the bill?

Mr. Charlton: There are a number of sections which I wanted to refer to.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Charlton: My concern here again is the discussion that we have already had on railway rolling stock. For us, the Minister of Revenue, the Treasurer, no one, has effectively been able to say that the government knows or has any realistic idea how this tax is going to affect the industry that produces the rolling stock. He gave us the breakdown on some of the—I think the minister mentioned that it was going to cost the municipalities $1 million—specifically Toronto, and GO Transit. We have had no indication where that money is going to come from, or if the province is going to make it up. The minister himself suggested that as a result of this tax perhaps those who buy the rolling stock from the industry would not be able to purchase as much. In other words, the minister has admitted the possibility of an effect on jobs in this province.

are going to come up with the extra $1 million to pay for the additional costs in the TTC. This section, although it may be valid, hasn't been proven. For the government to offer this without the projections, without the facts from studies, just seems a bit premature to me.

Mr. Laughren: This is one of the frustrating parts of debating with the Minister of Revenue. I am fully aware that the Treasurer has said this is the way it is going to be, and the Revenue minister must defend it. But what I don't understand is when we asked the Treasurer in the Legislature about the imposition of a seven per cent sales tax on rolling stock he said, "Don't worry about jobs; the purchaser pays it." He really had us scratching our heads over here as to what in the world he was talking about. He can't in one breath say that because the purchaser pays it, it will have no effect on jobs, then turn around and be talking about the seven per cent sales tax exemption on the hospitality industry and say that because the purchaser pays it this will create jobs in the hospitality industry.

I don't know how you can defend your colleague with those kinds of gymnastics that he went through, but there are some quantum leaps in logic there. I know it is difficult to ask the Minister of Revenue to defend anything that the Treasurer does, in view of the dirty tricks that the Treasurer plays on him. But, I really think this minister needs to have more information from the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). I would like to know what studies the Treasurer has done or what documentation is available to show that removal of the seven per cent sales tax on storm windows and storm doors will have a significant bearing on the purchase of those products; and secondly, to an extent that it will be any kind of meaningful energy conservation program. I really find that hard to believe.

I would also like to know, in terms of the hospitality industry, what studies have been done to show that the utilization of rooms is so closely related to a seven per cent change in price. He must feel that way or he would not have granted the exemption and it would not be in this bill.

I would appreciate knowing, first of all, if the Minister of Revenue has access to the documentation; whether or not he has the documentation. I would like to know whether it has been made available to him by the Treasurer, or whether he said, "Well, here it is. This is what we're doing. Get your people to put it in the form of a bill." Or perhaps there was more of a sportsmanlike approach to it and he said, "Look, if you're going into the arena in there, Lorne, you've got to have some information at your fingertips," and, in fact, he gave the minister the documentation and said, "Now you've got something to defend it vigorously with," so you could proceed to fight off the socialist hordes over here who are attempting to make the tax system more equitable—and not just equitable, but to make more sense, because that's a pretty sad excuse for an energy conservation program. The same is true in terms of the additional tax being imposed on rolling stock when we're attempting to increase the utilization of public transit, for example, in the province.

I would be very surprised if the Minister of Revenue has information, but I certainly wait with bated breath while he tells us of all the documentation he's been provided by the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I wonder whether it wouldn't be better if I replied to each speaker as he speaks, rather than attempt to remember what each one says and reply to them all at once.

Mr. Roy: You could make notes.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would remind the member for Nickel Belt that there are other energy exemptions that were already in the Act and this is an addition to them. So it's not a case of this being the only one to conserve energy. It's just an addition to what we already have. I would be happy to go over them with him if he wants to hear them all. I have them here. There's quite a list. But I'm sure he's aware of them.

It's very difficult to project what effect the seven per cent reduction of sales tax in the hospitality industry is going to have. I don't think anyone can come up with a proper projection as to what's going to happen in a situation like that. I think all that can be done is that it can be assessed after the tax is eliminated to see if it is effective or not.

I understand there were some projections from the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. They talked about a figure of something like $30 million, which doesn't seem to make very much sense to me, because the tax exemptions are going to cost the coffers of the government something like $20 million.

I'm sure the members opposite realize the tourist industry in the province of Ontario is in some difficulty. The reason for bringing in the exemption of sales tax in that area is to give that industry a shot in the arm to try to assist it. It's not going to be the answer to all of that industry's problems—there's no question about that—but it will assist it. The members will realize, of course, that this exemption is only for a certain period of time, until the end of 1979.

I don't believe anyone could produce a proper study that would project what effect this exemption of sales tax would have on the tourist industry. I don't think that's possible.

Mr. Laughren: Has the minister met the whiz-kids in the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs? They've got an econometric model for everything. I would suggest to the minister that if they're saying the decrease in revenue is going to be $30 million a year—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I read $20 million.

Mr. Laughren: No, they say tax cuts in tourism will amount to $30 million; I assume that's what they mean. That decrease in revenue is shown on page 18 of the Ontario budget statement. The minister is saying it will increase revenues by $20 million.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I didn't. Pardon me, I said Industry and Tourism had mentioned a figure of $30 million that they hoped the tourist industry would benefit by. But I'm saying it's costing the Treasury of the province $20 million to reduce the taxes.

Mr. Laughren: If I could just correct you. It's costing the ministry $30 million, unless there is some other tourism gift that I don't see in here. It's costing $30 million in revenue, and if the industry is going to benefit to the tune of $30 million, it's costing you dollar for dollar for all benefits to the industry, which seems a bit much to me.

Mr. Swart: It's a great employment program. It's very effective.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: These figures I have before me—

Mr. Laughren: Look at the budget paper.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'm more interested in my own figures because they come from my own ministry.

Mr. Laughren: I know.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: What I'm saying is that it's $20 million.

Mr. Peterson: I want to speak very briefly on this because this seems to me to speak to the problem with your government. I think you're hitting on two of the most fundamental problems that we have in the economy in this province today. Number one is the energy problem that I've spoken upon at great length and I will continue to speak upon. It's the single biggest drain that we have in our economy here. We're running about an $8 billion energy bill, roughly 10 per cent of our gross provincial product, and the best you can come up with is a dismal exemption on storm doors and windows.

Mr. Ashe. Speak to your friends in Ottawa.

Mr. Peterson: It has absolutely nothing to do, in my judgement, with an integrated energy policy. When we in this province are the highest per capita consumers of energy in the entire world, you have an obligation, as a member of Her Majesty's cabinet, to do something more worthwhile than you are doing. I don't blame you exclusively. I blame the Treasurer mostly. I blame the Premier even more than that and I blame the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz).

I have a real problem with the way the Premier has handled the administration of this province. He's always treated energy as a junior portfolio. He's either stuck in a guy on his way up or his way down and most of them, with the exception of the one about two ago, have been on the way down. He's never treated it seriously and we come up with a hodge-podge of miscellaneous proposals that have nothing to do with an integrated energy policy.

There is probably very little you can do. Obviously, we're going to support this bill but it's a dismal, feeble attempt. If I were you, as Minister of Revenue, I would use your new-found power, the power that you projected out of your licence plates and all the good things that happened to you therefrom, and use it to develop something worthwhile for this province in terms of an integrated, conserver, renewable form of energy policy that we need so desperately.

Mr. Laughren: Put the Treasurer in his place.

Mr. Peterson: I will continue to argue this way with the Minister of Energy and with the Treasurer. I see these as miserable little sops to two of the most important problems we have in this province. I am so terribly disappointed when it is an established fact that it is so much easier to save a barrel of oil—to save a few megawatts of power—than it is to create them. It is so much cheaper.

It strikes at the heart of our economy, particularly when we're so vulnerable. When we are importing 80 per cent of our energy, when every barrel of oil that we import strikes at the cost of living index and at the number of jobs in this province, you have an obligation to do something far more constructive and worthwhile than you have done. I'm disappointed that this is such a paltry, miserable little effort in that area.

We in our party have listed, and my colleague from Halton-Burlington has talked of, hundreds of things that would be constructive. I, in my halting way, have talked about things that I think should be done—not that they necessarily will create more energy tomorrow, but they will save more energy starting tomorrow morning. This is just one of the very small steps. If you're serious, you'd put storm windows on this building, to start off with, and show a little bit of government leadership. The government leadership shown in the energy conservation program, frankly, has been abysmal.

I feel very strongly about that. I will continue to hound you and will continue to talk to anybody who is listening. You happen to be here tonight and you happen to be on the receiving end of some of these slings and arrows because we in this party feel so terribly strongly about it.

We also feel that every person in the province is going to have to make some sacrifices. They aren't going to be major sacrifices and really, in a meaningful sense, they aren't going to affect anyone's standard of living or anyone's happiness. But it is going to call for a massive collective effort with strong government leadership and you people are a very long way from providing that leadership, and I don't regard this as significant or meaningful whatsoever.

You should come up with an entire series of proposals in your portfolio. Why aren't you exempting, for example, assessment on renewable energy in homes, solar devices and wind-generated devices? Why don't you use your imagination?

As the new Minister of Revenue coming in with a new broom—and we have seen lots of examples of new ministers coming in with a new broom, with new ideas—don't get hung up on the old establishment idea of just hanging in and covering your behind. Come up with something creative, because I can assure you that we will support you and I am sure that our friends to the left will support some creative new ideas too. And don't let that guy who sits one in front of you and one to the left bully you around. It's time that you guys started bullying him and telling him what should be done. Use your new-found power, I say to you, Mr. Minister, because it's important.

Mr. Laughren: Borrow a Band-Aid from the Liberal minister in cabinet, Lorne.

Mr. Peterson: Just to speak for a minute to this exemption for hotel rooms; again, I regard this as just a very superficial thing. I understand that the former Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) yelled for a long time about this and I gather he will consider it a great feather in his cap, particularly now that he is the Minister of Housing. But I say to the Minister of Industry and Tourism who is sitting in the back row yapping, he should be doing far more than he has been doing. It is my experience, when I see new ministers, that they at least have two or three months good grace. When you get into a portfolio, use your energy, use your creativity and come up with something more substantial than a miserable little exemption on some hotel rooms. You should be coming up with an integrated policy to develop tourism in this province.

We have lots of good ideas. We are willing to share them with you. We are willing to sit on your goofy committees. We have all sorts of expertise on this side of the House. And I say with great pride that my colleague from Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) knows more than you do about this job and frankly, he should have it, and I say with some pride that he will have it in the very near future.

Mr. Foulds: As soon as you form the coalition.

Mr. Peterson: But I say to all you guys over there that it's a very, very dismal little patchwork, paltry—

Mr. Foulds: Hear that, John; when the coalition comes you are out.

Mr. Peterson: —miserable little attempt at strategy, at policies or any kind of co-ordinated approaches. You can certainly do better.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Get serious.

Mr. Peterson: And I say to both of you—you are both new ministers—use whatever good grace you have. I assume that the Premier treats you with some degree of respect for the first two or three months in the portfolio.

Mr. Roy: I am not sure.

Mr. Peterson: I am not sure about that. I really don't know how that—

Mr. Roy: You have been seriously abused, John.

Mr. Peterson: —mind can operate, but if you have any credibility, use it. Use it before you get ground down. And I say to you, particularly the Minister of Revenue, you have got an opportunity, use it. Obviously, we are going to support these; how can you help but support these miserable little contributions to these great and fundamental issues? But I say you have a far greater role. Use it. We will support you and we will show Darcy McKeough and Bill Davis that there are better men in this House, and we can all do better.

Mr. Roy: Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: A point of order, the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I am sure you would not forgive me and my colleagues here would not forgive me if I didn't advise the members of the House that we have the honour of having here a visit by the former member for London South, Mr. John Ferris, who is visiting us under your gallery.

Mr. Peterson: He will be back.

Mr. Roy: Just on temporary absence.

Mr. Foulds: I am disappointed that the minister didn't respond to that peroration by the previous speaker. There is, however, a sort of echo in his phrasing about the far, far better things that can be done. Of course the guy who said that went out and got himself hanged; I should remember that.

Interjection.

Mr. Foulds: I certainly would like to point out to the Chairman that in essence the previous speaker said two things—one, that when the coalition government comes, John Rhodes is going to be out of a job and John Eaton is going to be in—

Mr. Peterson: We like John; we'll still invite John to dinner.

Mr. Foulds:—and two, he said these are miserable, unimportant—

Mr. Peterson: Paltry. Scrawny.

Mr. Foulds:—paltry, scrawny amendments. And he said, "How can you help but support them?" I want to point out to you, what you are getting is miserable, scrawny, paltry support.

Mr. Chairman: The debate is becoming repetitious.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to speak to the principle of the section, section 2, that we are debating; I think the debate got slightly off the rails. We have before us four subparagraphs in section 2, all of which deal with different matters. It does seem to me that the point that was made on second reading by my colleague from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton), my colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) and, if I may be immodest for a change, myself, about the inconsistencies in the taxation policy of the Treasurer and the inconsistencies in taxation are apparent within this section itself.

On the one hand the government removes the taxation on storm windows and storm doors, and we say, "Good for you, one minuscule step in the right direction." One of the arguments used by this minister and used by the Treasurer is (a) that will help the conservation program, and (b) it will help create jobs; i.e., by removing the tax we will help create some jobs, because the purchaser, no longer having to pay the tax, will purchase more of these units and have them installed.

Then when we get to paragraph 2 we say, in one part of it, that we are going to impose a tax—that is with the item that will be now numbered in the original legislation 41 and then 41(a). Sorry, with paragraph 2 we are also removing a tax; we are removing the tax on the hospitality industry, and we are saying and the argument is that by removing that tax we will create some jobs. We don't know how many, we don't know who is going to benefit.

What strikes me is that it would appear, because he has not entered into the debate, that the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes)—if I could have his attention for a moment—is not going to do any studies, at least I haven't heard him make an announcement that he is going to do any studies, on the effect of the removal of the taxation on the hospitality industry, and also do a comparison of the year or year and a half that the tax was in effect as to what effect the devalued Canadian dollar is having on the tourism industry. I would suggest to him, if I might through you, Mr. Chairman, that both those factors should be monitored in terms of the effectiveness of this particular clause.

We also see within this section that the railway rolling stock exemption will be removed. In other words, we are imposing a tax. In two cases we have made the argument that by removal of a tax, by providing an exemption from taxation, we will be creating jobs. But the Treasurer and the minister have argued that by imposing the tax on the manufacturers of rolling stock for railway transit, subway cars for public transit, that will have no effect whatsoever on employment in the manufacturing sector, the supplier to the purchaser. I simply don't follow that logic.

The minister himself has indicated that large purchasers such as the Toronto Transit Commission, the Ontario Northland Railway and the GO Transit system may purchase fewer cars. They could; they may purchase fewer cars as a result of the imposition of this tax.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I didn't say that; I said they could.

Mr. Foulds: I would suggest to the minister that if that happens, then jobs will be threatened and possibly lost at the Canadian Car plant in Thunder Bay and at the Hamilton Steel plant in Hamilton.

Hon. B. Stephenson: National Steel Car, you mean.

Mr. Foulds: National Steel Car. That seems to me to be a fairly serious matter, and that's one argument to which we have not yet had a satisfactory answer from the Treasurer or from this minister.

The other side of the coin is that the imposition of the tax, i.e., the removal of the exemption for rolling stock, will add to the cost of public transit and will therefore discourage an expansion of public transit, the very thing we should be encouraging in terms of convenience and in terms of wise use of energy. It seems to me, therefore, that this particular section is a particularly bad one.

The taxation policies of the government are riddled with inconsistencies; they are highlighted in this particular bill and specifically in this section 2.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, so many members have referred to the removal of the sales tax on storm doors and windows as being such a pitiful little effort that I thought perhaps I should inform the House at this point in time of all the matters that have been exempted since April 20, 1977. This is just an addition to those items that I will now tell you about.

Mr. Laughren: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: "Thermal insulation materials; thermal insulation material is defined to be batt, blanket, foam, loose fill, rigid or reflective insulation that is acquired exclusively for the purpose of preventing heat loss in a building but does not include weather-stripping and caulking materials, windows and doors of any type and frames." Remember, this is dated April 20, 1977, and we've taken into consideration some of these things in the proposed legislation now.

Mr. Laughren: We understand.

Mr. Foulds: We follow.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: "Pipe, boiler and duct insulation and wrapping materials; acoustical insulation and acoustical materials; wallboard or drywall; or any materials incorporated into a building primarily for their structural or decorative value and materials serving functions other than thermal insulation, whether or not such materials have thermal insulation properties."

Mr. Foulds: What are the ones that are not included?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: These are the ones that are not included, don't get me wrong.

"Energy conservation equipment," which is included: "Heat pumps which are principally used to extract heat from an area outside the building for the heating of which they are installed; heat recovery units which extract heat from exhaust water, air or gases that are not intended for reuse or recycling in any manufacturing or productive process or otherwise; solar cells used to produce, directly from sunlight, electricity to charge batteries"—all batteries are excluded from the exemption and are therefore taxable—"solar furnaces, panels and tubes especially designed to collect and convert solar energy into heat for use in a solar heating system"—all auxiliary equipment is taxable—"windmills and wind-powered generators, but not including the frame or other supporting structures; automatic timer controls for electrical equipment which are used to control energy and electrical lighting equipment."

The exemption does not include the timer controls used in the operation of any manufacturing or production process or timer controls sold for domestic household use. "Wood-burning stoves and wood-burning furnaces which have a fully enclosed solid combustion chamber to produce heat for cooking or for heating a building. However, stoves and furnaces that are capable of using other solid fuels are exempt if they are designed to burn wood and all the other requirements are met. The exemption excludes fireplaces and stoves that do not have a fully enclosed combustion chamber, wind deflectors which are attached to trucks or the cargo carrying unit of a truck. All other deflectors are taxable. All parts used to repair or maintain the equipment noted in clauses (b) to (i), except as specially provided in the exemption, are taxable."

All of those things were in a package on April 20, 1977, and we added the other two items, the doors and the windows, to that package. It is not such a bad package when you look at the whole picture. I wanted to bring that to the members' attention and put it back on the record so that people would know that we have done a little more than just bring in those two items.

The argument regarding the rolling stock appears as if it is going to be an ongoing one. I don't know what additional information I could give the members. No one knows for sure whether it is going to affect employment or not. I don't personally think it will, because it has already been done in four other provinces. They are already being taxed, and our information is that there has been no reduction in production or in capital expenditures in those other provinces. So, hopefully, it will not happen here either.

As far as TTC is concerned, it must be remembered that we do supply 75 per cent of the grant for capital investment of the TTC—

Mr. Laughren: Are you going to increase the grant in the amount of the tax?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —and we would also be supplying 75 per cent of the tax, so it wouldn't be that costly for the TTC, particularly the TTC, because it's on a 75 per cent capital grant.

Mr. Laughren: Will you increase the grant because of this tax? Is that what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, we are not going to increase it beyond 75 per cent, except that the capital costs will include the tax and they will get 75 per cent of the cost plus the tax. I don't think we are going to hit them that hard.

Mr. Laughren: You are still, in effect, reducing their grant.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: However, as I say, it can be an ongoing argument as far as rolling stock is concerned. Obviously the members of the parties opposite have different viewpoints, but all I can stress again is to say that it has been and is being collected in four other provinces and there doesn't appear to be any disastrous effects.

Mr. Foulds: On that specific point, perhaps the minister could bring me up to date. I would like to know what other specific province in this country has a public transit system on the scope of the TTC, for example. To the best of my knowledge, the only other city in Canada that has a subway system using rolling stock is Montreal, and I believe that their system is not as extensive as Toronto's. Therefore, it seems to me that the comparison that he is using in terms of the effect on the purchaser is not a valid one, because the scale is so different.

If I might continue, Mr. Chairman, I can see his argument as it refers to railway rolling stock, particularly CNR/CPR, but I don't see the argument as it affects rolling stock for public transit systems, particularly subway cars. I have some reservations about the comparison with Ontario Northland and GO Transit, although I suppose there is probably a comparison between Ontario Northland and the provincial British Columbia rail system. I really would like some further explanation of how the argument about other provinces applies to the public transit as it affects subway cars.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I guess the only example I can give you is that Quebec does have this tax and, as you indicated, Montreal does have a subway system. I know of no disastrous effects in Montreal because of the imposition of the tax. That's about the only information I can give you on it. I am not familiar with the amount of grants that the city of Montreal receives from the province of Quebec as far as the subway system is concerned, but I would venture to suggest that it wouldn't be any more than what our grants are.

Mr. Conway: They've got DREE designation, John Rhodes tells us.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Foulds: I don't want to belabour the point, but it does seem to me that it is the responsibility of the Treasurer, if not the Minister of Revenue, to do a sound analysis of the effect of the taxes, to do comparisons that are not superficial such as we've received in the House tonight, and actually to have some research done before he puts together a budget that imposes taxes such as this. It does seem—very strongly, may I say—that we developed a budget by guess and by gosh and the taxation system that is emerging from it is not one that is consistent, logical or well-thought out in terms of development, either internally of our manufacturing industry or in terms of the development of public transportation.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of section 2 standing as part of the bill will please say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Section 2 agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill 27 reported.

Mr. Conway: The Minister of Revenue will be a hero in South River tonight.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the committee of the whole House reported two bills without amendment.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 30, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege relating to an article that appeared on the front page of yesterday's Globe and Mail entitled, "MPPs Would Have To Pay for Their Own Drinks under Plans To Control Committee Spending." There are a number of remarks attributed to one Mr. Fleming, who is well known in these corridors. I don't know whether Mr. Fleming in fact made those remarks or not, but it seems to me they are completely out of order, if he did make them, and that it reflects on the members of this Legislature. I would ask, sir, that this matter be referred to the procedural affairs committee for discussion and a report back to this House.

Mr. Speaker: I am aware of the article to which the hon. member refers. I am well aware that there are grounds for some consternation on behalf of members. I have discussed this with the director of administration. I have made it quite clear that any remarks of this nature should be made through the Board of Internal Economy, the responsible body for setting guidelines for expenditures under the auspices of the Office of the Assembly.

I can give you assurance that any comments in that regard will not be made by that person and that any comments the House has to make will be made through the appropriate body, which is the Board of Internal Economy. I don't think such an occasion will occur in future.

The hon. member asks that it be referred to the procedural affairs committee. I don't know what the wish of the House is on it. I would hope the explanation I have given would be sufficient. It is within your right to make a motion, if you so desire. It's up to the individual member or the House, I suppose collectively, as to how they want to handle it. I have given that explanation. I think it is a clear indication of what has happened. The remarks attributed to the director of administration were in fact made. With the explanation I have given I think it is the prerogative of the member himself as to whether he wishes to make such a motion for referral to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Reid: Further to the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what you have said. However, I view the remarks made by Mr. Fleming to be of such gravity and to reflect on all members of the House so that they are of grave concern to me and, I would presume, all members of the House. I feel the bounds of his responsibilities have been far overstepped in this regard. You, Mr. Speaker, have not indicated that any apology was forthcoming from the gentleman concerned or any statement made by him that he had overstepped the bounds of his responsibility. In view of that fact, I suggest the matter should be referred to the procedural affairs committee, and I would so move.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the will of the House that this matter be referred to the procedural affairs committee?

So ordered.

BEARE ROAD LANDFILL SITE

Ms. Bryden: I also have a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. On March 16, the last day of the session prior to the recess, I asked the Minister of the Environment if his ministry had made a formal request to Metropolitan Toronto for an extension of the right to dump liquid industrial waste at the Beare Road landfill site beyond the present extension which expires April 30, 1978. He replied, "Not that I am aware of."

I have since obtained a copy of a letter from his deputy minister, Mr. K. H. Sharpe, to Metro Toronto, dated January 5, 1978, which requests an extension until December 31, 1978. This letter was written before the appointment of the present minister, but I understand there had been a meeting held between the Metropolitan Toronto chairman and the Minister of the Environment in the week of March 13, before my question was asked, to discuss this request. Therefore, I cannot see how the minister could have been unaware that such a request had been made.

I would like to ask him to clarify whether he was misleading the House or whether he doesn't know what is going on in his department.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Obviously, I was telling the truth. I was not aware of the letter. I did meet with the officials from Metro Toronto. An extension of the time limit was not discussed.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

ALCOHOL ADVERTISING

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today copies of the revised advertising directives for producers of alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Warner: Are we going to get beer in the ballpark now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: These directives are more comprehensive and more restrictive than existing guidelines, dated March 1, 1974, which are now in force.

Mr. Laughren: Is your face flushed or is that a tan?

Mr. Nixon: Can we get a copy of this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Alcohol abuse is one of our most serious social problems. Excuse me, has the opposition not got a copy of the statement? They were sent along. That must be it now.

Mr. Warner: It is a flagrant violation of the rules.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Very flagrant, but I am not going to resign.

Mr. Warner: You should.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It costs the people of Ontario hundreds of millions of dollars annually in health care, social assistance, absenteeism and reduced productivity. In the policy review carried out by my ministry we have, therefore, given considerable emphasis to the question of what impact advertising has on the consumption of alcohol.

Further, we are very concerned about public attitudes towards alcohol. The old advertising rules do not seem to reflect the public's awareness of the serious problem of alcohol abuse. Many concerns have been expressed about beverage alcohol advertising and we have attempted to reflect these in our new directives. Important new restrictions have been added on life-style advertising and I'll quote the substance of some of them directly.

Beer, wine and cider advertisers must take into account the likelihood of minors and adult non-users being exposed to their advertising. The probable audience for an advertisement must consist primarily of drinking-age adults. Advertisers are required to prepare at the board's request an annual report containing data on the ages of those exposed to their advertising in the previous one-year period, based upon independent qualified sources such as the bureau of broadcast measurement and the print measurement bureau.

All such advertisements shall be directed towards and emphasize the nature and quality of the product being advertised, and shall not imply that social acceptance, personal success, business or athletic achievement may result from the use of the product being advertised. All such advertisements shall be directed to the merits of the particular brand being advertised so as to promote brand preference and not the merits of consumption or the encouragement of excessive consumption.

Advertisements must not suggest that the consumption of alcoholic beverages per se may be a significant factor in the realization of the enjoyment of any activity. Advertisements must not suggest that participants in work, sports, hobby, recreation and other similar activities should consume alcoholic beverages whilst engaging in their work or other activity. Nor may advertising suggest that consumption of alcohol in any way enhances performance or enjoyment of these activities.

Advertisements shall not appear to suggest or recommend the consumption of beer, wine or cider prior to the driving of a motorized vehicle or participation in any sort of activity in which the participants' safety is dependent upon normal levels of alertness, physical co-ordination or speed of response, except in authorized messages of moderation. Nor shall any advertisement depict or suggest any activity which is a breach of the Liquor Licence Act or any other provincial statute.

The frequency of broadcast advertising has also been reduced substantially. In the existing directives, a company may advertise up to 120 minutes per week per radio station. The new directives specify that no company may advertise more than 75 minutes per week in any calendar year and that the weekly average shall not exceed 55 minutes. For television, the weekly maximum per station has been 90 minutes. Our new rule will limit advertisers to a maximum of 35 minutes per week on any given station, the weekly average not to exceed 30 minutes. The yearly maximum has been decreased to 26 hours from 52 hours.

Mr. Bradley: You're listening to the opposition.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Stringent new rules have been added concerning minors. No messages will be permitted which in any way appear to suggest under-age drinking. Furthermore, no advertising will be allowed in publications having a readership which is predominantly under the drinking age. Nor will advertising be allowed during broadcast time when the audience is or is likely to be predominantly composed of persons under the legal drinking age.

Mr. Renwick: What hours are those?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are aware that the effectiveness of anything we do is tempered by the fact that US magazines would attract Canadian advertising dollars for their Canadian editions, forcing Canadian magazines to publish in other provinces. Thus a complete ban would not be particularly effective in eliminating exposure to advertising, yet it would discriminate against Ontario media.

These directives will now be issued to advertisers for immediate implementation. All ads to be run in Ontario media must be cleared with the liquor licence board prior to use, thereby ensuring that the directives are being followed. The guidelines outlined today do not put an end to our review of liquor advertising. Over the next 18 months, we will be closely monitoring these new guidelines to determine whether any further changes are necessary. It is my hope that with the co-operation of the advertising industry, the manufacturers and the media, we will see more responsible, sensible ads and ones which are more clearly directed towards brand selection, not consumption.

Advertising is only one of the factors we have considered as part of our extensive and continuing review of the problems created by alcohol abuse. Further announcements will be made in the weeks ahead.

ORAL QUESTIONS

INCREASE IN OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: In his attempt to pretend to this House two days ago that his reason for the 37.5 per cent increase in OHIP premiums, and his going back on his previously announced policy in 1976, was because of the Taylor committee's exhaustive study—and I quote: "They did an exhaustive study of these matters"—is the Treasurer able to give me a bibliography of precisely what studies indicated 33 per cent would be an appropriate level for OHIP premiums to bear with respect to insured health costs? Can he explain why a member of the Taylor committee today has indicated its conclusion was based simply on the fact that it used to be 33 per cent—that the Ontario Council of Health suggested it in 1973—all of which was before his 1976 policy, so he presumably had the benefit of that when he enunciated what was government policy at that time?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, certainly I will be glad to check, but I suspect the original decision, going away back, was about one-third. I suspect that the council of health thought that was an appropriate number.

My colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) says at one time it was about 50 per cent—somewhat confused, as I recall, by the health insurance fund. But certainly I don't think there are any definitive studies to show that the number should be 34 or 33 or 32 per cent. Probably there were no definitive studies to substantiate the statement that 28 per cent was a desirable long-term norm either. But I will certainly be glad to look in our records and see if there is such a study.

Perhaps in the meantime, the member can be thinking about how he is going to figure out where he is going to find the $199 million which didn't come in. That will be an interesting study when he produces that. We are breathless with anticipation.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh yes, he will do it too.

Mr. Deans: The Treasurer is just being provocative.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, we look forward to the opportunity of showing him where he might be able to arrange his budgeting a little better—

Mr. Deans: I'm looking forward to that.

Mr. Makarchuk: We are looking forward to it as well.

Mr. S. Smith: —but for today we are content to ask the Treasurer to admit publicly that basically he has gone back on his 1976 policy for the sole purpose of raising $199 million of general revenue—that he has chosen to raise it on the OHIP premiums rather than admit that he is having a general taxation increase of any other kind. Now that he has admitted that publicly, we will be delighted to help him budget properly for the province.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. S. Smith: Will he now admit that publicly? Will he now admit publicly there is no reason for him to have gone back on his 1976 policy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to repeat what I said on Tuesday if the member was hard of hearing—

Mr. S. Smith: "An exhaustive study" is what he said, and now he doesn't know of any.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: And will he admit he is bankrupt of ideas as to where to find the money? There was nothing in his critic's speech—all that was in the critic's speech was more spending—

Mr. Bradley: Don't shout.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and not one way to save money in this province, and he knows it. He is bankrupt of ideas.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: In view of the history of the Treasurer renegeing on his promises—and I quote, for example, his renegeing on the Edmonton commitment, a commitment of the government; his renegeing on the guidelines for OHIP financing from 28 to 33 per cent; his renegeing on the Smith committee guidelines where he changed the rules over a two-year period—his debt is, in fact, higher than was previously arranged under the Smith committee—

Mr. Speaker: The original question dealt specifically with OHIP premiums.

Mr. Peterson: I have to set this up, Mr. Speaker. It is very important.

Mr. Speaker: As long as it is within the framework of the original question, and that dealt with OHIP premiums.

Mr. Peterson: This is an "in view of," Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that his commitment to balance the budget in 1981 is going to be by virtue of selling off assets and not by meeting current revenues with current expenditures, how can we trust one thing that he says any more? I suggest to him he has no credibility. How can anybody trust what he is saying?

Mr. Bolan: Tell him to resign.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Liberal Party—reactionary as they are—

Mr. Cassidy: You are two birds of a feather, you know, and you go in hand together.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —spent half their reply to my budget saying we were too far in debt and had spent too much money and then spent the other half saying how much more money they would spend on various programs, how can we believe or take seriously anything the members opposite say?

Mr. Ruston: We can't believe anything you say.

Mr. Peterson: A fair, intelligent, articulate response.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: Based on the minister's first response about the amount of revenue which would have to be raised, and noting that it is entirely in keeping with his comments on pages 15 and 19 of the first section of his budget, will he now clearly tell us that the premium is, in fact, a revenue-raising device and that it is not at all related to whatever health program the government cares to run?

Mr. S. Smith: Tell us about the exhaustive study, Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is no question that admission fees to Ontario Place or to provincial parks or premiums raise revenue. I didn't go to the London School of Economics but I can figure that out, yes. But it is not a tax.

Mr. Martel: It's pretty obvious that you didn't go there.

Mr. Peterson: You didn't even go to high school.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have had sufficient supplementaries.

Some hon. members: One more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition with his second question.

Mr. Deans: The only reason this is not a tax is that you choose not to make it a tax.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Treasurer, since I believe the material is put out by his ministry; anyway, the Premier (Mr. Davis) is absent.

Mr. Kerrio: Don't hold that against him.

Mr. S. Smith: Given the fact that the Treasurer is very good at telling the working people of Ontario how they should restrain themselves and how they should find $199 million to help him do his budgeting, how does he justify this 12½-ounce package of government propaganda entitled, "Ontario at the Conference of First Ministers in February," which apparently has been mailed by the Treasury to more than 90,000 addresses in Ontario, accompanied by a two-page letter from the Premier, and which probably cost in the neighbourhood of $100,000, although he may have more up-to-date figures on that?

Some hon. members: Propaganda.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I can think of nothing that this government has done—

Mr. Warner: That's why you should resign. You've done nothing.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I can think of nothing that this government has done on a more co-operative basis and that will undoubtedly prove to be to the lasting benefit of all of Canada—

Mr. S. Smith: Than sending this garbage to 90,000 people at public expense.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—more than the effort and the work we put into the preparation for the first ministers' conference. I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition would say it is garbage inasmuch as it includes a communiqué signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and two Liberal Premiers. If he calls that garbage, that's his business.

Mr. Martel: That's the best garbage I've heard you say all day.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the Treasurer report to the House the detailed cost of this public relations venture and which firm carried it out? Will he explain what justification, if any, he sees for having to send it to more than 90,000 people—perhaps even that is a low estimate, and I would like to have an accurate one—given the fact that all the documents in the package were well covered in the press at the time of the conference?

Mr. Deans: I think we should eliminate the leader's questions.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, obviously some part of that question will require some research in terms of the costs, and when those are available I will be glad to provide them.

Mr. S. Smith: After exhaustive study?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, we will have to wait until the invoices are in. Again, I am not a doctor, but that is normally what you have to do before you can get the precise costs. And one would want to be precise.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But I say this: I will justify this right now by saying the basis of attempting to restore confidence to the people, to the businessmen and to the leaders in this province is something that is well worth any cost entailed. We've done it before and we will continue to do it.

Mr. Conway: Propaganda.

Mrs. Campbell: We don't have the money.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We think we have a responsibility to indicate what government is doing and to invite response from the people, and the Leader of the Opposition will find, in fact, that the Premier's letter does that.

Mr. Conway: Take a Gallup poll.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We on this side, and the Premier, are interested in what the people think, even if the Leader of the Opposition is not.

Mr. S. Smith: Send them blank paper next time; it will do more than that rubbish.

An hon. member: Are you interested in what Mike Cassidy has to say?

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have the feeling that both the Treasurer and the Leader of the Opposition got wound up over the Easter break and are still sort of acting in a frenzied fashion.

An hon. member: Did you get unwound?

Mr. Ruston: Did you go south, Mike?

Interjections.

HAWKER SIDDELEY LAYOFFS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the fact that the Can-Car division of Hawker Siddeley has revealed that its truck-trailer plant in Mississauga, which was formerly in Thunder Bay, will be closed on May 12 with a permanent loss of between 160 and 170 jobs, will the minister indicate what steps the government will now take to ensure an end to the loss of production in this important area of the automobile manufacturing industry?

An hon. member: Nothing.

Mrs. Campbell: Same as before.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I'm afraid I can't tell the hon. member what I can do to end the closing of a particular facility. I'm not totally familiar with what is causing their shutdown. I would like to look into the details of that particular matter.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the orders were so high in January that Hawker Siddeley was trying to get a second shift added to the plant's work force, is the minister satisfied, or will the minister find out if the plant is being closed because of low profit—profitability—or are Canadians once more going to be thrown out of work because of the arbitrary actions of a multinational company?

Mr. S. Smith: They choke on that word "profitability."

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the word "profit" is very difficult for that party to get out.

Mr. Deans: In Ontario there isn't much of it to talk about.

Mr. Makarchuk: Not at all.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I can tell the hon. member that that particular matter is now being looked into by the Ministry of Labour and we will be made aware of what the situation is.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: In view of the fact that this shut-down involves trucks and vans, I'm wondering if the minister would also look into the fact that we understand the renovation of the Jefferson plant in Detroit is for vans and that may mean we don't get the proposed van line in Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: It is my understanding that the facility the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party asked about manufactures trailers. It does not manufacture vans or trucks. Perhaps the hon. member's leader could tell him that that's the situation.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the recent intervention by this government in order to ensure that Hawker Siddeley, the company that owns Can-Car, would get the TTC streetcar order in Thunder Bay rather than have the order go to Quebec, will the minister intervene in order to ensure that this truck plant is kept open or that the operation is sold as a going concern to a company that's prepared to keep the operation going?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think the hon. member is aware of the fact that in other cases we have certainly done that, if there was a possibility of continuing the operation. We certainly are not aiding and abetting companies to close down. If we can keep them open, we will do so. If there is a possibility of someone purchasing that operation and continuing to operate, we'd be quite happy to assist to see that it's done. However, the hon. member, I think, has to be realistic enough to realize that if that company is going to close down for good and valid reasons, there is very little we can do to keep it open. But we will look into the whole situation.

Mr. Cassidy: Two months ago they were going like crazy.

CHILD ABUSE

Mr. Cassidy: A question to the Attorney General: In view of the widespread concern in the province about child abuse, in view of the mounting evidence that the children's aid societies and the courts do not seem able to cope with the problem, and in view of the specific report of the children's aid society handling of the case of Adrienne Paquette in Ottawa which has been tabled this week, will the minister and the government launch a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act in order to have a full public examination of the circumstances surrounding these recent tragic deaths of children and to make a recommendation on a more adequate means of preventing child abuse for the future?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There are a number of very concerned groups in the province which are studying this problem on an on-going basis, because there is no question it is a matter that must be of great concern to every thinking citizen. In view of the commitment of a number of groups which have responsibility in this area, I don't think a judicial inquiry would serve any useful purpose.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Would the Attorney General not agree that it is inappropriate to leave the search for a solution to the problem of child abuse to the ministry and the children's aid societies which are the problem, and that only a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act, independent of both the ministry and the societies, is demanded?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: To reiterate what I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of groups outside the ministry with a direct responsibility and the children's aid society who are actively involved in solutions to this problem. It is, therefore, not accurate to say the responsibility for a resolution or alleviation of this problem has been left or delegated solely to one ministry or to the children's aid societies.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question, before the Attorney General shuts his mind to the idea of a public inquiry will he not recognize that the problem in child abuse is that none of the many agencies involved, nor the professional people involved, have any clear indication of what their responsibilities are? Will he not also recognize that most of the agencies and the professional people have very divided loyalties on the question, and that it is only by way of a public inquiry that there will be an opportunity to sort out and to determine what the responsibilities are with respect to the rights of the children who have been abused?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I don't think I can answer this question simply because I do not agree with the premises put forward by the hon. member, on which the question is based.

Mr. Warner: The minister just doesn't understand.

Mr. Lewis: One day he will agree and it will be too late.

OMA FEE SCHEDULE

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Health. Considering that section 31 of the Health Insurance Act requires the Ontario Medical Association to provide six months' notice to the minister for any revision in the fee schedule, I'm wondering whether or not it has given six months' notice to him of a planned revision in the fee schedule? If it has served notice of its intention to so do, when was that and what is the climate of the minister's response to that?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I can't recall the exact wording of that section of the Act, but I think it is that the OMA must serve notice of intention to revise, which was given. Again, I don't recall the exact date, but it was in September or October, well within the six months. Since then the Clawson committee has met on several occasions.

Members may recall that at one point the OMA indicated it intended to write what it calls its realistic fee schedule as per the instructions of the membership of the OMA. I have met on several occasions with the president of the OMA in recent weeks and months to discuss this proposal, and I expect the Clawson committee will get back together in the very near future to finish the process of setting up the schedules for 1978-79.

Mr. Conway: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Health indicate whether, in his ongoing discussions with the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in so far as health-care financing in this province is concerned, there has been a discussion about proposed increases in the OMA fee schedule? Has he discussed this matter with the Treasurer, and can he tell us whether or not the reports in the public at large of something in the order of a 36 per cent across the board fee increase is in any way acceptable to him? Has the minister made budgetary plans to accept in whole or in part that kind of substantial increase?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, let me repeat what I've said several times publicly, and which has been reported—I'm surprised it hasn't reached the member's ears—that there is no way the government can consider a 36 per cent increase in a fee schedule—a schedule of benefits, that is, to the practitioners of the province. I think that's been reflected in the public reports. The reaction of the OMA is that it accepts that. It didn't expect the government would do that. However, what the OMA has been directed to do by its membership is to draft—to use the expression again—a realistic fee schedule.

Mr. Haggerty: How about Darcy's 37.5 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I should also point out there is a fee schedule and a schedule of benefits of OHIP. They are two separate things. The member should also be aware that except for a very few doctors whose fiscal year ends after April 14, all but those few will be subject to the anti-inflation control programme ceilings until the end of 1978.

Mr. Conway: One final supplementary: Can the minister indicate whether or not his ongoing ministry-OMA committee on fee adjustment is now expected to discuss the matter spoken of in section 31? I just wanted to be sure that I understood the minister's answer to the first question, as to whether or not he had received notice formally, in accordance with section 31 of the Health Insurance Act—and that the section says, "at least six months before any proposed revision"; not intention, but it says, and I quote, "at least six months before any proposed revision of the schedule of fees," that he be notified. Has the minister been notified in accordance with that Act, quite apart from what his ongoing adjustment committee may say, and will he repeat for me when he was notified of that?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will get the exact date for the member if he likes. I will have it phoned to his office, but it was in the fall of 1977. Let me point out that he refers to the Clawson committee as the joint ministerial-OMA committee; that is not entirely accurate, since of course the membership on the government side is one from the Ministry of Health and the other two from other ministries, senior officials. The chairman of the committee is Mr. Harold Clawson, who is an independent, outside individual. Going back to 1973 when the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the OMA agreed on the establishment of the committee, one of the strongest selling points of it was that the chairman would be independent of government or the OMA. But as I say, will be glad to let the member know the date of the letter, but so far as I'm concerned section 31 has in fact been lived up to.

Mr. Peterson: A supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury. We have had sufficient supplementaries.

Mr. Peterson: There have been two supplementary questions only.

Mr. Speaker: We had the initial question and three supplementaries; nobody indicated they wanted to intervene.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, it is a very important issue.

Mr. Speaker: Do you want to challenge it? The hon. member for Sudbury.

MINE DEATHS

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour: The Minister of Labour will be aware, of course, of the death of Mr. Irving on February 16, 1978, in Inco's Froid mine; she will also be aware of the death of Mr. Sam Beal, August 17, 1976, in Inco's Froid mine; she is also aware of the death of Mr. James Cullen, April 16, 1976, in Inco's Froid mine; but is the minister aware that testimony presented at the coroner's inquest as a result of these deaths has destroyed the credibility of her mining inspector in that area, Mr. Balfour Thomas, and is the minister planning to move that man out of the area as requested by Local 6500 of the United Steelworkers?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, a complete transcript of the most recent inquest has arrived on my desk; it is being examined carefully. The recommendations of the jury are being examined as well, and a further investigation is being carried on by the ministry. I shall be pleased to report to the House when we've completed that study.

Mr. Germa: A supplementary: It is quite clear in the Mining Act that the mine manager has total responsibility for safety of workers. Is it the minister's intention to lay criminal charges against International Nickel Company as a result of the death of Mr. Irving on February 16, 1978?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the entire matter was being investigated by the ministry and when our decisions are made I shall be very pleased to report back to the House; that is a part of the investigation.

FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: On March 14 last the hon. member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) asked me a question about the translation into the French language of the Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires Act and regulations, whether it had been completed. I am informed that both of these Acts and their regulations are in the process of being translated and should be available in the French language later this year.

In a supplementary question I was asked the schedule for the Education Act, Health and Social Services Act, and translation relating to the driver training program. I am pleased to inform that the Education Act, the General Welfare Assistance Act, the Child Welfare Act and the Developmental Services Act are at present being translated. The Coroners Act, parts of the Highway Safety Act, the Human Rights Code, the Construction Safety Act summary and the Women's Employment Act summary have been translated.

A number of pamphlets concerning driver training have been translated, and in reprinting some of these pamphlets they will be printed in both languages. Other Acts and regulations will be printed in the French language. As an example, 17 Acts administered by the Ministry of Community and Social Services will be printed in the French language as funds become available.

Mr. Swart: I thank the secretary for providing me with a copy of his answer ahead of time; but perhaps he will forgive me if I am a little sceptical about the in-depth study when he, in the letter—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Swart: Will he forgive me for being sceptical? I suggest you would understand that that is a question, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: You're forgiven, Mel.

Mr. Bradley: You are forgiven now.

Mr. Swart: Will he forgive me for being sceptical when he states that the Credit Unions Act and the Caisses Populaires Act and the regulations are both being translated. Of course, this is in fact only one Act—the Credit Union and Caisse Populaires Act. Would he tell me at this time the schedule for the completion of the other Acts, the General Welfare Assistance Act, the Child Welfare Act and the Developmental Services Act, which he says are being translated now? What is the schedule for the completion of those?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The hon. member can appreciate that it takes considerable time to do these things. Those Acts are in the process of being translated. Just in funds alone, for the fiscal year 1976-77, $216,797 was spent in the translation of various Acts and pamphlets. So those Acts I just mentioned are in the process of being translated. Hopefully, some of them will be completed this year.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Epp: I have a question for the Treasurer. Whereas the alternative property tax system which is at present under discussion relies largely on a shift in the tax burden to vacant, unused land in order to relieve the residential property taxpayer, has the Treasurer calculated how this will affect Ontario's tourist business? Specifically, has the Treasurer studied the impact of his proposed system on resort owners in areas like Muskoka who own unused land for the recreational use of their clients?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is a problem which has been brought to our attention very forcibly in the course of discussion over the last six months by the member for Muskoka, my colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller).

It has also been brought to my attention very forcibly and very forthrightly, and in a somewhat surprising way, by the district council for Muskoka, who effectively have said—I paraphrase them—that we are not interested simply in lowering residential taxes by $1, $5 or $10 a year on houses or cottages if it means an enormous boost in taxation on a few manufacturing firms. And there are a few in Muskoka, all of whom, I might say, experienced a rather sharp drop in taxation when the reassessment came in five years ago, or whenever it was. They went away down, and the cottage properties, which some members may be aware of, went up.

However, there could be some shift now to manufacturing in Muskoka particularly, which is of concern to the district council, and there could be some shift to the resort properties, particularly those with large acreages the member has mentioned.

I mentioned in the January 4 statement that we were going to have to do something about this. We have not firmed it up; I am not sure, specifically, whether the committee has addressed that problem, although it is aware of it. They may have a recommendation; if they don't, we will do something similar, I would think, to what we have done with golf clubs, which seems generally acceptable. I can't give a definite answer as to how we would propose to go about it, but it is a concern to us, as I have already said to the member, and very much to the district council.

HIRING OF GRADUATES

Mr. Laughren: I have a question of the Minister of the Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. I wonder if the minister recalls making a speech to the Conference Board in Canada in which he gave the conference board a provincial perspective on competition policy, and whether he recalls in that speech saying the following: "The most shocking realization is that the largest proportion of the graduates of our institutions of higher learning, and often the best, find their way into public service."

I am wondering if the Treasurer could assure us that he has not been guilty of hiring the best in his ministry; or if he has been hiring the best, how it is that that fits with his policy, as stated in this speech; or if he hasn't done that, perhaps that is his explanation for the quality of budgets we've been receiving in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do recall that speech, and I have echoed similar sentiments on a number of occasions. It is fashionable, not among members of the member's party obviously, to take note of and complain of the increasing amount of capital resources which are being used or have been used in the last few years, hopefully levelling—and certainly in this province a declining share of GNP has been absorbed by government in the last couple of years; but that, as I say, other than in the member's party, has been a cause for concern. As a matter of fact, even the Premier of Saskatchewan signed a—"piece of garbage" the Leader of the Opposition calls it—

Mr. Laughren: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—saying that governments should restrain themselves and take less out of the economy than they have been taking. What is sometimes overlooked is that governments, universities, colleges and hospitals have been taking an increasingly large number, or werc, of university graduates, of well-trained people. One wonders how much stronger our industrial strategy totally and our industrial fabric in this country might be, or for that matter even our mining and forestry industries might be, if so many of the best brains and talents, at high salaries, had not gone into various parts of the public service in its total aspect.

Mr. Swart: It sure hasn't slowed up any under your party.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There has been a great deal of research done, for example at universities, publicly-funded, by very bright people. My own view is that some of that research might have been better done in the private sector. I wouldn't expect the member to agree with those thoughts.

Ms. Gigantes: Funded by American corporations, no doubt.

Mr. S. Smith: What about the Urban Transportation Development Corporation?

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Would the Treasurer agree, first of all that he hasn't answered my question as to whether or not his ministry has attempted to hire the best people in order to give us the best public service in the province of Ontario? Further, regardless of whether he's hired the best people for his ministry or not, would he please cease and desist in his sleazy, dogmatic and sanctimonious attacks on the public sector.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the quality of the Ontario public service does not have to be defended by me; it is a fine public service.

Mr. Swart: It is being destroyed by you.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would only say that again, although I would not expect the member to agree, the quality and stature and standing, of the economists particularly in the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, going back some 10 or 15 years now—

Mr. Cassidy: It is what you do with your advice that is so bad.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —are among the highest and best in the country. We are continually being raided by other governments, not the least by Saskatchewan.

Mr. Laughren: They're hiring the best.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Do we hire the best? I can recall on two specific occasions attempting to hire people who either were, or were about to become, financial critics for the New Democratic Party. We slipped on both those occasions.

Mr. Martel: You didn't get the best then.

Mr. Peterson: If you are sure you want to defend MacMillan, go ahead Darcy.

FOOD LAND GUIDELINES

Mr. Riddell: A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food: Can the minister tell us the status of his food land guidelines, since the deadline for briefs from municipal councils throughout Ontario was December 31? Have the guidelines been redrafted yet based on the comments received?

Hon. W. Newman: We received 96 responses. We did have a request after the end of December, I think it was by the London Chamber of Commerce, to meet with them after that date, and we did. We did meet with a couple of other groups. We have gone over the guidelines. We have looked at all the comments coming in. I would say that by and large the comments coming on the 96 presentations, the majority of them, basically support the basic guidelines we originally put out.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: Can the minister give us a final date when these guidelines are to take effect and how are the guidelines to be implemented?

Hon. W. Newman: The final date will be determined at the appropriate time and—

Mr. Makarchuk: In the fullness of time.

Hon. W. Newman: We are still discussing. We have had several meetings with them now. I can't give you a firm date, but as soon as possible.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Would the minister obtain for his ministry the results of all the investigations conducted into the dumping of liquid industrial waste at the Upper Ottawa Street dump in the city of Hamilton? Would he pay particular attention to the statement that there is no cause for alarm with regard to the levels of pollution in the Red Hill Creek which flows immediately adjacent to the dump? Would he bear in mind that the creek runs through a recreation area, and at the moment, because of the speed with which it flows, much of the effluent is travelling so rapidly that it is very difficult to pick up? Finally, would he prepare for the House a statement with regard to how it could be that there were three carriers banned from dumping liquid industrial waste at the dump when about four or five months ago when I asked the same basic question I was assured the waste which was being dumped at the dump was safe, and guaranteed not to be causing pollution?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hall: Mister "vague."

CLOSURE OF HILLTOP ACRES

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I have the answer to a question asked previously by the hon. member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan). I was prepared to respond prior to the adjournment of the House for the Easter break but unfortunately the time I was ready happened to be on a day when the hon. member and I were not in the House at the same time.

The question related to the closing of Hilltop Acres, a Metropolitan Toronto home for the aged. As I stated at the time in a very brief response, and prior to the hon. member's supplementary question, I had met with the Metropolitan Toronto council members and officials on November 18 and agreed to assist Metro in providing for alternative accommodation and relocation of those residents should they desire to close Hilltop.

I also stated that while it was never, certainly, the policy of my ministry, as expressed by or agreed to by me, to encourage the closing, except perhaps in so far as the question of safety was involved, I would inquire as to the staff level contacts with Metro staff.

Clearly with respect to both short-term and long-term planning for facilities and services across the province there would be discussions between members of my staff and the staffs of various municipalities and agencies operating such facilities, and providing such services.

Some years ago when the replacement planning was on the way for the Christie Street properties and the old Lambert Lodge being phased out, and the new Castleview-Wychwood Towers was being planned, there were recurring references to neighbouring Hilltop Acres. The distance between the two homes, as the hon. member for Bellwoods knows very well, is quite short, running east-west along Davenport Road.

At that time, and again on subsequent occasions, the deficiencies of Hilltop Acres with respect to program were discussed. But we had not received through Metropolitan Toronto the comments of the building commissioner and the fire chief at that time.

Early in 1977 discussions between the director of the senior citizens branch and the office on aging and the Metro department of social services' director of institutional services referred to several long-range plans involving the eight Metropolitan Toronto homes for the aged under the Homes for the Aged and Rest Homes Act. Utilization patterns were discussed, and a co-ordination of service delivery with the charitable homes for the aged, nursing homes, chronic care, hospitals, senior citizens, housing under the Ontario Housing Corporation, and the Metropolitan Toronto housing authority and community support services.

Again, Hilltop Acres was identified at that time as having certain deficiencies with respect to the total spectrum of care. My understanding is that several options for the use of the property were discussed, including the annex, which is a separate building connected by tunnel to be an administrative office for Metro staff in the institutional division, handling assessment and placement in their preventive care program. Another was the retention of certain cottage units on a trial basis for married couples or unrelated groups of elderly people wishing to attempt semi-independent living on the site.

None of these discussions was formally presented either within the ministry or to Metro council. They were simply the basis of staff concerns and options. It is perhaps unfortunate that the news of the closure became public before there was sufficient opportunity for consultation with the residents' council. However, in spite of the difficulties which have been created by the intervention in this decision, which I will deal with very briefly, by both municipal councils involved, attempts were made then to work with the residents' council, the individual residents and their families and the staffs of the homes.

My ministry, through the senior citizens branch and the Metro Toronto district office, as well as the Metro region of the Ontario Association of Homes for the Aged, is planning a workshop on relocation on April 4 with all of the homes in this area being involved. I would note that with the advanced knowledge of the residents of Strachan Houses and the Church Home for the Aged, both will be closing and relocating in the St. Paul's L'Amoreaux complex in Agincourt. The charitable homes for the aged and other facilities in Metro will be asked to assist should any residents of Hilltop choose to apply for admission to one of their homes where there are suitable vacancies. The director in my ministry who is concerned with this has asked that all red tape and paper work be minimized to effect such transfers for the benefit of the Hilltop Acres residents.

The decisions regarding the closure of Metro's Hilltop Acres were made by the Metropolitan Toronto council in a vote of 22 to 13. Then, more recently, the matter was considered by the city of Toronto council and the closing was endorsed by a vote of 12 to 9. I did indicate to the hon. member that to the best of my knowledge my agreement was not necessary for the closure of Hilltop Acres.

Technically, under subsection 2 of section 12 of the Homes for the Aged and Rest Homes Act, there shall be no change in site and no sale or disposal of any part thereof and no alteration to or in any building or to the grounds of the home without my approval. In light of the information which I have and had at that time, we have from the various authorities the decisions of the two municipal councils. I would not normally withhold my approval under those circumstances when formal requests are submitted by the council of the municipalities that are involved.

Mr. Speaker: Due to the lengthy nature of that statement, I think it would have been more appropriately put under ministerial statements than as an answer to a former question. I am going to add five minutes to the question period.

Mr. McClellan: I thought it was a very simple question. The minister could have answered that question yes or no.

ST. CATHARINES COURT FACILITIES

Mr. Bradley: My question is for the Minister of Government Services. In light of the fact that the Ontario Supreme Court began its spring session in St. Catharines Tuesday in the well-known atrocious conditions that exist at the old Lincoln county courthouse, which included the herding of more than 20 lawyers and court officers into a 20-foot-square room to discuss two criminal, 13 civil and 19 non-jury cases—

Mr. Makarchuk: That's more like a horror room.

Mr. Lewis: You can't herd lawyers.

Mr. Bradley: —that's just as an example—is the minister in a position to announce a precise timetable for the commencement of construction of a new courthouse?

Mr. Conway: The legacy of Bob Welch.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am sure the member is quite aware the property has been acquired. Plans are well under way. To give him the precise date at this time is not possible.

Mr. Martel: What are you going to do about the Sudbury one?

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: In view of the alleged 12 per cent unemployment rate in St. Catharines, would the minister be prepared to authorize this project as a top priority for 1978 and thereby provide a much-needed boost to the Niagara Peninsula construction industry?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I got the same lecture yesterday from the government House leader (Mr. Welch) telling me that I had to do this and do that to help employment in that area.

Mr. S. Smith: A split in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I can assure the member we are giving every consideration to any project that will help the employment situation.

Mr. Peterson: Lean on him.

Mr. Martel: What about the courthouse in Sudbury? The minister should build that one too.

Mr. S. Smith: The government House leader should pick on someone his own size. [3:00]

WELLAND CANAL BRIDGES

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In view of the joint decision between him and the federal Minister of Transport to proceed with the construction of a new bridge across the Welland Canal in Port Colborne, which was just recently announced, would the minister not recognize that the reason stated for proceeding with the construction of that interruptible bridge crossing negates all the arguments which have been used by the Hon. Otto Lang and several local Liberals, including the MP for Welland, against replacing the Port Robinson bridge? They say they're going to tear down all of the bridges including the bridge which was knocked down by a freighter in August 1974, and replace them with tunnels.

Mr. Mancini: Ask the question.

Mr. Swart: In view of that decision to build that bridge in Port Colborne, which negates those reasons, would the minister now get in touch with the Hon. Otto Lang and urge him to proceed with the reconstruction of the bridge in Port Robinson?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think the bridge at Port Robinson is somewhat different from the proposed bridge at Port Colborne. We have been working with the municipal council of the city of Port Colborne and the council of the region of Niagara to improve the crossing situation at Port Colborne, which is partially a provincial responsibility and partially a federal responsibility. It would now appear that after about two years of negotiations and meetings we have come to a conclusion on an interim solution at least for that situation.

The Port Robinson bridge, as I recall, was removed by a collision with a ship, which is within the operating authority totally of the federal government and the St. Lawrence Seaway. I would be pleased to advise Mr. Lang again, as he I'm sure is well aware, that the community there would like to have that bridge replaced, but it is not my responsibility to replace it.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: In answer to his responsibility, would the minister not recall that on March 15, 1976, according to Hansard, when I raised the question of the Port Robinson bridge with him and asked him then to contact the Minister of Transport—and I'll use the exact words: "I would ask that you take this up with the federal Minister of Transport and ask him to consider the replacement of that bridge"—the minister replied to me: "I can't disagree with your viewpoint. I think I'll repeat your words verbatim or maybe send a copy of Hansard to my federal counterpart and see what he has to say."

In view of that opinion at that time, does the minister not now think it would be appropriate that he approach the federal minister and again ask him—

An hon. member: Time.

Mr. Swart: —that that bridge be replaced and express his view that he is willing to have that in lieu of the tunnel?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I talk to Mr. Lang quite frequently on a great many different subjects and make a great many requests and proposals to him. I'll be glad to add this to the list again.

MERCURY POLLUTION

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment: Is the minister aware of a report published in our local Niagara Falls papers and subsequently in the Globe and Mail of the Olin Corporation of Niagara Falls, New York, dumping into the Niagara River between the years 1970 and 1977 some 38 tons of mercury?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: In view of the hazard that this poses to the people in the area, I wonder if the minister would share with this House if he has any liaison at all with the authorities on the other side as to these hazardous conditions so that he would make himself aware of the dangers and what he might propose to make this known to the public along the waterway?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have asked that the matter be looked into and I will report to the member.

FARM EQUIPMENT SHOW

Mr. Makarchuk: A question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism: In view of the fact that the Chinese government has indicated that it will be holding a farm equipment trade fair in October, can the minister indicate what initiatives have been taken or will be taken by his government to ensure that Ontario participates, in order that we may get our fair share of possible farm equipment orders?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't aware that the Chinese government was coming over. I don't have direct contact with them. But certainly, if there's a trade show around where we might be able to sell some farm implements, we'll be there.

An hon. member: Right on top of things.

Mr. Lewis: Given Frank Miller and Cuba, you should set up relations with China.

Mr. Makarchuk: I don't expect the minister to read the Peking Review, but I hope he reads the Globe and Mail; the item was carried in the Globe and Mail.

Can he assure this House that he will take definite action to make sure Canadian farm implement manufacturers have an opportunity or perhaps are directed to participate in that trade fair and, in view of the fact that the federal people's track record in automobiles or the Alaska pipeline is pretty bad, that perhaps he will take the responsibility to ensure we get to that show?

Mr. Deans: Show some initiative.

Hon. W. Newman: The member has never been to a farm machinery show in his life. He wouldn't know what was going on.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Has he ever been to Canton?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I can assure the hon. member that if there is a trade show in which we feel there is an opportunity for Canadian manufacturers to sell products, we will be there. We will not go quite as far as the hon. member might, and direct the people in the private sector to go to these shows, but we will certainly suggest they should go; and I think they will go on their own.

Mr. Deans: Of course not; heaven forbid.

Mr. McClellan: Let them lay off another 1,000 men.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister's colleague Bob Macaulay used to tell them to get off their butts and promote.

Mr. Deans: Look where Bob Macaulay is today.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Deputy Premier. In view of the new federal legislation passed in July 1977, which allows consultations with the provinces over the matter of immigration, and in the light of the fact that the provinces of Nova Scotia, Quebec and Saskatchewan have signed agreements with the federal government as of February 21, 1978, can the Deputy Premier inform the House what position his cabinet has taken on this particular issue? Can he inform the House of what specific proposals his cabinet has put before the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, that question should be referred to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, we asked a question similar to this of that particular minister and we did not get a satisfactory answer; that's why we're directing it to the Deputy Premier.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Is the member prepared to have my answer?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is the hon. member prepared to have the answer of my cabinet colleague now?

Mr. Mancini: Yes.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, the answer may not have been satisfactory but at the time I was asked that was the only information that was available. I'm quite prepared to table a letter that was sent to Mr. Cullen.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the announcement by the Unemployment Insurance Commission that they will be loosening their requirements for UIC people to look for jobs, would the Minister of Labour be willing to bring about the same policy change for people on workmen's compensation benefits?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that portion of the present Workmen's Compensation Act which provides for assistance for vocational rehabilitation does direct some guidelines to the vocational rehabilitation officers.

I would remind the hon. member that the relaxation is not universal, I gather, as far as UIC is concerned. It depends upon the levels of unemployment in the various areas.

I would be very willing to consider that seriously.

Mr. Cooke: When the minister is looking at this proposal, would she take into consideration cities like Windsor, where there is 11.9 per cent unemployment, and cities like St. Catharines, where there is 12 per cent unemployment? At present, her guidelines require WCB recipients to look for three jobs per day, or make 15 applications per week. How can she possibly justify this and will she take immediate action?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I informed the hon. member that I would be willing to consider it, yes.

SEAWAY TOLLS

Mr. Peterson: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Could he inform this House as to what studies he has done on the impact for local industry of the seaway tolls? Can he tell us what the position of his government is and what negotiations he has had with the federal government on this issue?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, my ministry did carry out some studies and prepared a report. I would be glad to send the hon. member a copy of that report. There is no problem there.

We have had discussions certainly with the federal government. We have made known our concerns with the impact that increased seaway tolls might very well have on a number of major Ontario industries and we have opposed the increase in the tolls by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority.

Mr. Peterson: What the minister is saying then is the Ontario position is that the government is opposed to any increase in the seaway tolls? Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Snow: It's exactly what I said.

REXDALE H.O.M.E. PROJECT

Mr. Philip: To the Minister of Housing concerning the Home Ownership Made Difficult project at the corner of Finch and Silverstone Drive in Rexdale. Is the minister aware that, in spite of a letter to me of September 22, 1977, from John Guthrie stating that work on the sodding and the terrible state of the properties would be commenced almost immediately, HUDAC is now saying that it would rather have a cash settlement with the owners of those properties rather than see to it that the properties are fixed up? Would the minister intervene to see that these people get what they paid for and have the properties put into a reasonable state?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I will be glad to take that as notice of a question and have it reviewed.

Mr. Philip: One final supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: He will review it.

LEGISLATIVE BUILDING

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Government Services. In view of the fact that I have had a series of questions on the order paper since March 15, and in view of the fact that the answer is that we cannot have an answer within 14 calendar days, could I ask the Minister of Government Services what is so complicated about answering the question, "Has Professor Eric Arthur prepared any reports dealing with the legislative building and, if so, do such reports contain references to areas under the control of Mr. Speaker, particularly the chamber, the grand staircase, hallways or other common areas?"

What is the complexity in answering the question, "Will the minister table such reports?"

Why does it take this minister over 14 days for such complex questions and can he not answer whether he has familiarized himself with the provisions of sections 93 and 94 of the Legislative Assembly Act? I would like to state, Mr. Speaker, that in my view this kind of an answer is a contempt of this House. Will the minister now answer?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Come on, come on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You'd better resign.

An hon. member: He can't read English.

An hon. member: He's going to love her to death.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McClellan: It wasn't a compliment, I should say.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would have to apologize to the hon. member. I felt I had signed an answer to this question on Tuesday morning. Now it apparently hasn't got through the process to be here—

Mr. Lewis: Typical of the House leader.

Hon. Mr. Henderson:—but in order to assist the hon. member, who inquires in her question, "Has Professor Eric Arthur prepared any reports dealing . . .?" in answer to that particular part, in order to clear that, there are two letters from the professor on file. One refers to a window, the other one refers to one particular picture out in the corridors.

Mr. Lewis: A picture window.

An hon. member: Don't get them confused.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Those are the only reports we have had from the professor—

Mr. Lewis: That's Eric Arthur for you. He is always on the ball.

Mr. Reid: How much did that cost?

Hon. Mr. Henderson:—so there is nothing hidden. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I attached both of these letters to the answer to the question.

What other parts of the member's question remain?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I think that is probably enough.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: What other questions did the hon. member ask?

Mr. S. Smith: Bette says it is enough. How much did it cost to get that window put in?

Mrs. Campbell: Could I be advised how much those two letters cost us?

An hon. member: That's a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The retainer fee for the professor is $1,500 a year.

[3:15]

Mrs. Campbell: A year?

Mr. Lewis: He does one picture window a year for $1,500. We will do it for half the price.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. di Santo: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Now that the Unemployment Insurance office has dropped the requirement for job search in order to qualify for benefits, would the minister direct the Workmen's Compensation Board to drop the requirement for job search in order to qualify for the supplement on the basis of section 42(5) of the Act? As the minister knows it is a farce, it is stupid, and it is humiliating for the worker.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. leader of the third party to make sure that his caucus get their act together. That absolutely identical question was posed by the hon. member's colleague from Windsor-Riverside not five minutes ago. I did respond by saying I would take it under consideration immediately. I am sorry the hon. member was not in the House to hear either the question or the answer.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Colleges and Universities. Further to the recent announcement of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Ministry of Colleges and Universities indicating that the federal government will spend a minimum of $272 million over the next three years—

Mr. Speaker: Can we have some order in the House? I can't even hear the question.

Mr. Haggerty:—and will spend $102 million during the fiscal year 1978-79, can the minister assure the members that the funding of this program will be utilized to its fullest potential for job creation opportunities for Ontario's young adults? Also, is the minister considering introducing a new apprenticeship program—for example, on-the-job training—to meet Ontario's shortage of skilled tradesmen and to reduce the number of imported tradesmen and technicians?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes and yes. There is no doubt that we will be making some announcements on the apprenticeship program and skill training program in the near future—hopefully in the month of May. We feel that the additional funds this year will go a long way towards helping us in those programs. It's about an $18 million increase of federal funds.

I think I should add, for the member's benefit, that the federal government have always felt Ontario led the way in the utilization of these funds for the benefit of their citizens.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the failure of so many companies in the province to provide apprenticeships for workmen and working women on their plant floors, is the government now prepared to insist that companies open up apprenticeships, rather than expecting that someone else will do the job?

Mr. S. Smith: Why don't you have a talk with the unions so they'll co-operate?

Mr. Martel: Let the unions do it—you're dumber than I thought you were.

Mr. Speaker: Have you answered?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think there is very little I can add to what I said the other day to the hon. leader of the third party. Those determinations are in the process of being made, and a full program will be announced in May.

It is rather interesting that in the last two or three months the leader seems to have found that this is a new world, and is proposing all these ideas. We've been working on it for well over a year and a half now, and I am surprised that he has only twigged on to it in the last two or three months.

Mr. Cassidy: You have been in office for 34 years.

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

John A. Schmalz Agencies Limited;
Hare Transport Limited;
A. C. McIntyre Motors Limited;
Beaver Construction (Ontario) Limited;
White Queen Limited;
Salsberg's Smoke and Gift Shop Limited;
MacLellan Construction Limited;
Loubill Hobbies and Sports Limited;
Congregation Beth Am;
Crossroads Christian Communications Incorporated;
City of Cornwall;
City of Hamilton;
Borough of Scarborough;
William Hall Peterborough Protestant Poor Trust.

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might just take this opportunity to inform the House that, particularly in the light of the Treasurer's remarks about the work of this committee on Tuesday afternoon last, I informed the committee this morning, and the House leaders and the whips, in particular the Conservative House leader and whip, who had no members present this morning, that this committee will no longer conduct any business unless I can count five warm and appropriate bodies.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON ONTARIO HYDRO AFFAIRS

Mr. MacDonald presented a report on proposed uranium contracts from the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, dated March 12, 1978.

Mr. MacDonald: Copies of this report are immediately available to the press and will be distributed in the normal course to the members.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

COMMODITY BOARDS AND MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

Hon. W. Newman moved first reading of Bill 48, An Act respecting Commodity Boards and Marketing Agencies.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the reason for introducing this bill is the result of a recent Supreme Court of Canada decision reversing a number of its own decisions going back to 1933. It has ruled that the federal government cannot authorize the collection of levies on products marketed within a province. Thus, we have brought forward this legislation to deal with this matter in order to clear it up.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 49, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical to the bill that was introduced towards the end of the last session, the purpose of which is to confer power on all municipalities to pass bylaws licensing, regulating and governing adult entertainment parlours.

LANDLORD AND TENANT
AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 50, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, this bill is complementary to the bill that I just introduced, entitled the Municipal Amendment Act.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: I understand there are about 14 private bills for introduction today. Would it be agreeable that members wishing to introduce such bills send them to the table and they will have been deemed to have been read the first time? Agreed?

Mr. Renwick: No, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of our party, I don't think we can agree to that. It is important that the statement of intent of the bill be on the record.

Mr. Speaker: There is no statement of intent associated with a private bill.

Motion agreed to.

OCCUPIERS' LIABILITY ACT

Mr. Lawlor moved first reading of Bill 51, An Act respecting Occupiers' Liability.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lawlor: The explanatory note is that the bill replaces the common law as to an occupier's duty and care, replacing the common-law distinctions between duties to invitees, licensees, trespassers and child trespassers with one common duty of care applied to the circumstances of each case.

The bill is in the form recommended by the uniform law conference of Canada.

CLASS ACTIONS ACT

Mr. Lawlor moved first reading of Bill 52, An Act to provide for Class Actions.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Laughren: Long overdue.

Mr. Lawlor: The purpose of this bill is to provide a statutory procedure whereby one or more persons may sue a defendant in the form of a class action. The bill is designed to achieve this purpose by permitting a person who wishes to sue on behalf of a class to apply for a court order authorizing the class action. Once the order is obtained the action proceeds as a class action and the final judgement binds all members of the class except those who have been excluded, as well as the parties to the action.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

Mr. Lawlor moved first reading of Bill 53, An Act to provide for Freedom of Information.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lawlor: The purpose of this bill is to provide members of the public with access to government information. The bill is designed to allow maximum accessibility to government documents while at the same time recognizing that it is in the public interest that certain types of information not be disclosed.

Where a disagreement arises as to whether or not certain information should be disclosed, the bill provides a mechanism for resolving the dispute.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before orders of the day, may I take this opportunity to indicate the order of business for the balance of this week and next week. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in his capacity as administrator will be in the House shortly before 6 this afternoon to give royal assent to five bills standing on the order paper awaiting royal assent.

This afternoon we take Bills 40 and 32 into discussion as private members' public business. This evening we hope to complete Bill 30, Bill 5 and Bill 6 standing on the order paper. Any remaining time this evening will be turned over to debate on the first order. Tomorrow morning we will take into discussion the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman), being government motion 11.

Next week on Monday afternoon, being April 3, the House will be in committee of supply to commence consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

On Tuesday afternoon of next week the House will debate private members' motion No. 5 standing in the name of the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). In the evening we will turn to legislation and consider these bills, hopefully in this order, Bills 7, 8, 9, 11, 31, 24, 26, and 28. If any time remains, we could go back to the first order.

On Wednesday the House does not meet in the chamber.

On Thursday afternoon two ballot items will be considered by the House, No. 7, a resolution standing in the name of Mr. McNeil, and Bill 45 standing in the name of Mr. Blundy. That evening, April 6, we will devote to the first order, the budget debate.

On Friday morning the House will meet in committee of supply to continue consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

It is also customary at this time to indicate the committee meetings, particularly those on Wednesday morning. It has been agreed that the standing committee on general government and the standing committee on resources development will meet next Wednesday morning and the standing committee on justice may meet if required. It is my understanding too that the standing committee on social development will meet on Monday and Tuesday afternoons to continue the consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Culture and Recreation. On Wednesday afternoon they will commence their consideration of the report of the Ministry of Health as agreed.

The estimates of the Ministry of the Environment will continue in the standing committee on resources development which next week meets on Tuesday evening, Wednesday morning and Thursday evening, as well as this evening. If there are any questions I would be glad to respond to them. I think I have covered all the matters that are necessary for information for next week.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question. It's perhaps a point of clarification. In view of the fact that the committees as spelled out have rather mandatory times for meeting, could we have from the government House leader some expression of his position as to other interventions which can preclude those committees sitting on a Thursday morning from being able to function? Is the House leader as bound, as the committees are, in calling other meetings which conflict with those committees and really completely destroy their effectiveness?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the hon. member has raised this question. A great deal of time was spent attempting to allocate time for the meetings of committees, and there was some care taken to hopefully avoid the very point to which the hon. member makes reference. It was regrettable this morning, I think, that the government caucus had to meet and, therefore, it took away that membership from all these particular committees, and certainly I think that should be avoided in the future.

I do accept the comments of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) on that subject as well. It was certainly agreed that Thursday morning would be set aside for the four smaller committees, and I would agree that we should attempt to make it possible for them to meet and to avoid these conflicts. I will, indeed, take that up with our whip.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY ACT

Mrs. Campbell moved second reading of Bill 40, An Act to provide for the Economic Equality of the Sexes.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that I might reserve five minutes of my time to conclude.

The Act in question is one which I have introduced in order to complement the family law packages which have come before us in some sense, and the philosophy of those packages, because one of the things that we have done in reaching our deliberations on this subject is to say to women generally, "We would like you to take responsibility for your own welfare," having in mind, of course, always the particular circumstances of each case. It's rather a proud moment for me to say that I think the women of the province of Ontario have accepted, generally speaking, that position, that they ought to take responsibility, always, of course, having the opportunity to do so and certainly having the opportunity for retraining and other matters where they have been out of the work force.

We now come to the point where there has to be some recognition of the realities of the situation. The reason I feel this is an important bill is, if I may review the activities of the government, particularly during International Women's Year, when we were all so involved in trying to find equality for women, we dealt with the Child Welfare Act and we wanted to ensure equality. What we did, of course, was to bring in an amendment to that legislation, an amendment which perhaps was not even necessary, but in order to make it completely unambiguous that both spouses had responsibility for support and maintenance of children.

We wanted to be sure that women played their equal role, and they should. We don't quarrel with it. But at the same time in that bill, showing the philosophy of government, we retained that section which said, of course, notwithstanding that a woman must take responsibility for support and maintenance, only the father's religion governs the religion of the child. So we stumbled through that kind of equality in International Women's Year.

Then, of course, we were dealing earlier with the matter of the employment standards legislation and there we also wanted to ensure that we gave equality to women. The philosophy of government was one which most of us embraced. "Ah, now at last equality of opportunity, equality in the work force." Of course, there was a little teensy-weensy kind of amendment which meant nothing, but what we did to make women more equal was to ensure that they could no longer have the protection of a cab home at night when they worked the graveyard shift. And this was at a time of increasing sexual violence in our cities, and at a time when, perhaps, it was unfair of women to ask for something special. Perhaps the time is coming when we must ensure this kind of protection for everyone since we don't seem to be able to curb violence in our society.

So, perhaps those in this House can understand why, having taken these forward-looking steps under the family law legislation, I felt that perhaps on this occasion we had better put a little bit of teeth into it for once.

All this bill really does, in essence, is to say: "All right government, you have conceded that women are equal. You have a human rights code." But, you know, somehow or other, women don't fare all that well in the human rights code. It seems very difficult to establish a prima facie case. So what we're saying is: "All right, you as the government have shown to women your deep desire to give them equality." Now there has been, unfairly perhaps on the women's side, a little scepticism about what you're getting at; but to clear up any such scepticism and quite apart from any of this positive action stuff that we've heard about but which doesn't seem to go anywhere, we now say: "Look, the government does a great deal of public business. And they do business with a great many companies, so the government ought to take responsibility to ensure that when they do business with corporations, they do business with corporations that do not discriminate."

I'm perfectly certain they're very careful about doing business with people who don't enter into any unfortunate labour practices; and I see no difference in this one to protect women, so that those who are going to take responsibility have a very real opportunity to do so. It gives the right to a person who feels that there is discrimination by reason of sex—and that is all that we're talking about in this bill—to apply to the judge of the supreme court; and the power is there in that learned gentleman—or, hopefully, more and more a lady—to enjoin the government and to ensure that no moneys are paid to any such body which is discriminating, as the judge would have to find; and the money would be withheld until such time as that discrimination ceased. That, really, is all that is involved in this very simple bill.

I know the government House leader recognizes its simplicity, and its clarity, and I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, if he would be speaking for the government itself, he would certainly support this positive action to ensure economic equality of the sexes.

Ms. Bryden: Ever since the private bills were to some extent raised in importance by the addition of this Thursday session on them, we seem to be getting private members' bills that are becoming more and more what one might call grandstanding bills. I really think this particular bill takes the prize for that because of the title. I think there's sheer bravado in suggesting that a 1 1/4 page bill with three clauses can, and I quote the title, be An Act to provide for the Economic Equality of the Sexes.

You cannot provide such a thing without a bill that would be pages and pages long, Mr. Speaker. We have just brought in a 35 or 40-page family law reform bill which did not provide for economic equality of the sexes but only took a very tentative step in that direction. We would need a bill which would cover the provision of equal pay for work of equal value. This bill does not even touch that area since it applies only to discrimination under the human rights code—

Mrs. Campbell: The unions didn't want it either.

Ms. Bryden: —whereas the equal pay provisions are under the Employment Standards Act. Mr. Speaker, you would need a bill which would abolish sex stereotyping, which would eliminate the sex bias in the schools, in the media and in textbooks. You would need a bill which would open up all occupations on an equal basis to the sexes, and which would open up educational opportunities, apprenticeships and so on.

The introducer of the bill said that this is a very simple bill. I say it is a very simplistic bill, because all it offers is one single avenue for enforcing the human rights code with regard to discrimination in employment on the basis of sex. What is that one simplistic answer? It is to say to people go to court.

Thousands of women sent in briefs stating that going to court was not the answer on family law reform because they know that going to court costs money. It causes great delays. It inhibits very many people who do not think they have the money and who may have trouble getting legal aid. Going to court bypasses all the conciliation procedures that are in the present human rights code, the investigative procedures that precede the hearings. In effect it is not an effective way of enforcing this kind of legislation.

The hon. member for St. George seems to have great faith in the courts. She doesn't seem to have observed that some judges in their own attitudes still discriminate against women and that we in the past have not received equality of economic equality through the courts.

Mrs. Campbell: Read Hansard.

Mr. Kerrio: Clear the courts.

Ms. Bryden: Therefore, I don't think we can consider this is a bill to achieve economic equality of the sexes.

Mrs. Campbell: So you are voting against it?

Ms. Bryden: It should perhaps be renamed. It could be renamed An Act to provide a Supplementary Means of Enforcing the Human Rights Code with regard to Employment. If it was renamed in that sense and if there were a number of changes brought in in committee, then perhaps we could support it because we are all in favour of finding new methods of making the human rights code and the Employment Standards Act work. In fact, it is rather a crying shame that under the Employment Standards Act only 38 cases were brought up last year complaining about lack of equal pay and only nine cases were won and payments were made by employers. We do need some action to enforce both the Employment Standards Act and the human rights code.

In the United States, under the Equal Opportunity Commission, they do provide that any company receiving government contracts must have an affirmative action program for preventing discrimination both against women and other minority groups. That seems to me much more effective than simply cutting off their funds. If the contractor does not implement the affirmative action program, then he is cut off future contracts. That is the method of enforcement, rather than going through the courts.

There are other things which would have to be added to this bill to make it satisfactory. In the first place, I think it needs a great deal of clarification. It says that "any person, corporation, or undertaking that receives public funds would be liable to be taken to court"; and if discrimination could be proved, their funds would be cut off. It doesn't specify whether we are talking about payments in the right of the government of Canada or the government of Ontario, or a municipal government; whether it would cover the TTC; whether it would cover anybody who receives a provincial tax credit. Anyone who receives $10 from the government in any form would perhaps be liable under this.

And it doesn't provide for any remedy, except the cutting off of the funds. The complainant receives no compensation, no redress; except that presumably the discrimination would have to be ended before the funds could be restored. But are you going to cut off the entire grants to the city of Toronto because one person is able to prove a case of discrimination against him? It seems to me that it is completely unworkable in its present state.

I think it would be much more sensible to follow the US practice and make it apply, at the beginning anyway, to government contracts over a certain amount—in the US $10,000 is the lower limit, and to make the procedures under the human rights code the first step, that is investigation and conciliation. I think it would be important to extend it to the Employment Standards Act; but first of all to amend the Employment Standards Act so that the equal pay clause reads as it does in the federal human rights Act: "Equal pay for work of equal value."

Mrs. Campbell: You would have to get the Steelworkers behind you on that one.

Ms. Bryden: I think it should include a provision for class actions, which are not allowed at present.

These are the sorts of amendments that I would hope to see put in at any committee stage on this bill before I could vote for it on third reading. I think we have before us a bill which does not do what the title proposes, but is simply a rather ineffective method of improving the enforcement of the human rights code, and leaves a great deal to be desired.

Mr. Jones: I listened with interest to the mover of the bill, the member for St. George and I respect her philosophy which she described as being her motivations for presenting the bill.

On comparing the provisions of the hon. member's bill with the Ontario Human Rights Code, it is, however, clear to me that the code now prohibits discrimination against women, among other groups, by all employers within Ontario's jurisdiction; and this of course includes the Crown. The code has very broad application and covers all employers, those who receive public funds and those who do not.

I had occasion personally to be involved in a case recently in my area of Peel where it involved a woman—the member may be familiar with it, it was a large auto manufacturer—and this woman did feel she had suffered an act of discrimination. It was dealt with by the human rights commission, and I must say they were very prompt. They responded to me the same day and made an immediate investigation with a positive result in favour of the woman.

I do have some problems with a couple of the sections. I notice that the member has retained some minutes of her time, maybe she will be answering them for me. I notice that this bill doesn't define public funds. I have no basis to determine whether or not sex discrimination is more widespread among employers who receive public funds, or with employers who do not receive such funds.

Also, the bill seems to propose differential enforcement for publicly-funded employers. Therefore, I question whether its provisions would not place these employers in an unfair or irresponsible sort of circumstances.

So it would seem that the bill is hinting at some form of contract compliance. If I'm correct in that, it should be well known by now that the Ontario Human Rights Commission has recommended a contract compliance provision in its report on human rights in Ontario. The Ministry of Labour is now studying this set of recommendations with a view to determining whether the human right code or the Employment Standards Act is the more appropriate statute with which to address the problem of discrimination by employers on contract with the government.

I noticed the member for Beaches-Woodbine's comment of the need for more of a package approach and I think she'll find it's contained in the so-called Life Together report.

Ms. Gigantes: It's right there on paper, right?

Mr. Jones: We all recognize that an important objective of the government is to encourage the responsible employer in business practices. At the same time, though, placing unnecessary barriers in the path of initiatives and enterprise in today's business and employment climate is of no small concern to me.

Mr. Laughren: That's really the heart of it, isn't it? That's really where you're at.

Mr. Jones: I work with some of the government's programs that take some involvement and some interface with the private sector—

Mr. Laughren: You know better.

Mr. Conway: Are you sure it's not an impact?

Mr. Jones: —and it's very clear in the comments that we are receiving from those private sector employers that they are, in the case I'm most familiar with, making employment opportunities for the young people—in our OYE program, for example—and, of course, they're anxious to see as few fetters as possible that might affect them. Our concern stems from the fact that we don't want to have any perceived barriers to these employers, be it for males or females. We all know the need and we're all concerned and anxious to get on and see some of those programs, like the one that worked very successfully last year—it's back this year—

Ms. Gigantes: We get the jobs if we get paid less, eh?

Mr. Jones: —it is rather important for them to be carried on.

Mr. Laughren: The employee is now a fetter, is he?

Mr. Jones: We're an employer too, as you know, and we are just coming on the threshold of our summer employment problems facing young people. Working with that, I have some sense of their feelings. I know we've been very careful in the Youth Secretariat—and we take that lead from the other portions of the government—to make certain there isn't discrimination in the sex side of the decision in jobs, the programming and the design of them. We've taken great care and I can tell you the Experience program runs something on the order of 60 per cent by design and about two-thirds actual participation by girls in all of the 13,000 jobs this year and some 78 different components. In our advertising of different programs we take great care to balance the female and the male presentations and, of course, we listen carefully to what the young people have to say about the sex in applications as they look at employment, in summer programs or in some of the others such as OCAP that the members are familiar with.

I'm concerned that this bill concerns only the ground, as was mentioned by the previous speaker, of the applicant's sex. Of course, it is obvious that the economic and the social and the personal consequences of employment discrimination are equally severe for all of its victims, including the young and the old and the handicapped and the racial and ethnic minorities, among the others. I fear then that unfortunate social consequences would ensue if any anti-discrimination legislation were to cover or favour only one of the several disadvantaged groups in our society.

Mr. Laughren: You're not real. I don't believe you.

Mr. Jones: Then just wait for a moment. We had a motion here, and I heard speakers from the member's party speaking about it, when we talked about a rather controversial issue called alcohol. We talked about just the age side of it. There were speakers from all parties, as I recall rather distinctly, saying over and over again that to single out but one of the proposals that one of our select committees said would help was not going to solve the whole of it, but rather that it was for the government to come back with an overall bill addressing itself as a package of remedies to those overall problems. And this has some parallels, I would suggest.

[4:00]

Ms. Gigantes: Then why aren't you doing that?

Mr. Laughren: It is not a good analogy.

Mr. Jones: It is unclear to me. In section 3 of this bill, concerning the channel of the grievances available to the person who alleges the discrimination, it appears to propose that the grievor can bypass these long-established agencies and file a grievance in that court action without the benefit of that investigation.

Obviously this provision would pre-empt some of the powers of the Ontario Human Rights Commission which, as I just recited using a personal example, I found functioned very quickly and very efficiently. I worry that the code could suffer a loss of its efficiency if that were the case. Also, if I understand correctly, the remedies available under the court action are seldom as quickly available. I will look to someone more learned in that area, such as the hon. member, but my understanding is that they are also costly, as was mentioned a moment ago; and is it possible that all of a sudden, because of financial considerations, we could be removing the possibility from some people who might have limited means and otherwise might have to look for the cost or be prevented from going to court and your speaker mentioned this very same point.

Ms. Gigantes: They could always go to the human rights code.

Mr. Jones: But, more important, we have striven in this province over the years to maintain a delicate balance between the effective administration of the code and the promotion of good and dynamic human relations in our drive for equality of opportunity for all our citizens. I feel the essence of this would be lost by resorting to punitive measures.

I know that in the cases I am familiar with the threat of punitive measures was not the measure of effectiveness that brought about the response that got the results that clearly were indicated as being needed in those cases.

The record shows that the effectiveness of the Ontario Human Rights Commission in resolving complaints of discrimination because of sex, as well as on other grounds, has been well established; and I looked up the breakdowns of the different ones. I won't pretend for a moment there isn't a lot of area to go; that is why I propose that the approach of the package under Life Together, report, which I am anxious to see come forward, will be the route we will be going. I would have to say that I won't be able to support the bill in that singular fashion.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill with the full realization of what happens to private members' bills after they have been introduced and debated in this House—ordinarily, they are shelved—but I recognize in this bill a very valid principle. There are weaknesses, as has been pointed out, and there are two that I am very concerned about myself in this bill. However, the principle is one of recognition, and effectual recognition, of the equality of the sexes in the marketplace.

We have the Ontario Human Rights Code, we have the Ontario Human Rights Commission, and we have just passed the Family Law Reform Act, which at least pays lip-service to the fact that there is equality between the sexes.

I do not enjoy the same optimism about the record of the Ontario Human Rights Commission as the previous speaker has enjoyed. It seems to me that, although that body exists, it has been ineffectual by and large, in the sense that it is not able to accomplish particularly what is sought after; but it has not been resorted to, in a sufficient number of circumstances.

This bill, as I see it, is a people-oriented bill. It is a bill in which, in this age of enlightenment, as we call our age, we finally recognize that teeth must be given to what we have passed in the Family Law Reform Act.

We all are aware that in the marketplace, by and large, women have been held down. There has been no recognition of equal opportunity of enjoyment of work as well as compensation in the marketplace as between men and women. Finally, the principle of this bill simply is this, a recognition in the marketplace that when a woman is employed she ought not to be depressed by virtue of her sex. Likewise, a man ought not to be depressed by virtue of his sex. It works both ways.

The real problem naturally, and we are all aware of it, is the fact that women are more vulnerable in this area than men have been in the past and still are. We recognize that. Much has been said about the fact that there is no definition of the public funds. Basically anyone—any individual, corporation or association that draws from the public trough—is subject to this bill. I, in my respectful submission, Mr. Speaker, find one weakness in this bill. I would like to have seen it enlarged to encompass all companies, not only those who feed at the public trough but any company in which there is discrimination.

Ms. Gigantes: How do you cut off public funds?

Mr. Stong: I believe that we could perhaps enlarge this bill, but the principle is here and recognition of that principle is in this bill and I have no hesitation in supporting it on that basis. I always suspect, as well, any argument that is based on mistrust of our courts and the administration of justice and the judicial system as it exists in Ontario.

Ms. Gigantes: Heaven forbid.

Ms. Bryden: They haven't given women equality.

Mr. Stong: I have the greatest of faith in our judicial system. It is the bastion of our freedom, of our liberty and the protection of our individual rights. If any members in the House had read the paper last week, Her Honour Janet Boland in our own county court has given teeth to and has recognized the principle that we have passed in this House and which has not even come into law, and she has already begun to enforce it.

Ms. Gigantes: It takes a woman to do it.

Mr. Warner: It took a woman to do it and it wasn't 50-50.

Mr. Stong: I agree it is time, but the fact of the matter is our judges are beginning to recognize exactly those principles and issues about which we have spoken.

Ms. Gigantes: Women have no difficulty with that.

Mr. Stong: The fact of the matter is that the issues and the principles that we have discussed and which have now been encompassed in our law are there to guide the judges.

There is one other weakness that I would like to address myself to in this bill and that is the onus that is created by this bill. It has been addressed by a previous speaker. That is, it places the onus on the worker to make the application before the court. I would prefer to see a mechanism whereby an individual could make a complaint and the onus be cast on the human rights commission to bring the matter before the courts.

I believe it ought to come before the courts, because that is where our greatest recognition of power is and authority in our state. I have faith in the court. The onus I have a problem with, but the principle of the bill is there. It is complementary, as the member for St. George has indicated, to the Family Law Reform Act which we have passed and in that sense it gives that bill teeth, much-needed teeth, and I have no hesitation in supporting the concept in this bill.

Mr. Laughren: We in this party are going to support the bill of the member for St. George, although I really have serious questions about why she has so limited its scope. If we are going to bring in a private member's bill, particularly when it comes to a vote, I question why it does not have more substance. As I understand the bill, it empowers a judge, if an application is made by an individual, to stop payment of public funds to an organization or an individual and then that payment can be reinstated if the judge is satisfied that discrimination no longer is going on.

What I don't understand is whether it really does apply to all public institutions and what that means in terms of municipalities, school boards and ministries of the government itself, for example. I don't know why she hasn't simply amended the human rights code. Perhaps when she responds at the end of the debate she will tell us that. Why don't we have a bill, preferably a government bill, which legislates equal pay for work of equal value? That's really the only thing that will solve the problem.

Given the considerable heat generated and the light shed over the issue of sexual discrimination against women, it's both depressing and debilitating to accept the fact that the economic lot of women simply has not changed in recent years. Despite impassioned pleas, dramatic demonstrations and numerous confrontations, virtually nothing has changed. As a matter of fact, I can detect a backlash out there in society against issues such as the women's movement.

Those who can or could do the most are doing the least. We have a Minister of Labour in the province of Ontario who could be doing a great deal to remove some of the discriminations that now exist out there. The Minister of Labour has jurisdiction over the human rights code, over the Employment Standards Act, and over the affirmative action programs in the government. The Minister of Labour could take all sorts of new initiatives that don't involve amending any kind of existing legislation either. The Minister of Labour does simply nothing. She must be a very bitter disappointment to the women of the province of Ontario.

We have certain established programs in the province of Ontario, but we have them in other provinces and other jurisdictions, as well, affirmative action, the human rights code, the women's bureau and the Employment Standards Act but, even so, nothing changes.

One need look no further than the Ontario public service. There's no better example of discrimination at work than the public service in the province of Ontario. The latest figures I have—there may be more up to date figures now—show that 38 per cent of the employees in the Ontario public service are female. Out of those, 40 per cent of them earn less than $9,000, whereas only five per cent of men employed in the public service earn less than $9,000.

At the other end of the income scale, we have less than six per cent of women earning in excess of $15,000 and 35 per cent of men earning in excess of $15,000.

Mr. Jones: How would that compare to five years ago?

Ms. Gigantes: It hasn't changed a bit.

Mr. Laughren: It simply has not changed.

Mr. Martel: You won't table the report.

Mr. Laughren: The same can be shown in the educational system as well and in the private sector too. It's not restricted strictly to the Ontario public service, that's not the point I'm trying to make. I'm just saying that there's no leadership at all being provided by this government in terms of removing discrimination in the work place.

I think this bill is well-intentioned. I have no question about that. Its weaknesses have already been outlined by other members. The one that bothers me the most is the onus on the individual to initiate action. I think that's an irreparable weakness in the bill. It simply won't happen. I was doing a little bit of research on it and they tell me that in New York City, for example, they have an affirmative action program there with a director. The onus is not on the individual, because you and I both know that that's simply not going to happen. As a lay person myself, the thought of getting a court order from an Ontario Supreme Court judge is so intimidating that I wouldn't do it, and I'm sure that 99.9 per cent of people out there simply won't get involved in that kind of process. And it's really too bad.

Also, there's no penalty in the bill for doing anything about people who break the law. We have penalties for people who speed, penalties for people who drink too much and penalties for people who smoke in the wrong places, but we have no penalties for people who discriminate against their fellow human beings. It's downright silly.

Mr. Jones: Except to withdraw their funds.

Mr. Laughren: Surely it's time that we faced the problem squarely. Put simply, discrimination against women exists in the work place. It exists not just in wages paid but by the lack of daycare facilities for women who are in the work place and by failure to promote women in the work place, in the public sector as well as the private sector. The education system with its stereotyped counselling discriminates against women as they head out into the work world.

We know the existing legislation the member from the government side talked about is misleading as well, because equal pay for equal work is meaningless when the government can classify jobs the way it's done now. That simply makes no sense at all. Until the government moves into the whole concept of equal pay for work of equal value, there is going to be discrimination. Look at the number of complaints and the success rate. It's pathetic. The government really has no program that works.

In conclusion, I understand the problem as being the kind of economic system we have. It's predatory in nature, put simply. We have an economic system that requires a pool of low-paid labour in order to provide the return required on capital. We have an economic system that refuses to accept collective responsibility for the children in this society. And we have an economic system that has chosen women to perpetuate its inequities. In the process, our economic system demeans all of us because until women have achieved economic equality with men, none of us will be free.

We reluctantly support this bill though it doesn't go far enough.

[4:15]

Mr. G. Taylor: I rise to speak on Bill 40 introduced by the member for St. George. As always, she has a bill here which has given concern to this side of the House and the government, and which has received great support from the opposite side of the House. The member for St. George is shortly going to be labelled a sexist if she continues bringing forth so many bills concerning sex-orientation or otherwise. But I'm sure they're all well-intentioned.

Mr. Sargent: Don't knock it, George, don't knock it.

Mr. G. Taylor: I'm waiting for one on sex and violence so that we can get a good one going here.

Mr. Conway: Have you not talked to Roy McMurtry lately?

Mrs. Campbell: I am going to bring in battered wives in the next round.

Mr. G. Taylor: But the member for St. George has had this cause going for some time. I admire her tenacity in spite of the setback she has had—and throughout her life, as well, in the severity of the soul-searing things that she has had done to her; we've all heard about it in discussion on the family law legislation.

The bill in itself has some complications that have been raised already. There are those who may say that it doesn't go far enough; there are others who on behalf of the sexists and in particular the female sex may denounce the record of this government. However, I would not support all of those contentions, and I think the Ontario government has a good record in this area.

I noticed in the Toronto Star on March 21, 1978, "Equal Pay Sleuths Retrieve $3 million For 6,790 Women."

Ms. Bryden: But how long it took! Several years.

Mr. Laughren: Is that ever impressive, George.

Mr. G. Taylor: That is very good, and we've had legislation since 1968 in this field; there was the Employment Standards Act and then there was the Ontario Human Rights Code which embellishes that Act. We have had some excellent legislation in this area and people have been working to enforce it and support it.

When we look at the bill itself, it states that the person aggrieved will go to a court to apply for a remedy. In some of those areas the courts are an excellent program, but when you go to the Supreme Court of Ontario—the court suggested in this bill under section 3—as we who practice law all know, it is a cumbersome, expensive, slow route to go. It may not give the remedy the person is seeking. It may require the expenditure of large sums of money to hire lawyers; and usually in this situation, it would probably mean an application in the Supreme Court in Toronto where you have help that is even higher-priced than it is with country solicitors. It may also mean that people out in the rest of the province of Ontario do not get the same remedies, and again you may be enforcing the litigious bar of Metropolitan Toronto to greater heights in not allowing the person a remedy in the northern or eastern parts of the province where we have the assize system, where judges come into parts of the territory only at certain times of the year. So you may be denying certain people in this province the remedy given to those who have a regular sitting of the Supreme Court of Ontario in Metropolitan Toronto.

There is also the problem of the sophistication of an individual going to see a lawyer. Somebody being aggrieved says right away: "Oh, my God, I've got to go see a lawyer but that costs money. I won't go for my grievance." They can go to the human rights commission. It's an administrative situation. It is provided for by funds of the province of Ontario. They have expertise in dealing with people who are aggrieved in this situation, be they male or female; so there is somewhere they can now go—a body which looks after this situation where discrimination might arise. Also, compare it to the court system; we already have a very, very busy court schedule, an overloaded and overburdened court system, and this will further overburden that system.

The difficulty, too, is what type of remedy are you providing in this section of section 3 compared to that which isn't there now? The human rights situation can now offer settlement. It can offer punitive situations; whereas, the punitive situation of this one is to hold up all public funds to a particular operation. That could cause enormous problems, if it is a hospital, a university, or involves welfare recipients. Any areas that are receiving public funds may have those funds stopped should they be enjoined, should there be some case of discrimination, should there be an interim injunction granted. Then the whole system may be held up, so you are penalizing more than just the individual, more than just that person involved in the discrimination. You are penalizing maybe an entire financial operation in a community because somebody has discriminated. Trying to unsort the problem, going back to a court to relieve that order, may take some difficulty and time and you may cause even greater harm than is presently caused by the discrimination.

Mr. Warner: So you are going to guillotine this one too, are you?

Mr. G. Taylor: Without going too far, and I am sure other members have said this, there is the redundancy possibility of the present legislation. The principle is good but have we not got the same relief presently under the human rights legislation in this province? Is this not already looked after? As one member has said about the Minister of Labour, I think she has done an excellent job in the area of providing leadership in legislation for all sexes—not just the sex that the member for St. George has alluded to, being the female sex. This just says “sex” but it is for both sexes. I think our Minister of Labour has provided that leadership.

Ms. Gigantes: What have you done?

Mr. G. Taylor: When we look at section 3, someone aggrieved by discrimination going to a judge of a supreme court, I go back to the member for St. George's plea in this House when she would have us going back, as the remedy, to the Supreme Court of Ontario. Even as late as March 16, she says—and this is from Hansard: “but it was the attitude of this judge in adjourning the matter, which is a part of the general approach of the courts to this situation.”

And then on a little further: “They made their presentation and they didn't blush or feel any sense of shame that women had been driven to take this kind of position through fear because of their long-standing experience in the courts.”

And then in another place on March 9 in the same debate on the family law legislation: “As I say, the one place on which I am in absolute agreement with those who have spoken on behalf of the third party is a very real suspicion of women about the way in which the administration of justice functions. They have a right to that suspicion.”

And then later on on March 16 in the same discussion of the bill: “I don't know what the discussion was in the committee. In my view, as long as people have no confidence in the law—and it isn't just the judges—this is the problem. Women have no confidence in the legal profession basically in these cases before the court.”

And then continuing: “Simply because the members of the bar don't take that particular situation seriously, and some of them grow up to be judges. That's the problem.”

So here again, after making those statements in this House, the member for St. George puts those people back into the same situation by sending them before supreme court judges. So I would think that that section at least needs some amendment from the member for St. George. I am sure she might—if this goes to committee—put before us an amendment, maybe in other form, that would give both females and males the remedy by a much quicker and cheaper method than putting them into the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Mr. Conway: I too rise in support of the principle of my colleague from St. George's private member's bill. I do so for those reasons which she and my colleague from York Centre pointed out in their earlier remarks. Notwithstanding that which has been said by those who find it difficult to support the bill in principle, there must be a clear and immediate recognition that effective equality of the sexes in the marketplace is certainly a first order of priority. This is particularly so when we consider the new obligations and the new climate created as a result of Bill 59 passed in this Legislature but a few days ago.

I want to not only support the principle of the bill but I want to support the mover of this bill, my colleague from St. George. She has proven yet again her sincere and ongoing interest for the civil liberties of people in this province in the face of ongoing and serious discrimination which, while we all recognize it we lament nonetheless.

My colleague from St. George has proved herself to be a truly heroic crusader in this respect and has at times, perhaps much more willingly than some of the rest of us, carried that crusade through in areas and in ways which, in the short-term at any rate, have probably not been in her political self-interest.

Mr. Martel: Some of your colleagues have been the hardest on her.

Mr. Conway: For that dedication, for that commitment and for that unique personal contribution to the politics and to the life of Ontario I stand in support this afternoon. I am going to digress just for a moment to say—

Mr. Martel: You wouldn't.

Mr. Conway: —I don't like to—that I sat here throughout much of the debate on Bill 59 as an onlooker, not having the immediate interest that some others had.

Mr. Warner: You are digressing.

Mr. Conway: I must say as a male, when I listened to the contributions of certain members, when I read later on—

Mr. Warner: Name names.

Mr. Laughren: Name one.

Mr. Conway: —the articles of certain prominent individuals contributing to the Toronto Sun, I can't imagine a more important bill for my self-interest than this particular bill. Because as a male, I have to think that appearing before Laura Sabia, if she happened to be chairman of a board that was in the hiring procedure, my interest could just be discriminated against.

Ms. Gigantes: We would make her a judge.

Mr. Conway: And if the vice-chairman of that corporation were the member for Carleton East, I would shudder all the more and demand the protection put forward in Bill 40.

Ms. Gigantes: So you might.

Mr. Conway: I want to say I think that there are certain of the male sex who might very well find this bill in their self-interest.

I listened to the members for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) and Mississauga North (Mr. Jones) or South or East or whatever. They said that among their objections to this bill was the fact that it wasn't broad enough and that it singled out government. Certainly that is a point well made and well taken. It is clear, as the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) pointed out in his remarks, that the record of government in this province, while it has been improving, is still a long way from what we would consider acceptable.

I heard other members, notably the member for Simcoe Centre, say that it would very possibly be a redundancy. After all, we have the Ontario Human Rights Code and we have the Ontario Human Rights Commission. Happily, with the arrival now of the Minister of Community and Social Services, I have to enjoin the member for Simcoe Centre and ask him what have we got in the human rights commission? Just what has this government turned the Ontario Human Rights Commission into, given certain recent appointments?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The finest in the land.

Mr. Conway: I can understand why the Minister of Community and Social Services sighs easily these days. But those difficulties, now transferred to the Ontario Human Rights Commission, I think, will render this kind of legislation all the more important.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Are you knocking equal opportunity for women?

Mr. Conway: Where is the promised debate in this Legislature or a committee thereof on the report of the human rights commission and on the code itself? The government of which the hon. member for Simcoe Centre is perhaps an unhappy part has been very careful to keep and to restrict the very important discussion of that bill from this chamber. I think he had better talk to some of his superiors in cabinet if he really believes what he said earlier about the requirements of the debate in that particular case.

Mr. Warner: They are a dismal lot over there.

Mr. Conway: I too share the concern of certain members that this bill, while nearly perfect, is not exactly so. I am concerned about the fact that it does involve a requirement for the individual to go to a lawyer. God forbid that for any man or any woman in this society in this day and age.

[4:30]

Mr. Martel: We should outlaw lawyers.

Mr. Conway: Certainly I find it an intimidating proposition that one would have to go to the supreme court at any level. Unlike certain members of my own caucus, I do share a concern of other members that the courts and the history of the judicial process in this country have not been fair and equitable in the treatment of the sexes. I do understand something of the discriminatory history there, but I must say that I am equally of the feeling that this bill, however imperfect, is a necessary, worthwhile and timely step in the right direction. For that reason, together with the reasons of the ongoing Liberal crusade of my colleague from St. George in these areas of civil rights, I am happy to stand here today and support this particular bill.

Mr. Martel: Was that John Sweeney speaking, Margaret?

Ms. Gigantes: In view of the very short time that is left for debate on this bill, I'll try to make my remarks pointed. I was reminded last night, as I sat down and looked over this bill and looked over some of the research available to us, about wage discrimination and employment discrimination against the women of this province. I fell into a mood, I suppose, that comes in some ways from the length and the kind of debate that we had over the family law bill. There comes a point when you've discussed this subject long enough—the subject of the rights and need that the women of this province have for equal opportunity and equal access to financial independence—there comes a point when you start to get a little hysterical, and as my thoughts drifted I went back in my mind to those lovely sections from "Alice in Wonderland," and I brought the book with me today thinking that perhaps part of what was being said here today on this bill would remind me of particular sections and, indeed, that turns out to be the case.

If I were to summarize the bill and some of the things that have been said about it by the members of the Liberal caucus I would turn to that section of Alice which is headed "A Caucus Race and a Long Talk." In this section the mouse and Alice are talking and the mouse tells a tale.

Mr. Bradley: Alice in Wonderland—the NDP platform.

Ms. Gigantes: The tale goes this way:

"Fury said to a mouse that he met in the house, 'Let us both go to law: I will prosecute you. Come, I'll take no denial; We must have the trial: For really this morning I've nothing to do.'

"Said the mouse to the cur, 'Such a trial, dear sir, with no jury or judge, would be wasting our breath.'

"'I'll be judge, I'll be jury,' said cunning old Fury: 'I'll try the whole cause and condemn you to death.'"

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's very much to the point.

Ms. Gigantes: It seems to me that in some ways the bill, in spite of the fact that it promises to provide for the economic equality of the sexes, is so limited in its scope of action to do that, nevertheless uses a blunderbuss to try to accomplish it.

This bill, it seems to me, were it to come into effect as it is—hopefully we will be able to amend it—would delight nobody but the Treasurer of this province, because he'd be let off the hook so often, were it at all useful, from paying public moneys to the employers of this province—

Mr. Laughren: He could balance the budget.

Ms. Gigantes:—that he could balance his budget. Indeed, he might. I think that we might see a lot of action for the Treasurer if this bill were passed as we formally now have it, but I don't think we'd see much action for the women who are looking for economic equality in this province.

If I turn just to my feelings about the quality of the debate as we've heard it from the Conservative side of this House, I find it almost incredible to realize that there are people in that Conservative caucus who actually believe that things written on paper solve the problem. The member for Mississauga North says to us of the Human Rights Commission report, "Here it is, all on paper. That should satisfy you." It doesn't satisfy us.

Mr. Jones: I also said the minister was bringing it forward.

Ms. Gigantes: When I speak of women in this province we are speaking of a group that earns wages two-thirds that of men, and very often for doing jobs of a totally comparable nature. We know that the kind of attitude that has come both from the Minister of Labour and from such groups as the Chamber of Commerce in this province is that we really can't afford equality.

I put it to my friend that if we can't afford equality, we have got more serious problems than we normally admit. And I think it is very telling that he seems to think the problem is a very small one which can be solved by individual cases being brought, through individual members of the Tory caucus, to the human rights commission.

Mr. Jones: Pretty important to the individual who is involved, I tell you.

Ms. Gigantes: It is going to take a month of Sundays and a month of centuries to solve the problem that way.

I am reminded of another section in "Through The Looking-Glass." It is the section where Alice is in tow by the Red Queen. They are racing—Alice doesn't know quite where. The Queen is urging her on, dragging her forward; finally, she allows her a breather.

"The Queen propped her against a tree, and said kindly, 'You may rest a little now.'

"Alice looked round in great surprise. 'Why, I do believe we've been under this tree the whole time! Everything's just as it was!'

"'Of course it is,' said the Queen: 'what would you have it?'

"'Well, in our country,' said Alice, still panting a little, 'you'd generally get to somewhere else—if you ran very fast for a long time, as we've been doing.'

"A slow sort of country!" said the Queen. "Now, here, you see, it takes all the running you can do, to keep in the same place."

I suggest that what we are hearing from the government side of the House on this bill is all the talking they can do to keep in the same place.

We will support this bill. The bill is subject to amendment; I think, positively amended, it can be useful in taking us another small step forward in the long journey towards the equality of women in the province of Ontario.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I am most grateful and appreciative to those who have spoken on this bill; and, of course, I would be delighted to have it go to committee, where it could be carefully considered.

I recognize some of the problems that have been raised, but one of the things that disturbs me, and it is particularly true of both of the speakers from the government side, is their reference to the human rights report, the code and so forth.

We are dealing in this bill with the government of Ontario. It is specified that we are speaking of the Treasurer of Ontario. I have to look at the realities of human rights today. First of all, the report to which reference has been made has never been brought to a committee of this House for study as requested.

Secondly, I wonder if we recognize the perception of people on the recent appointment to the Human Rights Commission of someone who was so long a member of the civil service of this province that her pronouncements now are basically the pronouncements that have been made by the government of this province with reference to civil rights.

Mr. Jones: I don't think that is fair. That is not fair.

Mrs. Campbell: This is what is of concern to me and why I did not feel I could proceed to bring this forward under the Human Rights Code.

The other flaw in the code is that since this would be a power to enjoin the province of Ontario, the Treasurer, you have to realize that under the code can you see with this kind of a setup in the Ontario Human Rights Code, the fact that even under the recommendations in the report it is still open to a minister at this point to recommend whether or not there shall be a hearing. Can you see what would happen with this kind of a setup with the government involved under the Human Rights Code? If we can move, obviously the Human Rights Code would be the proper place to do it; but I have this kind of concern.

I don't think it is an Alice-in-Wonderland kind of concern; and I am sorry that women particularly seem to want to ridicule other women in what they are attempting to do.

Ms. Gigantes: Not by choice.

Mrs. Campbell: It would be more appropriate if they stood together—

Mr. Makarchuk: Men do it to each other all the time; don't get annoyed about it.

Mrs. Campbell: —for what we want in this place.

Mr. Stong: Divide and conquer.

Interjections.

Mrs. Campbell: I do not ridicule others; I certainly have not in the one case I am speaking about—a person who was a civil servant for years who has made pronouncements which are directly in line with what has been said by spokesmen of government. I don't know how we can hope to have any real kind of confidence in that kind of an appointment. It is not because that person is a woman. I want to make that clear.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Perceptions differ.

Mrs. Campbell: I agree that the matter of equal pay for work of equal value should be incorporated. I have fought for that.

I was present at the committee when both the Minister of Labour of the day, no longer the minister and no longer a member, was fighting against that kind of an amendment. I was there when I was trying to fight for it. And I have to go back and say it's too bad that we don't have transcripts, because it was spokesmen for the big unions who really went after the women who were there for daring to ask for equal pay for work of equal value.

I hope we can get that through but in the meantime, at least the government can be enjoined. If there is another method by which this can be effected, I will be most happy to see this amended in committee and I will seek the support of all of the members of this House to accomplish that purpose.

HEALTH INSURANCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Warner moved second reading of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Health Insurance Act, 1972.

Mr. Warner: "No taxation without legislation" is a basic democratic principle, dating back to the Magna Carta of 1215.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I thought it was taxation without representation.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Are we back in the Magna Carta again?

Mr. Warner: The principle of taxing only by way of legislation has been sustained throughout British and Canadian history until now.

The Magna Carta of 1215 enunciates the principle that the payers shall be called to the common council to vote the aids which had been previously negotiated separately. The famous charter states quite clearly "No scutage or aid shall be imposed in our kingdom except by common counsel."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Are we back in school?

Mr. Warner: The confirmation of the charters in 1297 from the hand of King Edward, "that on no account will we henceforth take from our kingdom such aids, taxes and prises, except by the common assent of the whole kingdom."

In 1628: The Petition of Rights. A message was delivered to Charles I on the issue of forced loans to the king without legislation. "They (the King's subjects) should not be compelled to contribute to any tax, tallage, aid or other like charge, not set by common consent in Parliament."

Hon. Mr. Norton: Sounds as if the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) wrote this.

Mr. Warner: In 1641: The Act abolishing Ship Money. The collection of ship money was declared illegal. Other Acts of Parliament abolished all other non-parliamentary procedures that Charles I had used to raise taxes. "the said charge . . . commonly called ship money . . . (is) contrary to and against the laws and statutes of this realm, the right of property, the liberty of the subjects, former resolutions in Parliament and the Petition of Rights."

Instructions to Governor Murray of the province of Quebec in 1763: The instructions from King James of England set out the raising of money by Acts of assembly. "That in all laws or ordinances for levying money or imposing fines, forfeitures or penalties, express mention be made . . . for the public uses of the said province . . . as by the said law shall be directed; and that a clause be inserted, declaring, that the money . . . shall be accounted for unto us into this kingdom."

The Colonial Tax Repeal Act of 1778 set out that no tax could be imposed by England on its colonies in North America but instead left the responsibility with the colonial assemblies. It said: "The same duty, tax or assessment shall be respectively levied, in such manner as other duties collected by the authority of the respective general courts or general assemblies of such colonies provinces or plantations."

In 1791, in the Constitutional Act the power of taxation and the responsibility of our two provinces, then called Upper and Lower Canada, to set taxation by way of legislation was set out in the document. "The net produce of all duties which shall be so imposed shall at all times hereafter be applied to and for the use of each of the said provinces respectively, and in such manner only as shall be directed by any law or laws that shall be made . . . by and with the advice and consent of the legislative council and assembly of such province."

The Resolutions of the Assembly of Lower Canada, 1826, state: "That the statute of the 18th George III, chapter 12, has not conferred any new rights upon the inhabitants of the British colonies, but it is a declaratory Act, the enactments whereof recognize and consecrate the constitutional maxim, that the colonies having a representation have an inalienable right not to be taxed without the consent of their representatives . . ."

The Union Act of 1840 was designed to reunite the province of Upper and Lower Canada and for the government of Canada. Part of the Act dealt with colonial taxation and supported the principles of the above resolutions of 1826. In our British North America Act of 1867, section 54 applies to Canada and states: "It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or any tax or impost to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by message of the Governor-General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed." Section 90 applies the above responsibility to each provincial Legislature.

The principle of taxation without legislation is written about at great length. Sir Ivor Jennings in his book, "The Law and the Constitution," states that from the time of James I and Charles I it became established that "The king has no power to levy taxation upon his English subjects, except in Parliament." Mr. A. V. Dicey in "The Law of the Constitution" says: "All taxes are imposed by statute, and no one can be forced to pay a single shilling by way of taxation which cannot be shown to the satisfaction of the judges to be due from him under Act of Parliament."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Are you writing a new history book? Warner's History of England.

Mr. Warner: A. H. Birch in his essay on the British constitution titled, "Representative and Responsible Government," clearly informs us "The House of Commons owes its origins to the king's need to secure the consent of the Commons to financial exactions."

From Erskine May's Treatise on "The Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament" we gain a statement on the financial relations between the Crown and Parliament. "The Crown . . . makes known to the Commons the pecuniary necessities of the government; the Commons, in return, grant such aids or supplies as are required to satisfy these demands; and they provide by taxes . . . the ways and means to meet the supplies which they have granted. Thus the Crown demands money, the Commons grant it and the Lords assent to the grant."

Taxation only by way of legislation is a principle which is easily traceable from 1215 in Great Britain to 1978 in Ontario. The BNA Act embodied the basic constitutional principles of the United Kingdom. Sir Lyman Duff, Chief Justice of Canada, in his judgement of the Alberta legislation, 1938, outlined quite clearly the relationship between the constitution of the United Kingdom and the British North America Act.

To quote here from that court judgement: "The preamble of the statute, moreover, shows plainly enough that the constitution of the Dominion is to be similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom. The statute contemplates a Parliament working under the influence of public opinion and public discussion. There can be no controversy that such institutions derive their efficacy from the free public discussion of affairs, from criticism and answer and counter-criticism, from attack upon policy and administration and defence and counter-attack; from the freest and fullest analysis and examination from every point of view of political proposals. This is signally true in respect of the discharge by ministers of the Crown of their responsibility to Parliament, by members of Parliament of their duty to the electors, and by the electors themselves of their responsibilities in the election of their representatives."

The last statement is in keeping with an earlier one by Sir J. G. Bourinot, and I quote: "Some changes have necessarily been made in the course of time by the Canadian assemblies in their methods of procedure, but on the whole, the main principles of English parliamentary law have been retained in all their integrity." That was contained in his book "Constitutional History of Canada."

Since it is clear that English constitutional law and Canadian constitutional law demand taxation by way of legislation, then we must now examine the OHIP premium to determine if it is a tax and therefore subject to increase or decrease only by way of legislation.

It certainly appears that the Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. McKeough) treats the premium as a tax. In the Ontario budget 1978, the Treasurer states, "I have decided that it is necessary to raise additional revenues." He goes on to propose "a balanced and equitable package of tax actions to raise an additional $374 million." The first such tax action listed is OHIP premiums, and again the language used suggests a taxing procedure for the purpose of balancing the budget. The Treasurer says, "I am proposing to increase OHIP premiums to restore the balance of financing."

The Treasurer's statement of intent is followed up by a chart on page 18 titled, "Revenue Impact of Tax Changes." There are two headings—one, "Tax Increases," and the other, "Tax Cuts." Under "Tax Increases" the first item is OHIP premiums, $271 million.

In the Treasurer's conclusions on page 19, he clearly sets out that he has presented a tax package and that the package is for the purpose of balancing the budget. The Treasurer says, "The balanced package of tax proposals I have put before you, along with our restrained spending plan, will keep Ontario's finances in sound shape. The revenue shortfall we experienced in 1977-78 represents only a temporary setback to our goal of a balanced budget."

While the language of the budget suggests that the OHIP premium increase is a form of taxation, the government may claim that the OHIP premiums are simply a premium for service and have been duly set out in the appropriate sections of the Health Insurance Act, 1972. I contend that such an argument is not relevant. The reference to a premium as opposed to a tax is a moot point.

The OHIP premium is a charge upon the people and payable ultimately into general revenues. It is what Erskine May, in his "Parliamentary Practice," describes as a charge upon the people, "taken to connote any import in the nature of a tax or customs duty the proceeds of which are payable into the exchequer."

The government may argue that the premiums are intended to cover the expenses of a government department in performing services for the public and therefore should not be considered to be a tax. Again, turning to Erskine May, we find the above is the case, except that "this rule is not allowed to legitimize charges so disproportionate to the cost of the services rendered as to amount to taxation."

May reports to us that the Speaker has ruled that, in the case of a licence granted by a government department, the payment charged for the issue of the licence, if it is a small fee of an administrative character, should not be considered a charge upon the subject necessitating a ways and means resolution, but that if the fee charged did more than this, a ways and means resolution would be necessary. If the fees are payable into the exchequer, a ways and means resolution is rendered necessary.

For cases of fees imposed without a money resolution, members should take note of the electric lighting bill, 1882; the registration of business names bill, 1916; the non-ferrous metal industry bill, 1917; the dyestuffs (import regulation) bill, 1920; the fees (increase) bill, 1923; the agriculture (miscellaneous provisions) bill, 1962-63.

In view of this ruling, a ways and means resolution has been regarded as necessary in any case where the charge for a fee or licence has been unduly high or without a defined limit.

A parallel which is important to examine is the workmen's compensation board. Are employer contributions to a provincial workmen's compensation fund taxes that must meet the test of direct taxation, or are they in the nature of premiums statutorily exacted? The Privy Council indicated in the workmen's compensation board versus the CPR in 1920 that such contributions were taxes.

In the case of Shannon versus the Lower Mainland Dairy Products Board (1938), the Privy Council had to consider whether section 124 of the Forest Act, providing for the creation of a forest protection fund through an annual levy on owners of timber lands and through annual provincial grants, imposed a tax or merely a service charge for fire protection services. Although imposed on a defined and limited class of persons and applicable to a special purpose without ever falling into the general mass of proceeds of taxation, the levy was held to be a tax.

In 1931 in the case of Lawson versus the Interior Tree Fruit and Vegetable Committee, J. Duff set our four criteria by which to judge whether a levy is a tax, and states that a levy is a tax if it is: 1. enforceable by law; 2. imposed under the authority of the Legislature; 3. imposed by a public body; 4. made for a public purpose.

Laskin, in his book "Canadian Constitutional Law," draws a conclusion from the cases I have cited and other cases that "a tax under the BNA Act is not confined to an exaction for the support of the government."

To state the matter another way, section 92(2) of the BNA Act, which allows "direct taxation within the province in order to raising of a revenue for provincial purposes," can be interpreted to include items that are sometimes referred to as levies, premiums and licence fees, as well as a tax.

Furthermore, I submit that sections 12 and 51 of the original Health Insurance Act of 1972 were unconstitutional in granting a tax power to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. But even if the legislation of 1972 is ignored or given some benefit of doubt and allowed to stand, it remains that the actions of one Parliament cannot bind the actions of succeeding Parliaments.

Should the government of Ontario wish to increase OHIP premiums as a source of revenue for the operation of government programs, it should do so by way of legislation. To do otherwise is unconstitutional in my view. I ask that all members of this assembly join me in correcting the situation. The passage of my private member's bill today and the subsequent committee work will enable the government to follow our accepted constitutional principle of no taxation without legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. member: Quit while you are ahead.

Mr. Cassidy: Let's hear you answer those constitutional authorities.

Mr. Turner: I wouldn't pretend to do that.

Mr. Speaker: I have a very strong feeling after listening to the remarks of the former speaker that this bill is being put forward not so much to change the method used to arrive at the amount of the premium as it is to imply that the premium charge itself is excessive. If this be so, I would suggest that this is unfortunate, indeed unfair. I would like to point out that not only do the people of this province have one of the most comprehensive health insurance plans in the world—

Mr. Laughren: The most expensive.

Mr. Turner: —but they receive a good number of benefits under that plan that are simply not available in other jurisdictions at any cost.

Mr. Campbell: Look at Holland.

[5:00]

Mr. Turner: Just recently I was listening to the radio and I heard an advertisement for a company wishing to offer health coverage for people visiting this province from other jurisdictions. While the advertisement pointed out that people from Ontario are covered when they are in some other countries, it took great pains to say that this sort of coverage is not available in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Laughren: Don't set up a straw man.

Mr. Turner: It is also true that the cost of health care in some places outside of our provincial boundaries has been sufficient to bring significant numbers of people to personal bankruptcy, and I am sure the members opposite are well aware of these. I do not believe it was ever the intention of our health insurance plan to deceive the public into thinking that health care is free—

Mr. Laughren: No, the Treasurer is deceiving the public.

Mr. Turner: —or that, indeed, it is not expensive. Health care is expensive and it is growing more so every day. The objective of this government has been to try to slow down the rate of growth of that expense, but it has never been the government's intention to try to hide from the public the fact that such expense exists. As has been pointed out on a number of occasions, if the insurance costs were to be paid by the people directly, the costs, in terms of actual outlay on the individual's part, obviously would be considerably higher. The Ontario Health Insurance Plan is designed to give comprehensive basic coverage in Ontario at low cost. Because the Ontario Health Insurance Plan works smoothly and efficiently, many residents have forgotten what a doctor's bill or a hospital bill even looks like, and perhaps this is part of the problem.

The Ontario Health Insurance Plan pays for medical and hospital care anywhere in the world. It provides a wide scope of benefits for medical and hospital services, as well as the services of certain other health practitioners. Residents of Ontario regardless of their age—

Mr. Cassidy: You're out of order. You're not speaking to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Turner: —the state of their health, or their financial means are entitled to participate. The numbers of people who receive these benefits without the necessity of paying premiums are large. The plan pays up to 90 per cent of the fees listed as benefits in the current Ontario Medical Association schedule of fees for all physician services that are medically required.

These services include the physician's services in the home—

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I am sorry to interrupt the speaker, but is this in accordance with the principles of this bill which is before us? It seems to be an apology for the health plan in the province, rather than a discussion of the effects of the premium versus the tax position, and the ability to debate it in the House.

Mr. Makarchuk: Whoever wrote his speech didn't read the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The bill under discussion is an Act to amend the Health Insurance Act, 1972. I have listened very carefully to the hon. member and I find that he is speaking, generally, to the Health Insurance Act. Unless I hear some cogent reason why he shouldn't be allowed to pursue in the same vein I will allow him to do so.

Mr. MacDonald: On this point of order, if there is an amendment to a bill, the point before the House is the amendment, not the broad bill. Many times in this House people have been forced to speak to the substance of the amendment and not the whole scope of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: I would hope that the hon. member would spend some time talking about the amendment. I see nothing wrong with what he has said so far—

Mr. McClellan: There's nothing good about it, either.

Mr. Speaker: —but I would hope he would spend some time speaking specifically about the amendment.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I thought I clarified my statement, and I will recall it again if I may. I had a very strong feeling—and I'll say it again—that the former speaker is putting this bill forward not so much to amend or to change the method of arriving at the amount of the premium, as to imply that the premium charge itself is excessive.

Mr. MacDonald: That's imputing a motive.

Mr. Cassidy: That's imputing a motive and that's unparliamentary.

Mr. Turner: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. Lawlor: Is it or isn't it a tax?

Mr. Turner: That is the very point, that is the very point.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I think you know I respect both you and your office but I do want to draw to your attention, sir, that you have been quite fierce on occasion with members of the opposition—

An hon. member: He had to be.

Mr. Lewis: —indeed, have ejected one or two exemplary members of the opposition—when they failed to speak to the principle of a bill. The principle of this bill could not be clearer. It's the question of whether the premium is a tax and whether therefore it is legally within the prerogative of this assembly to do it as the Treasurer has done it. The member, with the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, is not in any way addressing himself to the principle of the bill and yet he's getting away with it.

An hon. member: He's not even close to it.

Mr. Lane: He is a very able member.

Mr. Turner: If I may take the time to reply, we are—

Mr. Speaker: Are you speaking to the point of order?

Mr. Turner: Yes. Sorry, I didn't identify that. I am, in fact, addressing my remarks to the principle of the bill.

Mr. McClellan: No, you are not.

Mr. Cassidy: No, you're not.

Mr. Breough: You're talking to the point of order, now.

Mr. Turner: Oh, yes. Oh, yes.

Mr. Conway: Carry on, John.

Mr. Turner: The whole principle is whether—

Mr. MacDonald: You're skating around it.

Mr. Turner: —is whether the principle of this bill is addressed to a premium or a taxation.

Mr. McClellan: You don't know what the principle of the bill is.

Mr. Cassidy: Should it go through the House or not? Yes or no?

Mr. Turner: We feel very strongly and I feel very strongly that this is a premium. It is not a tax.

Mr. Lewis: Then say so.

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you say so?

Mr. Turner: I will, if the members opposite will give me a chance.

Mr. Makarchuk: Continue.

Mr. Turner: I'm reviewing, if I may, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDonald: The Treasurer said it was a tax in his budget.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you trying to say he's wrong?

Mr. Cassidy: Are you calling him a liar?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner: I would never presume to suggest that anybody is wrong.

Mr. Makarchuk: You'll get under his skin if you do it.

Mr. Turner: I am suggesting that these are my own opinions, my own remarks with relation to the member's bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't be dogmatic or sanctimonious.

Mr. Turner: May I proceed, Mr. Speaker? Thank you very kindly.

Mr. Breough: You can try.

Mr. Turner: If I may just point out to the members that the services referred to earlier include services of the physician in the home, in his office or in the hospital—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order.

Mr. Turner: I'm just—

Mr. Speaker: Wait, now. I've got to remind the hon. member that the explanatory note says, "The bill repeals provisions of the Health Insurance Act, 1972, that authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to establish the cost of premiums by regulation." Now that is, in fact, the principle of this bill. I have given the hon. member sufficient latitude and I hope that he will use whatever time he has left to speak directly to that principle.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I didn't mean to cause such a fuss. However, I do appreciate the concern of the members opposite and I do—

Mr. MacDonald: Better get a different ghost writer.

Mr. Turner: Perhaps, perhaps.

Mr. Cassidy: Just get a ghost writer.

Mr. Turner: Maybe that is the problem. However, if I may just sum up and without offending the sensibilities of any of the members in the chamber—

Mr. Lawlor: It doesn't matter, does it, John? You've got 20 of the caucus lined up in the hallway outside at the moment, haven't you?

Mr. Turner: —I would like to point out—

Mr. Breough: Your time has expired.

Mr. Turner: Not quite.

Mr. McClellan: It should be.

Mr. Turner: —that we feel very strongly that this is within the jurisdiction of government to collect a premium for a service that is being offered and it is not in any way to suggest that this is a tax on the people of Ontario.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I always find it particularly interesting in this chamber, as one who is not always cognizant of the rules as stated where they are stated, to be lectured to by the hon. member for Scarborough West—a fine and great politician—

Mr. Lewis: The member for St. George raised the point of order, you nitwit.

Mr. Conway: —but no one I have ever seen is a more manipulative man of the rules than that gentleman. And there is no one—

Mr. Martel: The point of order was raised by the member for St. George.

Mr. Conway: There is no one in this House who by historical predilection could understand—

Mr. Speaker: That's not the principle of this bill, either.

Mr. Makarchuk: Good point!

Mr. Conway: Nobody can pick out an abuse of the rules faster than that gentleman.

Mr. Lewis: It's an attack on the member for St. George who raised the point of order.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Lewis: Is there no end to your sexism?

Mr. Speaker: We're dealing with Bill 32.

Mr. Conway: I rise in happy, total and personal support of this bill.

Mr. Lewis: Now sit down.

Mr. Conway: Beyond that, given the very nominalistic quality of this bill, I suppose there is not much one can say.

Mr. MacDonald: It is on one point. Deal with it.

Mr. Conway: The points that were made by the mover of this bill, I think are very well taken. It has been a regrettable part of the research that I have been involved in the past two or three weeks since the March 7 budget to find out that this increase seems to be clearly indicative of this government's increasing reliance upon the OHIP premium as a tax. There is no question to answer to.

Mr. Cassidy: I think you are out of order already.

Mr. Conway: I really am feeling very constrained—

Mr. Lewis: Because you have to speak to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Conway: —because I have to speak to a bill, the principle of which is very specific and quite supportable.

Mr. McClellan: Don't be inhibited, Sean.

Mr. Conway: What I wanted to say in support—

Mr. McClellan: Go ahead and say it.

Mr. Conway: What I wanted to say in support of this particular bill is that, as a tax, this OHIP premium, as has been pointed out by many, is increasingly regressive. The manner in which it was brought forward by the Treasurer is not only gutless and deceitful, as was stated by others inside and outside of this House, but clearly indicative—

Mr. McClellan: Sleazy.

Mr. Conway: Sleazy may be too strong a term.

Mr. MacDonald: Gutless but not sleazy.

Mr. Conway: Certainly it is of concern to those of us who accepted the Treasurer's logic in his budget paper of 1976, at which time we had the 45 per cent increase in premiums, based on what we were then told by the hon. Treasurer: "Premiums will now generate"—in 1976— "28 per cent of the total financing of OHIP."

Mr. Bradley: You are disturbing the Tory caucus, Sean.

Mr. Conway: "This is a more appropriate level than the 23 per cent raised and is a suitable long-term norm to maintain as health care costs increase in future years."

My concern is that the Treasurer clearly has reneged on that commitment; he has no reason to be believed when he says now that this tax will be relied upon increasingly in the future. Those subscribers, and they are an ever-decreasing number of pay-direct subscribers, who are expected to pay an increasing proportion of the health care burden—and that too is an interesting point, because—

Mr. Martel: That fellow should start looking for a new job tomorrow.

Mr. Conway: —in his paper the Treasurer indicated a reliance upon what the Taylor report to the Premier said in December 1977.

Mr. Haggerty: And it didn't say too much.

Mr. Conway: It didn't say very much. What it said, I think represents the fundamental anathema to many members on this side of the House. Surely it is incumbent upon the Treasurer to define what it is he wants this premium to relate to. Does he expect this tax to be related to the overall health care costs? Are those premium subscribers who pay direct—and I make that distinction—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It was related to and consistent with federal legislation.

Mr. Conway: I make that distinction, because I think it is fundamentally unfair that the hon. member for Ottawa West, for example, should have this interpreted for him—and, I presume, for myself—as nothing more than a $144 pay raise.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I don't need it interpreted for me. I know. You are talking nonsense over there. This is consistent with federal legislation.

Mr. Conway: As he well knows from his previous days on the council for social development, that is the worst form of regressivity—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I know a lot more about this than you do.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway:—that anyone with an ounce of progressive social philosophy in his veins must object to in principle. That is why.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You don't know your Constitution.

Mr. Conway: The hon. member for Ottawa West knows that. For him it is nothing more than a $144 pay raise; and if the cabinet is not paid enough—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This legislation is consistent with federal legislation, which is also constitutional.

Mr. Conway: If the cabinet of this government is not paid enough, let them stand up in this House and ask for more money. But it will simply not be acceptable on the basis of this kind of regressivity.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This is nonsense—arrogant nonsense.

Mr. Conway: In this budget, the Treasurer offers us premiums—and I quote from page 15—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are trying to change federal and provincial legislation—

Mr. Lewis: That is claptrap. You're sillier now than when you were with the council on social development.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's not claptrap. You don't know what you are talking about. This Act is consistent with federal legislation.

Mr. Kerrio: You know little enough about energy.

Mr. Conway: This budget and this Treasurer offer to us this premium increase as not only important but necessary because premiums "retain a visible link with the cost of services."

[5:15]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If this is a tax, so is the Canada Pension Plan, so is unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Minister of Energy calm down just a little bit, I would like to hear what the hon. member for Renfrew North has to say about the principle of this bill.

Mr. MacBeth: The Minister of Energy is aptly named.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, the budget of March 7, 1978, which I think is related to the principle of this bill—at least in my interpretation—offers the premium as necessary and important, and I quote, "because they retain a visible link with the cost of services." Mr. Speaker, I ask you—

Mr. MacDonald: That's not a principle.

Mr. Conway:—how it is that this tax, this premium, in any way relates to the cost of services?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Make up your mind.

Mr. Lewis: Reuben, stop it. You are the only man who moved from feudalism to the Dark Ages and thought it was progress.

Mr. Conway: Because for the hon. member for Ottawa West and myself and 123 others there is no visible link in this whatsoever. There is a heck of a lot more visibility for that woodworker in Lake Nipigon who now pays for his family $528 worth of the most regressive tax that this government has increasingly relied upon.

Mr. Martel: It's okay if you are in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Is unemployment insurance a tax? Is the Canada Pension Plan a tax?

Mr. McClellan: You know all about unemployment insurance, don't you? We remember your views on unemployment insurance.

Mr. Conway: And as if that visible-link argument is not of its own accord specious and irrelevant enough, what does the Treasurer tell us on page 33? He suggests that we really shouldn't worry because "Table 2 shows that almost three-quarters of the increase will be paid for by employers."

I think contained within the budget is a clear contradiction of this visibility that is offered to us as the one and only reason why this government increasingly relies on this kind of tax. And I was interested in that connection, because you know what this proves—and you know why I think the hon. member's bill is so important? It is that now that the Treasurer in his budget indicates that this is the third largest source of provincial revenue, it is going to force that government in this minority situation to come before this legislature and ask for tax revenues as tax revenues.

Mr. MacDonald: Live within the Constitution.

Mr. Conway: As the hon. member for York South says, they are constitutionally required to do so.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Is the Canada Pension Plan premium a tax?

Mr. Conway: Well, the Minister of Energy says that that is not all that bad. Let him say what he might.

Mrs. Campbell: He has changed.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: No, no.

An hon. member: He hasn't changed.

Mr. Conway: Not only is the Treasurer unable to get beyond his Tory mentality which was marvellously outlined in the budget as well as in his—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That has nothing to do with the principle of this bill.

Mr. Conway:—response to the letters to the editor column in the Globe and Mail, March 16, where among other arguments he offered—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are off on a tangent again.

Mr. Conway:—"the premium system is more progressive than some critics allow."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: What's wrong with that?

An hon. member: It's stupid.

Mr. Conway: Well, not to forget, "it's no less regressive than the sales tax." That kind of argument I know the Minister of Energy can understand.

An hon. member: You are right there.

Mr. McClellan: A great social critic you are, Reuben.

Mr. Cassidy: You sure sold out, didn't you?

Mr. Conway: He goes on to talk about the large number of free premiums and the fact that OHIP payments are for the most part—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are mixing apples and oranges in this argument.

An hon. member: You are mortgaged up to the hilt, Reuben.

Mr. Conway:—subsidized by employers and that everyone must realize, the Treasurer tells us, that health costs are increasing.

Mr. Lewis: Reuben, if you were in British Columbia, you would have jumped in with Social Credit.

Mr. Conway: Well, if that is the case,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Conway:—let this government come before this House and ask for those revenues as taxes and not try to piggyback other general revenues upon that very small number of people, as it now turns out generally some 25 per cent of subscribers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway:—who must pay directly.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Is the Canada Pension Plan a tax? Is unemployment insurance a tax?

Mr. McClellan: You've got nothing left to sell out, Reuben. You've given it all away.

Mr. Kerrio: You would do well to learn something about the Energy portfolio.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Rubbish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Breagh: I don't want to see the hon. Minister of Energy have to rush out and use this tax right away, and I wish he'd calm down before he does.

I want to speak directly to the principle of this bill, which I think is extremely important, and I think that the case in constitutional terms has been put most eloquently by my colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere. It has been done with a thoroughness that I think is really rarely seen in this House. I think it is important that we recognize the importance of the bill, that, in effect, we have seen what is perhaps the most dominant tax action that this government has proposed to date this year and it has tried to get it through the House under the guise that it's not a tax at all, that it is, in fact, something else.

I would guess that for someone as courageous as our provincial Treasurer, who possesses so much bravado and speaks with such a great, loud voice about so many things—

Mrs. Campbell: And with a forked tongue.

Mr. Breagh:—one would think he would have had the physical ability to bring this matter before the House. If his case is so strong, if he wants it, why does he not then bring it in in the form of legislation, as he will with other forms of tax action that he intends to take? In fact, in dealing with the principle of the bill—are we talking about a tax?—I think we would look first and foremost at where was this concept introduced into this House? It was introduced by the Treasurer himself in a list of things that he considered to be tax action. So it is a tax.

Is it a tax in the sense that it raises substantial amounts of revenue for the government of Ontario? It certainly does. Once again, when we look at what have we got going here, is this thing a tax, does it require legislation from this House before it should be approved, well, it certainly does.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Does the Canada Pension Plan premium require legislation? It's the same thing.

Mr. Breaugh: Look at, for example, even a simple family of four. With this particular tax, we're looking at $528 a year for an average family. That's a tax. Without question, that's a tax. That's a substantial amount of money. Of all the things the Treasurer could have done in terms of a deterrent fee, it certainly isn't that. If he wanted to say this is kind of an admission charge, it certainly isn't that. This is a form of taxation, without question.

Mrs. Campbell: It's more than their income tax.

Mr. Breaugh: I think that undeniably in constitutional terms, undeniably as well in terms of raising revenue in a form that is perhaps unprecedented in this House, this is taxation. This particular measure, without question in my mind, requires that he brings before this House some legislation.

If we look at it in terms of what an individual has to pay, try this one on for size. OHIP as a percentage of taxable income is 6.5 per cent of taxable income for an average family of four. That's a lot of money. That's certainly nothing that we might consider to be casual. That's certainly nothing that we might begin to consider to be anything other than a tax. Perhaps he's trying to make an argument that it's a tax by a different name, but none the less it is a tax in the classic parliamentary sense of taxation throughout our English parliamentary system.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is not. That is the mistake.

Mr. Martel: The Speaker ruled on it, my friend.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Unemployment insurance premiums are not regarded as taxes in this country, nor are Canada Pension Plan premiums.

Mr. Martel: The Speaker ruled on it, Reuben. You are going to eat crow before you finish.

Mr. Breaugh: I want to put this in a context as well because I think that it is important that we do that. I think it is important we note that Ontario now has the dubious distinction of raising more money through these health insurance premiums, $1,120 million, than through the corporate income tax, where the guesstimation this year is $1,045 million. So, without question, the principle of this bill is important to this House. When this government chooses to tax the people of Ontario, when it chooses to raise substantial amounts of money, does it do so through the back door, by asking that someone raise the premium rate, which in effect operates as a tax, and in a classical, constitutional and parliamentary sense is in effect a tax by anybody's definition? It's precisely what we're talking about here.

I think it is important for us to recognize that in this OHIP premium raise once again the members of this House have had one of the most dramatic forms of taxation that we'll ever see pulled on them in this budget, and in fact it requires no legislation at all. That certainly is unfair and that speaks directly to the principle of this bill. We, as members of this House, as individual members of this House, demand that when the government does increase this form of taxation it brings that matter before this House in the form of legislation so that we can, in fact, properly debate it. It is taxation, without question.

I have listened to the debate from various private members here, and although this is said to be a private members' hour, I am not so terribly sure that it has turned out to be that. I heard, in fact, from the government side of the House, some arguments which, in my mind, did not speak very directly to this principle. I would think that any member of this House, any member on either side of the House, would want to think the respect of the House is such that when a government of the day, any government of any day, raises this kind of taxation revenue, it does so only with legislation and that it brings it before this House. I don't see that happening.

In looking at the opposite side of the House I don't see very many people over there taking an interest in this.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There's one sitting over here that knows you're wrong.

Mr. Breaugh: I dare say, Mr. Speaker, that there are a great many people in the province of Ontario—

Mr. Kerrio: We are talking about people who know something about it.

Mr. Peterson: Look after Hydro.

Mr. Breaugh: —who will be faced with this most regressive form of taxation, who will find it a substantial hardship in this year; who will pay it whether they want to or not, whether they use it or not, as they do with most other forms of taxation.

Without question, Mr. Speaker, we see in this particular Parliament, right now, a government that has chosen to go through the back door, that has chosen not to bring fairly and squarely before this House what it intends to do.

Mr. Kerrio: They will block the bill.

Mr. Breaugh: I think that the purpose of this bill, the principle of this bill, is essential to the traditions of our own Parliament and to the value of the Parliament itself. I fail to understand why, with an array of things to do, in terms of raising money, in terms of taxing the people of Ontario, the Treasurer chose to step into the telephone booth, put on his killer T-shirt, and use this form of taxation. Perhaps he felt that deterrent fees were a little inappropriate, that it wasn't appropriate to tax the sick when they were sick, but that this form of taxation was a little more fair.

Mr. Rotenberg: Will you support deterrent fees?

Mr. Breugh: If that's the case then I don't see why he, as one member of this House, would object in the slightest this form of legislation.

I look, in great measure, at the members opposite. I wish there were more, because I think this is an important matter for this House to discuss. There aren't many of them here now, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I'd be prepared to predict—

Mr. Kerrio: They will be here tonight to block it.

Mr. Breugh:—that when the vote is called in this House this afternoon, there will be 20 mugwumps rising on that side of the House to see that we don't even get a vote on it.

Mrs. Campbell: Absolutely, that is right.

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, this principle is one that is fundamental to Parliament, that the members opposite who form the government of the day, when they want to raise taxation bring those matters before this House in legislative form so that the members of the House may have an opportunity to discuss it and to vote on it. That would be the same in a majority government, as it should be in a minority government. It is fundamental to the principles of the parliamentary democracy that we belong to that it be done in this form. I fail to see why any member of the House, in good conscience, could not support this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Health Insurance Act is consistent with federal policies.

Mr. Lewis: You don't have unemployment insurance premiums dealt with within a budget; or CPP within a budget, Reuben. You don't know what you are talking about my friend. You know nothing in this job and learned nothing in your former job.

Sorry to have to reveal that to Hansard; I feel embarrassed on your account.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am not going to listen to you any more. You are finished.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Handleman: I thought you wanted to sit on the back bench.

Mr. McClellan: With whom? With Reuben Baetz?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Durham West.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I've followed with particular interest since the budget was introduced, the many and varied legal points made by members opposite with respect to the British North America Act, and of course taxation without legislation.

Not being a lawyer myself I therefore took the opportunity to discuss some of these matters with the ministry's legal staff. I am convinced that the member—

Mr. Swart: Why don't you get outside information?

Mr. Martel: Why don't you get Dracula?

Mr. Ashe: I don't admit to be an expert in everything the way some people opposite seem to feel they are.

Mr. Cassidy: You are a member of this House and you are responsible to the electors.

Mr. Ashe: That's right.

Mr. Peterson: You are the worst hack in the whole House.

Mr. Ashe: I am convinced that the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is wrong in much of what he has said about changing OHIP premiums by regulation; and I think his bill, and the premise on which it is based, therefore, is completely wrong.

In the first place, I think that it is clear that a premium paid as consideration for health insurance, of course, is not a tax.

Mr. MacDonald: You are denying your boss.

Mr. Ashe: As with premiums paid on any contract of insurance, be it home, car, accident and sickness, OHIP premiums are variable from time to time depending on the insurer's costs and the claims record.

Mr. McClellan: You are always attacking the Treasurer.

Mr. MacDonald: The Treasurer said it was.

Mr. Ashe: I shall deal with this record later in my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

I should note that the legislation out in British Columbia—

Mr. Swart: How come he gives you all the hopeless jobs?

Mr. Ashe: —put in of course by another political party, established the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, which permits that corporation, without any reference to the Legislature, to establish premiums payable for auto insurance. And with respect to these insurance premiums—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's right.

Mrs. Campbell: And it's used for automobile insurance.

Mr. Cassidy: It's not a tax measure.

[5:30]

Mr. Ashe: —it seems to be an entirely reasonable approach.

Mr. Cassidy: It's not a tax measure. It's a separate corporation.

Mr. Ashe: I would like briefly to speak to several legal points also, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: You had better get a different lawyer. So far your legal points are pretty feeble.

Mr. Ashe: I am advised that the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision in the reference regarding the Agricultural Farm Products Marketing Act handed down in mid-January of this year supports our view that levies collected for the purpose of defraying expenses are in fact not taxes. In that case the Chief Justice deals at great length with sections 53 and 54 of the British North America Act and concludes that in that instance levies made on egg producers were not taxes but "merely ingredients of a regulatory scheme and are considered as elements thereof."

Mr. Peterson: Poppycock.

Mr. Martel: The whole public isn't egg producers. It isn't the same principle at all.

Mr. Ashe: It seems to me as well that premiums payable under the Health Insurance Act, 1972, are levies made to recover the costs of operating an insurance scheme. The premiums are ingredients of a much larger health insurance scheme and are to be considered as only one of the elements of the Health Insurance Act. In any event, even if OHIP premiums were to be considered a tax—and I firmly believe of course that they are not—an early decision in legal history, Powell vs. the Apollo Candle Company Limited—so as you can see we are going back a while—

Mr. Swart: About your time.

Mr. Ashe: —from the Supreme Court of New South Wales, firmly supports the proposition that sections 53 and 54 of the British North America Act do not require legislation for the alteration of premiums imposed pursuant to section 12 of the Health Insurance Act.

In that case, the Customs Act of New South Wales permitted the governor to impose duties by order in council. The court concluded that the duties levied under the order in council were levied by the authority of the Act under which the order is issued. There it was also argued that under the constitution, similar to sections 53 and 54 of the British North America Act, only the Legislature could impose a tax.

I would like to read to members one excerpt from the decision of Sir Robert Collier in that instance:

"It has been argued that the proviso on section 1 that all bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue or imposing any new tax, rate or impost shall originate in the legislative assembly in the colony, at least a direction on the part of the Imperial Parliament that all levying of taxes in the colonies shall be by bill originating, as in this country, in the lower House.

"It may be that the Legislature assumes that with respect to customs duties such a course would be pursued as undoubtedly as in accordance with the usages and traditions of this country, but it appears to their lordships impossible to hold that the words of an Act which do not more than prescribe the motive procedure with respect to certain bills shall have the effect of eliminating the operation of these bills.

"It is argued that the tax in question has been imposed by the governor and not by the Legislature, who alone had the power to impose it. But the duties levied under the order in council are really levies by the authority of the Act under which the order is issued. The Legislature has not parted with its perfect control over the governor and has the power, of course, at any moment of withdrawing or altering the power which they have entrusted to him."

In passing section 12 of the Health Insurance Act, 1972, I believe this House at that time acted properly in vesting the authority to alter the rate of premiums in the Lieutenant Governor by regulation. I would now like to indicate why it seems to me to be so vital that the necessary flexibility be available in establishing the level of OHIP premiums.

Mr. Swart: Because you couldn't get it through the Legislature.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right, because you haven't got the guts to come before the Legislature.

Mr. Ashe: There is little doubt that the provision of a top-notch health care system is of paramount importance in the eyes of the public and this government. However, it is becoming more and more difficult each year to finance the costly proposition of maintaining good health care. I would like to give members some idea just how costly it is.

Since OHIP was introduced in 1972, expenditure on insured services has increased by $1.7 billion. This fiscal year these expenditures will claim over 23 per cent of budgetary revenue. Expenditures have grown despite a very successful spending control program which for this year will hold the rate of expenditure growth on OHIP to just over six per cent. This is in stark contrast to the 24 per cent experienced in 1974-75. Further, this success has not been at the expense of quality in our health care system.

More needs to be done, however, and to achieve further successes we need the cooperation of each and every citizen of this province. Only through prudent and judicious utilization of our health care system can we be assured of maintaining the kind of health care system we have all come to expect within the fiscal resources that we have at our disposal.

So that you don't get all shook up, Mr. Speaker, I am going to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I just feel the hon. member is straying somewhat from the principle.

Mr. Ashe: Not really—

Mr. Warner: He's completely lost.

Mr. MacDonald: Don't dispute the Speaker; deal with the principle.

Mr. Ashe: The point is that there is no doubt that the growth of revenue available is not nearly equivalent to the amount of the growth of expenditures, and from time to time changes have to be made. It is obvious that quality reductions or service cutbacks are not wanted by the people of Ontario. Further, since we have committed ourselves to a balanced budget by 1981, deficit financing ceases to be an option. That leaves increases in taxes as opposed to OHIP premium changes.

It is true tax increases could have brought in new financing for OHIP. The government of Ontario could have raised the personal income tax by 10 per cent, or raised the retail sales tax by eight per cent, or found the money by boosting the corporate income tax. These are very unattractive options, given the sensitivity of consumer and investor confidence to tax changes. The result might have produced long-lasting and adverse effects on a recovering Ontario economy.

Mr. Cassidy: What about the adverse effects on the families of the province? Answer that question.

Mr. Ashe: I'll speak to that right now. The level of premiums is not nearly as bad—

Mr. Cassidy: Sure, put the corporations ahead of the people of the province, eh?

Mr. Ashe: He wants to hear it, but he doesn't want to hear it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Swart: He knows what the answer is.

Mr. Ashe: They are not nearly as bad as some critics might have one believe. About 1.9 million Ontarians, who are pensioners, welfare recipients and those on low income, are provided free coverage. About three-quarters of the rest of the people of this province are covered wholly or partly under company plans. Since any amount that employers pick up on behalf of employees is considered as taxable income, the burden of premiums is distributed far more progressively than at first meets the eye. The higher-income person pays a higher rate of tax on the employer's contribution.

I think one would have to admit that there do exist some individuals and families whose taxable income just slightly exceed the ranges within which free or half-premium coverage is available, and as such, the new premium levels are unfairly burdensome. I am assured that our officials are studying this problem and that they are working toward a viable solution to offset any undue hardship.

Mr. Peterson: Go to the boss and get a cut in pay.

Mr. Cassidy: A viable solution is to stop the premium increase.

Mr. Ashe: I am opposed to the provisions of Bill 32. I believe this House acted properly in 1972—

Mr. Cassidy: You are opposed to parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Ashe:—and earlier years in leaving the determination of premium levels and the necessary flexibility—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ with you. If you counted the first two minutes before I had the floor, I got up at 5:30—

Mr. McClellan: Challenge the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ashe: If I may close, then, with one line, Mr. Speaker: Within the options available to government, I believe that the level of premiums balanced against the quality of health care service is as equitable and fair to the people of the province as it is humanly possible to make it, and this government should be able to determine that disposition.

Mr. Kerrio: You said it, but you don't believe it.

Mr. Ashe: I do.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, we don't have a great deal of time, and I just want to make a small contribution. A great number of worthwhile things have already been said. I would like at the outset to congratulate the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. I thought he made a first-class presentation. It will go down in the annals of the House with some of the finer speeches and better contributions and better-researched documents, and I congratulate him.

We in this party totally and 100 per cent support his view and the view expressed by my colleagues here already. I think his historical dissertation, starting in 1215 with the Magna Carta and subsequently, has been a worthwhile contribution. In fact, it has probably moved the NDP political philosophy ahead at least two centuries anyway, so that in itself was a contribution.

Mr. Warner: At least two.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to be repetitive, but I want to emphasize the things that I think are so terribly important in this debate. I see the Treasurer talking at dramatic cross purposes in the introduction of this premium. I want to read from the budget, if I may, and this is leading to the very salient points that directly affect this Bill 32.

He says, under OHIP premiums, "The control of health costs continues to be a high priority." I would respectfully submit that this premium, this regressive tax—and I fully accept the argument that it is a tax; nobody has any choice in this province whether he pays it or not—does not in any way address the problem of control of health costs. What we can see next year if they do not address their minds to this expanding and burgeoning system of health care, is another increase in premiums sneaking through the back door, not being addressed by this Legislature.

It is time that this Legislature fully, clearly and in depth reviewed the entire medical care system in this province and decided as a matter of public policy, not as a matter of regulation, how much a percentage of our revenue, of our total tax dollars, of our gross provincial product we are prepared to spend on health care.

The government has begged the question of these expanding health care costs when it just raises more revenue to pay for increased costs, because I see with this philosophy a continuing expansion of this kind of thing. It'll happen next year and the year after and the year after, extracting a greater and higher percentage out of the public purse. Whether we call it a tax or a premium it still comes out of the productive capital of this province, and it is our view that we are almost at the economic choke point right now. We can't afford to raise a higher percentage of taxes out of the gross provincial product.

The question then becomes, obviously, what is the fairest and most equitable way to extract this revenue? I fully subscribe to the argument expressed by the members of the third party as well as the members of the Liberal Party who have spoken on this issue before. If one needs additional revenue—and I question that—then clearly this is not the most attractive or fairest way to extract that revenue. It gives me very serious problems.

The Treasurer's other argument is to provide the visible link. I respectfully say to the Minister of Health that this increase in OHIP premiums in many respects is going to be a payroll tax—and the Treasurer talks so eloquently about trying to maintain some reasonable tax climate in this province—and employers are going to look at that and say, "I cannot afford any more employees, because I can't afford those extra payroll taxes." When they're paying workmen's compensation, increases in OHIP and all of the other kinds of taxes that one pays on payrolls today, it's becoming less and less attractive to hire people. Certainly that's the most important, fundamental economic problem we have in this province today. The government is punishing people who are employing people and is, in fact, providing no visible link.

We have a health care system where someone who is a beneficiary of the system has absolutely no idea what charge he is on the public purse. One can't find out to save one's soul how much it costs to stay in a hospital. We had a baby about six months ago and I had to ask many people how much of a charge we were on the public purse for doctors and anaesthetists and hospitals and all that kind of thing. Clearly, if he wants to provide that visible link, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) has an obligation to make sure every single person in this province knows how much he is taking out of this total bill of about $4 billion. That's where to start.

A hidden tax that goes on the payroll will not provide that visible link, in my opinion.

The minister has a very major and important administrative job to do quickly to address that question of the "visible link" which the Treasurer talks about and which a consumer of the service in this province can hardly find out to save his soul. It's the only system in the world where one can walk in and consume unlimited amounts of services without knowing what one pays or knowing the costs of it in any regard. I would say that is the fundamental and most important administrative problem that they have in the Ministry of Health. I say to the Minister of Health he has an obligation to start on that right away.

I just wanted to make that small contribution. There is no question in my mind that if this came before the House it would be defeated and the government would be defeated. Obviously, we see all the government members now starting to pour in.

Mr. Kerrio: Blocking it.

Mr. Peterson: We'll see 20 of them stand up and block this bill, because there's no question that if this came to a vote it would be defeated and the government would probably have to take it as a matter of confidence. We think it is unfair. We think it is inequitable. We think when the government is raising $1.2 billion by regulation, undiscussed by this Legislature, then it is taking the chicken-hearted way out of this situation.

I have to ask myself in fairness, would the Treasurer have done this if there was a majority government, or would he have used a different kind of mechanism? Would he have had the courage to bring it before this House—knowing he would win, of course, in a majority—if we were in those kinds of circumstances? I tend to think that this government has taken the cowardly way out of this program in order to obscure from this House the very important issues of these expanding health costs, which still have yet to be addressed.

I regret that and I am so happy about the Liberal Party's contribution to force this thing into committee, and we are going to expect a great deal of co-operation; because if the minister cannot come up with a way to control these expanding health costs I can assure him that we will. And we are looking forward to making a very significant contribution.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Tell us; get with it.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: We are the ones who forced this into committee. We are the ones who have asked for a full legislative review.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Why didn't you do it in estimates?

Mr. Peterson: We have never had a legislative review of this whole program, and it has grown like Topsy in the past 10 years.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have not had one idea from that party; not one idea.

Mr. Peterson: The minister should have initiated it. We had to deploy certain mechanisms and rules of this House in order to bring about that kind of review, and we are looking forward to making that kind of contribution.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, we fully support the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere; and again I compliment him and I am glad we have had an opportunity to debate this bill today.

Mr. Warner: May I defer the last couple of minutes to my colleague from Sudbury? Am I allowed to do it?

Mr. Speaker: That's your choice.

Mr. Martel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only want to make a few comments.

OMSIP, as it was known, came into Ontario rather reluctantly. I remember Roberts calling it a Machiavellian scheme; and since that time the Tories have done nothing to make it palatable in Ontario in terms of fairness.

It was this party, in fact, way back then, that opposed it; opposed the OHIP scheme, we voted against it at that time, because it was inequitable.

Mr. MacDonald: And won a by-election because of it.

Mr. Martel: I want to remind members of 1969. I want to give them a few figures.

In 1969, when this was introduced in Ontario, the premiums were $177 in Ontario. They were $48 in Saskatchewan, $117 in Manitoba, $120 in Alberta and $150 in BC. Today, in the same provinces Mr. Speaker, they are zero, the premiums in Saskatchewan; zero in Manitoba; $169 in Alberta; $225 in BC; and $528 in Ontario, up 300 per cent.

Mr. Swart: That says a lot about your government.

Mr. Martel: That says a lot about the richest province.

We opposed it in that day, Mr. Speaker. And I remind you, that there was a ruling made, when my colleague from Scarborough—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: How much do you pay today in BC?

Mr. Martel: By the way, the member for Scarborough West at that time made the following statement about this bill: "As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, without being unkind, this Act might better be entitled an Act respecting the rescue of the provincial Treasurer"; because that is what it was doing. That is what he said in 1969, you are bailing out the Treasurer. If it was that then, imagine what it is like today.

As we moved a number of amendments in that bill, let me tell members what the Speaker of the day ruled with respect to the amendments moved by my colleague, to show my friend, the Minister of Energy, that the Speaker of the day considered it a tax.

My colleague moved an amendment, and the Speaker made the following ruling: "It seems to me that the motion presented or raised by the hon. member for Scarborough West has to do with raising of revenue, the premiums going into the revenue accounts of the province of Ontario; and it seems to me it would be beyond the competence of the hon. member to indicate the amount of these revenues or taxations as such.

"There is a rule forbidding any motion having to do with the raising of taxes or revenues, and this specifically seems to me to be a matter of part of the revenue of the province which goes into the consolidated revenue fund for the expenditure to offset costs, and it certainly seems to me to be out of order."

Mr. Lewis: Right, you are breaking the law.

Mr. Martel: The Speaker of the day ruled that my colleague could not move an amendment which in fact was a tax, or rule against the tax—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Or revenue.

Mr. Martel: Revenue. And that is what you have now, a form of taxation; the amendment was ruled out of order by the Speaker because a private member cannot deal with taxation.

One final quote, if I might, Mr. Speaker, because the Speaker of the day then went on to elaborate with one more sentence. And he said: "It is provided that the House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a message of the Lieutenant Governor in the session in which the vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed."

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is out of order, and you can't do it.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Administrator of the Province of Ontario doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable the Administrator was pleased to retire from the chamber.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, perhaps as a matter of convenience for yourself, I might call the second order just before we break for supper.

Mr. Conway: Can 20 members kill it?

An hon. member: You couldn't do anything because you couldn't scrape up that many.

Mr. Conway: You'll be killing the Lord's Prayer next.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You only had six or seven Grits in their seats.

Mr. Martel: You're killing the private members' hour.

Mr. MacDonald: They're not killing it; it's dead. They're mutilating the corpse.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 30, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee of the whole on Bill 30, An Act to amend the Municipal Elections Act, 1977.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, just in summary, I think most of the discussion related to the bill was dealt with on second reading. There were a few differences of opinion, let us say, at that time and that's the reason we're in committee, I understand, unless there's been a change in thinking. There are two proposed amendments by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) and I had one housekeeping one to correct a typographical error. I am prepared to move right on to section 1 and answer any questions that may come up over the seven sections.

On section 1:

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I have a question, not as it relates specifically to the wording of the clause before us. Not having been privy to some of the other discussion, if perhaps I'm covering something already discussed, please advise me.

When this takes effect, what is the position of this new council vis-à-vis its budget procedures? Are they enabled by this to proceed as they would have done in January? Do they deal with budgets before the end of the year? What is their fiscal year in this first year? Do they in effect deal with their budgets for a 13-month period because now that it's quite clear that they take over as of the beginning of December, and having had all the limitations imposed by this government in the past about the preparation of budgets in advance, could I be enlightened as to what effect this section has with reference to budgeting procedures?

Mr. Ashe: Fine. I'd be happy to, Mr. Chairman. The new council, of course, does take over on December 1. The fiscal year is not being changed, so although we would hope and encourage the new council to get into the budget process right away, we would even assume that as far as the staff on the old council is concerned, probably the procedure has started although they can't really do anything, that's for sure. But keeping in mind that traditionally at least 75 per cent of the council members don't change anyway across the province, I think the process can start.

The month of December would be legally under the operation of the new council, with the one exception that outstanding budgetary expenditures relate only to the old budget—

Mrs. Campbell: Exactly.

Mr. Ashe:—and therefore I suppose in theory the new council could be spending like mad in the month of December with moneys which it was not necessarily a party to in terms of the budget, but keep in mind, it is going to have to pay for it in the following year. So I would suggest that if the council built up a deficit in the month of December—and that's possible, I appreciate that—it is going to have to pay for it in the budgeted fiscal year, January to December 31, in any event.

We are really not concerned that councils would abuse, if you will, that privilege, and hopefully the whole process of everything, getting familiar in the case of new council members or getting into the budget process, would start right at the beginning of December, albeit we have got to acknowledge the last 10 days or so of the year are pretty well lost in a practical sense because of Christmas and coming up to the year end. We feel they will start the whole process earlier and that month will probably be a plus to getting the budget process finalized earlier in the term of the new council than even before.

There's no doubt about it, they have a 12-month fiscal year that is different from their term of office, if you will, as far as that beginning. It's obviously not in effect the second year, there's no problem there, but every time there's an election that will happen for that one month. It was felt, based on the input principally from municipalities across the province, they much preferred that option rather than have a lame duck council for some seven to eight weeks, which was the alternate of having the earlier election and going on until the end of the calendar year.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I think I would want to correct any possible misunderstanding that the member might have. I have the highest respect for municipal politicians. They are not accustomed to dealing with deficits. They are not able to deal with deficits. Their problem usually is that they cannot get started their budgeting process in time to make decent savings in their public works programs. Don't misunderstand me. Any suggestion I make is because I think they are the most responsible politicians that we have in this country by far.

Mr. Ashe: I was one too.

Mr. Swart: Funny how we change.

Mrs. Campbell: I just am concerned about this because I don't know of any change which enables the old council to prepare its budget in advance. It seems to me that these people coming in in December, which is not usually a very busy month, not by reason of the council but by reason of the very obvious circumstances of December, it will be very difficult for them to try to budget so that they can be ready to tender for public works projects early in the new year. I just wanted to make that comment on this particular situation.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I will wait until we go into committee to make comments.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We are in committee.

Mr. Swart: We are in committee? Then I will move an amendment to section 1. I think you have a copy of that from the other evening, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 2 of section 9 of the Act as set out in section 1 of the bill be amended by striking out all the words following "1978" in the sixth line.

Mr. Swart: I had not intended to say a great deal on this amendment because we did discuss the issue rather fully on second reading of the bill, but I have decided, after reading over Hansard for the debate that took place on second reading, that there are some things that should be said regarding the intent of this amendment. Those who were not here for the debate before will recognize that it deletes the last two lines of subsection 2, so that it will then read: "The term of office of members of a council or local board who hold office on the 30th day of November, 1978, and whose terms of office but for this subsection would expire on the 31st day of December, 1978, shall, subject to subsection 3, expire with the 30th day of November, 1978."

As the parliamentary assistant pointed out, this is necessary for clarification in the Act, although it was of course the original intention that the term of office would expire on November 30.

Of course, on their remuneration, the section states, "and where such members are paid an annual allowance, the allowance for the year 1978 shall be reduced proportionately." We had considerable discussion on that, and I think there was some agreement that perhaps just an arbitrary reduction of one-twelfth won't really deal with the situation where most of the work of municipal council is done in the first 11 months of the year; perhaps a one-twelfth straight reduction is not an appropriate reduction proportional to the amount of work that is done.

However, as I pointed out the other night, that was not my main concern, nor the main concern of my party, with regard to this section. The concern is that by this section the Legislature is telling elected local government officials what they must do. What we are dealing with here is the principle of whether we trust municipal councils and other local government bodies to look after their own remuneration. That's really the issue that is before us in this amendment; not the principle, perhaps, of whether it is eleven-twelfths, but whether we are going to tell them, from this level, "this is what you must do." Regardless of the justification or not, we are saying, by legislation "this is what you must do."

I would just like to read into the record the statement in the joint report and recommendations of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, dated July 19, 1977, on the issue of remuneration and expenses of elected municipal officials, and elected and appointed members of other local boards.

They have a statement of principle. The first statement of principle is: "A local determination that the entitlement to, amount of, method of payment of remuneration, transportation and other travelling expenses of local government members be determined locally."

The second statement of principle: "Elected members or local elected officials be responsible for determination of their own remuneration, transportation and other travelling expenses."

Those are the first two sections of that report, which was submitted to the government and municipal people feel rather strongly about that. That's a pretty clear statement.

Municipal people, elected local government people, over the years and for many decades pushed the government to say that they should be able to determine their own remuneration. Not because they want the right to pay themselves excessive amounts of money, but every cent of it is collected from the property taxpayers, they are accountable back to them and therefore they should have the right to determine this on their own.

In fact, of course, the government has gone a long way in giving that right to them, by sections 205, 211, 238 and 389 of the Municipal Act; but somehow or other the government seems, at every stage, to want to pull back on this issue. If any problem comes up let's take that right away. They are either indifferent about it or not capable of it.

The other night, the member for Durham West said they are not betraying that principle, that they still believe in that principle that they should have remuneration. I suggest to you that to a very substantial extent they are betraying that principle.

In reading over Instant Hansard of that night, I will say to you that I was quite concerned about the comments made by the member for Durham West. I am going to read part of that into the record. In giving the reason why they put in this clause which we are saying should be taken out, he says:

"Again we have had questions from municipal clerks, from treasurers, from heads of councils, saying that their bylaw now reads per annum, and some of them took the literal interpretation that they could not make that eleven-twelfths even if they wished to by their own decision. You can challenge whether somebody should ask that kind of question and put forth that kind of statement. But we got them. We also had a lot of just straight questions. What do we do? Do we have two councils in office during the month of December? Do we pay two councils in the month of December?"

"Of course, the answer that we're making very clear is no, if a council does feel that eleven-twelfths of what would normally be the per diem salary is not sufficient to pay them for their 11 months of work; and I acknowledge what the hon. member has said"—he was referring to me at that time—"relative to the work load over the year—that December is not normally considered to be or has not been considered one of the busier months, though I think with the new term of office it will become somewhat busier. But let the council take the option that it now has to amend their bylaw relating to their compensation.

"If they now have a bylaw that says it shall be $5,000 per annum they can amend their bylaw as soon as they wish, to change it to a different sum if they feel they are being short-changed by having a pro rata salary for the month or for the whole year because of the month of December."

Then he goes on further to say: "So on that basis we do not feel that the proposed amendment by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold is the right one. We think that the section as proposed is the way that municipal people, both elected and otherwise, have asked. They said, 'Make it very clear. We know how to handle it after that, but make it very clear what you mean.' We feel that the particular section of the bill, clause 1, does in fact make it very clear and the municipalities and municipal councils can judge their actions accordingly, both to themselves and to their electorate for any change they feel necessary in the remuneration bylaw." End of quote of the parliamentary assistant.

The first question I want to ask him—and I hope he will deal with this when he rises, because I have done some investigation since we last debated this bill: When he talks about the municipal people asking for this, I'm thinking of the section that's proposed and the way the municipal people, elected and otherwise, have asked; and I mentioned earlier in what I read that this was at the request of the municipal people. I'd ask him to name the associations or the municipal people who have requested that you legislate that they should only receive eleven-twelfths of their salaries. I ask him to state those municipal organizations and those elected municipal people.

The second suggestion is that what we're doing here is some sort of nice instruction. They asked what the situation was, so you're giving them some nice instructions. I say to you that this isn't just some advice to them. What is in this bill is pretty binding. Where you say, "And where such members are paid an annual allowance, the allowance for the year 1978 shall be reduced proportionately," that doesn't leave any option for those municipal people at all. That's pretty hard and fast legislation. It's binding.

Then you say that it still leaves the option with the council to change their bylaw. If they want to make sure they get the same amount of money, then they can change their bylaw. They can amend that bylaw so that the eleven-twelfths would be the same amount as the twelve-twelfths that they would have received in the 12-month period.

Let me say first of all that I'm no lawyer, but I would think, in reading that section, that a municipality could have not just problems with the electors but be in real legal problems where you say, "And where such members are paid an annual allowance, the allowance for the year 1978 shall be reduced proportionately." If they pass a bylaw—using your own example of the $5,000 per annum, Mr. Parliamentary Assistant—to give themselves the same allowance, I would suggest that any ratepayer could challenge that, and they would be forced to have that reduction. In fact, it is not the case that they could change the bylaw.

But even if they could, even if they could get away with it, what kind of position does this put the council in; when you have passed a bylaw which says they must reduce their annual allowance by one-twelfth and that council, in election year, should pass a bylaw to keep it in the same position? You were a member of a municipal council, and you were too, Mr. Chairman; you know what kind of a position that would put the council in. They just, of course, won't do it.

What you have done in this bill is effectively assure that regardless of the merit and regardless of the wishes of the municipal councils or the school boards, where they have an annual allowance, that is going to be reduced to eleven-twelfths of what they otherwise would have got this year. I say the principle of this Legislature saying to those councils that they must do that in that way is the wrong principle.

Certainly if we are going to say that, sure, we are leaving the option with them to do as they like and the effect is what the parliamentary assistant is saying, that they can amend their bylaws, surely the government is putting those councils in the impossible position of doing anything other than exactly what it says in here. You know that; I know that; this Legislature knows that. You are taking away from them, in fact, in reality, the option of determining what remuneration they should get for those 11 months this year.

This may not be the largest municipal issue in Ontario—I suspect that it is not, and is a long way from it—but to me and my party, the principle which you are expressing in this bill, affecting the local councils in the one area where they collect every cent of it locally and where they are supposedly accountable locally, is taking that option away from them. That is something I don't want to do. I want to leave that autonomy with the local councils to determine, and so does my party.

As I said the other night on second reading of this bill, if the parliamentary assistant is concerned that some of them are going to keep the whole thing inadvertently, or because they think the public won't know, and if he really wants to advise them, then he can send a notice out to every municipality in the mail reminding them there is only an 11-month year as far as they are concerned this year, and they may want to consider making some change in the remuneration. But don't tell them this is the way they have to do it.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman I really didn't want to talk on the remuneration aspect but I wanted to follow up on what the member for St. George mentioned.

I hope the ministry will come out with some directive to municipal councils in relation to the fiscal year as opposed to the elected year because I am afraid municipal councils now think that since the month of December they did not expropriate those funds—those new members on council—as a result they would not have any responsibility towards council for the expenditure of those funds. I think the ministry should come out with some explicit instructions to municipal councils. I know I talked with a municipal councillor during the supper break and he was confused in relation to the point I raise here.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to be able to speak on this. I must apologize I was a few minutes late, due to another important function.

I feel the onus should be on the Legislature to have some kind of clarity in the legislation. Since this clarity was a little overlooked last fall when the bill was passed, I believe it is incumbent on the Legislature at this time to bring in that clarity, rather than to have 835 municipalities pass separate bylaws with respect to determining whether the municipal representatives should be paid on an 11 or 12 months' basis irrespective of the fact that they only serve for 11 months' which is something this Legislature should not permit. I do not believe that there should be this lack of clarity. I believe this Legislature should take the initiative and determine that the members on municipal councils should be paid for 11 months and 11 months only, because that is what they are going to be serving.

If we were to pass the amendment we would run the risk of municipalities not passing a bylaw in the interim period and then some members may very well be elected to councils and be reimbursed for 12 months for this year and then 12 months for the next year. In other words, they would be getting a double honorarium or double pay or double reimbursement for the month of December. I don't think we can run the risk of that happening irrespective of what the hon. member for Welland-Thorold says. As far as the municipalities are concerned I don't think they would see this as an infringement on their autonomous rights. I believe they would see this as some kind of guidance by the Legislature. As far as we are concerned on this side of the House we would not support the amendment, because it is important that there is clarity and that there is no doubt in the minds of the municipalities and in the minds of the Ontario electorate that any persons serving at the municipal level should be reimbursed for the extra month in December where they are not serving on a municipal council during December.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, first of all, may I start out by answering the query of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. May I say that, following the passage of the Municipal Elections Act legislation late last year, we have put out to the municipalities a copy of the revised statute, needless to say, along with a covering summary of all of the changes. We have had considerable correspondence with many municipalities relative to the questions that he has raised, along with some of the others that we are now trying to clarify through this amending bill.

One of the reasons for the haste of getting this particular amending legislation through at this time is so that we can prepare a final guideline for municipalities for the enactment and the procedures relating to this election, term of office, who can do what and what have you, as quickly as possible, because as we all know the municipal election procedures, clerically and clinically if you will, start very early in the year although the actual electioneering may be some months away. That's one of the reasons this legislation is here now, because we want to do, in complete clarity to the best of our ability, exactly what he has suggested. There is no doubt there is still some confusion and we hope most of this can be clarified through this legislation and through this other calendar of events, if you will, that we are preparing for the municipal councils and their staffs.

If I may work backwards, I would just like to offer my thanks to the hon. member for Waterloo North for sharing his views on our legislation and seeing it in a very rational and straightforward way, because that is exactly what we are trying to do. This particular section 1 comes about because we have been asked very specifically on numerous occasions by elected people in the field, not through the municipal associations—I don't think they, as far as I know, officially in any event, have really made a comment one way or another.

Mr. Swart: Name the municipalities, name them.

Mr. Ashe: Unofficially some of those same members, of course, have been some of the people who have inquired, either directly, in person, by telephone or in actual personal contact or by correspondence. I did not bring those with me tonight, they are quite numerous. You'll just have to take my word on that, but that's the case. I do want to say for sure that there is nothing through the municipal associations one way or another that I am aware of.

It really does disturb me to realize, or attempt to realize I guess is a better way of phrasing it, how the hon. member for Welland-Thorold can be so out of touch with the reality in the municipal scene. I would just have to assume that he's so many years away from it that he really isn't in touch with what's going on in that scene.

Mr. Renwick: Like six months.

Mr. Conway: Are you suggesting we send him back for a refresher course?

Mr. Kerrio: He hasn't been long away, but he's got a great memory.

Mr. Ashe: No not this one. That one.

Mr. Kerrio: I know who you're talking about.

Mr. Ashe: Well, he's longer than that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Ashe: In any event, how somebody can take the same set of facts, supposedly the same set of facts, and come up with the exact opposite conclusions, that's where I have to say that being out of touch with reality has to come into it. If there's anything in this Act it's section 1 that has been very specifically asked for, as I have mentioned before, in various many ways—

Mr. Breagh: But you don't know by whom.

Mr. Ashe: —by the municipal people. They said, "Spell it out. Make it clear. Make it clear exactly what our situation is during calendar year 1978. Spell it out. Is it 11 months? Is it 12? Do we pay 11 months in the old and start the new, or what have you?" So that's exactly what we're doing here, not in any way usurping the councils' authority—we all agree on that, it would appear—that they do have that authority and should continue to have that authority—to set their own remuneration. If they feel that they are hard done by in having eleven-twelfths of their annual remuneration, they have the full right and the full capabilities of changing their compensation bylaw publicly.

They're the ones who have to speak to their electorate, and that's fine. That's the way it should be. They can publicly change their remuneration. To use some specific examples, the $5,000—I don't know how the hon. member made it mechanically such a big chore—would change to roughly $5,450, if they wanted to pay themselves in 11 months what they would have got in 12. Let them do it publicly. Let them say they have earned their 12 months' remuneration in 11 months. If they feel they have, that's great. They have to speak to their electorate on November 13, not me or anybody on that side or that side or anywhere here.

So we fully concur in and support their right to do that, and encourage them to do it if they feel that they are hard done by. The actual reality of the situation, as we all know, is that 75 per cent of the council will be exactly the same come December 1 as it was on November 30. Last but not least, we're talking about a one-time situation, one time and one time only. It's not an ongoing thing that's going to happen every two years or three years, if the term of office changes at some future point in time.

It happens this year only, and this particular section 1 is to make it abundantly clear, as we have been asked to do by the same municipal people, "Just spell it out. Tell us what it is, what really we can legally do." Believe it or not, and although it was read out from quotes from Hansard the other evening that I stated it, some municipal people, either elected and/or appointed people, are unclear and really questioned the fact whether, if they had a remuneration bylaw that spoke about an annual allowance, they really had the present right of paying eleven-twelfths of that. They thought it had to be to pay out the whole thing.

I'm not belittling this particular situation. Many municipalities are small and don't have too much staff, they have many other more important items on their mind, and really just want something that tells them the way it is and how they can do it. Once again, that issue only arises in situations where you're talking about a per annum remuneration. It doesn't apply at all on your per diem because that won't change. It's exactly as it says, it's on a per diem rate, so I think the original section 1 as proposed is the right one. It's the one the municipal people as a very vast majority want as their guideline, and I would ask the committee and the House to support it in its present form and in effect defeat the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Conway: He won't take that lying down.

Mr. Swart: There are a few more comments which I'd like to make. I'm a bit puzzled by the comments of both the Liberal critic and the Conservative parliamentary assistant to the minister when they talk about the issue of clarity, and go to some lengths to explain that municipalities had contacted them and they had been in contact with a great many people about clarifying the situation. The situation now, I think, is quite clear. They can explain the situation; the municipalities now can take the 12 months, if they deem that advisable, the 12-months' pay, or they can change their bylaw any way they like.

That's quite simple. It's not a question of clarification at all, in this bill; it's a question of telling them what they must do. That's the issue, it's not clarification. You can clarify the present situation, you don't have to come down with a mandatory law that says the Legislature says, "you are going to go this way." At the present time the option is there.

Mr. Ashe: Eyewash.

Mr. Swart: You're saying, "you're going to go this way." It's not a question of clarity.

I was also a little bit concerned when the minister said or left the impression with the Legislature in the recent debate on this second reading, that the municipalities had asked for this or there was some sort of general support from the municipalities. I suggest to him that I have done as much checking as he has on this and you'd find the majority of municipalities would be in favour of the amendment and not the Act as it now states.

I don't think you should try to confuse things on the first section. I'm not asking that the whole section be deleted. I don't think you should try to confuse the first six or seven lines, with which we agree, and which are necessary for the purpose of clarity, legal clarity, with the last few lines, which are not for clarity but at mandatory order.

The parliamentary assistant may, if he wishes, conclude that after being out of the municipal field for two-and-a-half years after being there for 21 years, that I am also touched with municipal matters and the municipal council and so on. I would suggest to him that I may have stayed in better touch with him during those two-and-a-half years than he has in the nine months that he has been in this Legislature to date.

Mr. Conway: There is one thing for sure, there isn't a radio station that you are not in touch with.

Mr. Swart: Finally, the member for Durham West made the comment that it is the councillors who have to speak to their electorate. I think that those were his exact words, they have the responsibility to the electorate. But what you are saying by this legislation is, "We have decided that we will not make you independently accountable to them, you can't make your own choice, we're setting up the rules of the game."

I'm prepared to see them accountable. They are an accountable group. They are close to the electorate; they're so close that in almost every case, in fact in every case, they can make the right decision on their own without being told by this Legislature what they have to do.

Mr. Ashe: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, my answer is eyewash.

An hon. member: The best speech of the night.

Mr. Renwick: Equally briefly, Mr. Chairman, how long is the Tory government going to dictate to the municipal councils in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Turner: Nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moved—

Mr. Kerrio: Dispense.

Mr. Renwick: No, do not dispense.

Mr. Deputy Chairman:—that subsection 2 of section 9 of the Act as set out in section 1 of the bill be amended by striking out all the words following: "1978" in the sixth line.

Those in favour of the amendment please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Shall this be stacked until the end of the bill?

Mr. Gregory: That's chauvinism now and you know it.

Mr. Warner: It's called leadership.

Mr. Ashe: That's called time-wasting, you're good at it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. Are there any further amendments or discussion on this bill?

Mr. Swart: I don't have any further amendments, but I do want to speak on section 2. If the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) wants to speak on this section further I'll yield.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are you on this section, Mr. Renwick?

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, we would agree to stack the vote on amendment until the end of the debate.

Amendment stacked.

On section 2:

Mr. Swart: Again, Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak on section 2 of the bill at any length—

Interjections.

Mr. Swart:—for a very good reason. Because when this was debated on second reading, the parliamentary assistant indicated that my proposal made some sense and he is willing to accept it. Perhaps again I should read from Instant Hansard of that debate:

"Mr. Ashe: In any event, as I was saying, there is one part of his argument that I do buy."

Mr. Ashe: One part.

Mr. Swart: "That is to possibly further clarify the clause which is now section 2 of the bill: 'To further clarify at the beginning shall be signed by at least 10 electors, either whose names are entered in the preliminary list of electors'—and there it probably should be clarified—'and are entitled to vote in the election to such office . . . ' So that part of the amendment I think is reasonable." And he left the impression with the House that he would be willing to accept that.

I was told afterwards though by the member that he had changed his mind and was not going to accept it after discussing it with his staff. I guess he has some obligation to tell this House why he has changed his mind within a few minutes after making it clear that he felt that it was a reasonable amendment.

I am concerned about this section of the bill because on the one hand it enables people who are not eligible voters in the municipality to sign nomination papers.

Mrs. Campbell: No, no.

Mr. Swart: Oh yes, there is no question about that. The clause which is there says: "shall be signed by at least 10 electors, either whose names are entered in the preliminary list of electors." The preliminary list of electors is not the final list of electors. You can have people on there, and eventually do, who could be removed by the court of revision which is being held afterwards.

Therefore, they would not be eligible electors.

We know that it's possible; it happens. Perhaps the whole side of a street will be put in a certain ward. Those people could sign it and once they have signed, even though they are not in the ward, even though they are not Canadian citizens, they would then be eligible to be nominated. That would have to then be accepted and nobody could challenge it.

The other evening when we were debating this on second reading, I pointed out that whether we look at the Municipal Act back over the years, whether we look at the provincial Elections Act or whether we look at the federal Elections Act, in no case can anybody sign a nomination paper. The words are there, "who are eligible to vote in the election."

So I say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the parliamentary assistant that what we have here for the first time in the history of municipal government in this province, or provincial government, or federal government, the opportunity for a person to be a legal nominator without being eligible to vote in a municipal election. I say to you that this is a principle that I find difficult, very difficult to accept.

I know why the minister changed his mind—or the parliamentary assistant. I think likely the rest of us do.

Mrs. Campbell: You were right the first time. The minister changed his mind.

Mr. Swart: The minister changed his mind and decided not to go along with this because the municipal clerks, or at least some of them—and again I would ask him to tell the assembly whether it was the association or some that he had discussed it with—decided that they did not want the responsibility of having to determine whether those people are eligible electors. Of course, in the Municipal Elections Act that we now have it states very clearly that the onus is on the candidate to deposit a valid nomination paper.

So, in fact, even if this section were changed to make them eligible, there would really be no legal obligation on the part of the clerks of the municipalities to assure without any doubt whatsoever—which may be somewhat difficult—that the person is an eligible voter; that still rests. But the way it is now, it makes it possible, knowingly, for a person to nominate somebody else for a public office when they cannot vote in that election. I say again that is something which I find contradictory to our whole parliamentary and democratic process.

The other section of this requires that a person must sign an affidavit they are entitled to vote in the election to such office if their name is not on the preliminary list of electors. Well I wouldn't have objected too much to that being on there, but the way it exists now can just be this, and there can be no question about this, that we now can have nomination papers submitted nominating a candidate to office with 10 or more names on it. One or more of those may not be eligible to vote—may not be an eligible voter—but the name will be counted, and an eligible voter, whose name may have been missed on the first round, will not, his name will be struck off, and he will not be entitled to nominate that candidate. I say there has to be something of a contradiction, an anachronism, in legislation which permits this to happen, and anyone observing this Act will recognize that it does permit that to happen.

I feel this section of the Act should have been amended. I realize the clerks would like the way it is because it takes total responsibility off their shoulders. I am one of those who normally support municipal people, but it comes to the fact that—

Mr. Renwick: Mel, we could be out on the hustings tomorrow if you will sit down.

Mr. Swart: —the electors of the municipalities will find themselves having to vote for candidates who by all previous practice have not been legally nominated.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what all this discussion is about a non-amendment. If there is an amendment, then I think we should have received a copy of it. If there is a strong feeling that change should be made, then I think that amendment should be before us; and we have no amendment. I am at a loss to see why there is all this discussion on something we don't have before us; nobody has moved a change in the existing clause.

Personally, I think the clause reads well the way it is; I fail to see why we should welcome confusion.

Mr. Ruston: Organized confusion.

Mr. Epp: Right now we feel that the onus should be on the candidates to make sure that the people who sign their nomination papers are eligible voters, and the clerk has to assume this, so why we would open up a particular part of this bill and leave some doubt in the minds of the clerks and those candidates running for office, and then try to clear up the doubt in some other part of the Act where the onus is on the candidates to make sure that everybody is eligible, I fail to see; I just fail to see why this confusion should be in the bill itself. I think we should leave the clause as presently constituted and support it.

Mr. Ashe: As was indicated, we don't really have an amendment to speak to, although the hon. member for Welland-Thorold the other night indicated a possible amendment and in my remarks I did indicate that I saw some merit in part of what he was saying. I think the word "part" was the important one. I was taking it—I'll be very frank—in a different context in terms of clarity than, in fact, legal counsel informed me later would really have happened. Even that portion of the amendment which sounded reasonable to me as a non-lawyer became unreasonable in the lawyer's sense in terms of clarifying procedure for the clerks.

Mind you, that's not unusual when you think about lawyers versus laymen. I think the amendment, which is section 2 of the bill, now does exactly what we wanted it to do, make it very clear, as is already identified in other parts of the legislation, that the onus is on the candidate and the onus is off the clerk in the context of time.

The main problem would be with at least part of the proposed amendment that was being suggested by the hon. member for Welland-Thorold, in that it would put the onus on the clerk. In a large municipality such as Toronto, or any of the boroughs, if nominations closed today and he had to certify them by tomorrow, he in effect would have to have an army out verifying all of the nominators on nomination papers. If you're checking one, two or 10, that's fine; but if you're checking 600 candidates, which is possibly the case in Toronto, they would actually have to be going out and verifying that so and so was an eligible elector in such and such a ward and so on. I think this would be an unbearable obligation on the mind of the clerk before he could certify the validity of the various nominators.

I think last but not least, as we've talked about many times, and it was discussed quite adequately the other evening, is the fact that virtually without exception—and I say virtually because there are exceptions to everything—people who are submitting nomination papers don't put in the bare minimum. They don't put 10; they put 12, 15, 20, 30 and leave lots of room for possible error or possible removal of a qualified nominator. I think the present wording as proposed in section 2 gives all of the opportunities needed to have adequate people eligible to sign nomination papers, and yet still with the threat that they may subsequently be proven to be ineligible on the final list.

As far as furnishing the affidavit, I can't see that particular part of the discussion at all. The affidavit, again, is saying, "If you weren't on a preliminary list, but you know you're an eligible elector you go ahead and make an affidavit on the prescribed form that will be provided to the candidate when he picks up his nomination papers." Then once again the onus is on the candidate and his nominator to say, "I'm not on a preliminary list. I'm eligible. I make the statement that I'm eligible," and that clarifies it for everybody. It's clear then in the mind of the candidate and it's clear in the mind of the clerk when he's certifying those particular nomination papers. I think section 2 is adequate right now.

Mrs. Campbell: I have a question. I must say that prior to the statements of the parliamentary assistant I thought the provision was adequate, but as a result of what he said I'm completely confused. Is it not a fact that in the previous municipal election provisions we did have the provision of eligibility to vote in the election? In view of what the parliamentary assistant has said, could he give any direction to this House or any information as to where the clerk of the city of Toronto, for example, faced difficulties in certification? It would seem to me that on this one, since the requirement for certification is, I assume, still with us, he is certifying without knowledge, and that is surely far worse than with knowledge.

Mr. Ashe: The big difference between, let's call it the "old legislation"—prior 1977 legislation—and the new one, is in the time procedures. Previously, the clerk had available to him the final lists and, therefore, it was no problem to certify the validity of the nominators. Now, because of the compressed time-frame for the earlier election date, he in fact will not have the final lists as such, and yet the time-frame can't wait. So that is why we are saying he goes by the preliminary list, and by affidavit if somebody isn't on a preliminary list but in fact should be. So there still is onus, if you will—it is not willy-nilly—for him to make a certification. But there is no doubt he is not able any longer to use what would be referred to as the final list, as he used to be able to do prior to the 1977 legislation; and that is strictly because of the compressing of the time-frame for the earlier election.

Mrs. Campbell: If I may pursue this, I am still puzzled. We are still requiring the clerk to certify.

Mr. Ashe: Yes.

Mrs. Campbell: To what, may I ask, is he certifying?

Mr. Ashe: He is certifying the eligibility of at least 10 nominators on the nomination papers, based on their inclusion on his preliminary list of electors. That is number one, which I would suggest in 99.9 per cent of the cases will be satisfied right there; or in that other 0.1 of one per cent—and I pick those figures out of the air, I admit—an adequate declaration by oath of other qualified electors who are not on the preliminary list would take care of that.

Mrs. Campbell: So it is a fact that if someone is on the preliminary list and is not in fact an eligible voter—and that happens very frequently in the city of Toronto, I may tell you; I am not alone, I think, in this House tonight in verifying that—then the clerk certifies; and on the basis of that certification that person, by the wording here, is duly nominated whether or not there is eligibility to vote? That is what I take as the question.

Once the certification is made it is made on the basis of the preliminary list, which may be in error; but that would stand, as I see it; and I hadn't appreciated the effect of it. Once the clerk certifies that then that person or those persons are deemed to be eligible to vote whether they can or not.

Mr. Ashe: In the sense of qualification to the nomination, yes. Subsequently, as you say, I am sure; there are circumstances.

Mrs. Campbell: I will lay odds there are far more than you think.

Mr. Ashe: I understand the numbers; but I think you are putting those numbers, which are still relatively small to the total, as being the ones that would be on the nomination papers. What I am saying is that in virtually all cases they are not going to be anyway; and/or there are many more than sufficient nominators to take care of the 10 even if subsequently some of them prove to be ineligible.

Even if they are certified on the nomination papers it does not in itself say that they are going to vote. Yes, it has qualified them to be a nominator, but they may subsequently lose their right to vote if in fact they were not qualified.

On the other side of the coin, as you well know from your experiences, you have people who are not on the preliminary list for various reasons who in fact are qualified to be electors: and that is where the affidavit comes in. With the affidavit, again, they then automatically become eligible nominators, and obviously through the normal procedures of revision, and now, as you know, under the new Act right up to the close of the polls on voting day, would be quite eligible to vote in the election. But, again, if you take a very specific isolated circumstance—and I admit that in theory it is possible to have 10 ineligible voters as the only 10 on your nomination paper—that what you say, in the strictest terms, could happen. But if the hon. members will recall the debate during consideration of the legislation in the late fall of 1977, there was much more concern expressed by all sides of the House, as I recall, to make sure that somebody's nomination wasn't disqualified through inadvertency or through that kind of technicality, if you will—because somebody they took as being bona fide electors proved to not be. So it was felt, in the case of that judgement decision, that it should be on the part of qualifying the candidate rather than disqualifying him.

Mr. Swart: Of course, the member for St. George is absolutely correct. It has now been admitted that perhaps it is even worse than the terms in which he put it, because the clerk no longer certifies. If the clerk knows one, two or three of those are not eligible voters under this Act, he must accept that nomination in any event; and unless there is an affidavit covering the one who is not on the voters' list, even though he is eligible, he may not accept it. It makes it all very clear and very simple for the clerk. But there is a very real principle involved. For the first time, you are going to permit people who are not eligible voters to nominate candidates for office.

I would point out that the parliamentary assistant was not completely correct in what he said. He said the clerk had an easy situation before that because the voters' list was complete and he could simply check the voters' list. Of course, the court of revision was held; but if somebody was on there and entitled to vote, even though they weren't on the final list, it states under section 33 they are eligible to vote and entitled to nominate a candidate.

Two people have asked why an amendment wasn't moved. First of all, I never said we were going to move an amendment to this section. I said there would be one or two amendments made, the first one very definite. But we are quite happy with the section as it is in the Act, the one that was passed just last fall. It states a very clear principle. It says:

"A person may be nominated as a candidate for an office by filing in the office of the clerk, on the days and during the hours specified in subsection 2 of section 35, a nomination paper in prescribed form which shall be signed by at least 10 electors whose names are entered or entitled to be entered under section 33 in the polling list of the electors entitled to vote in elections to such office."

All they have to be is entitled to be on the voters' list or entitled to vote. That's what it says in the Act.

If there is concern that we have made no amendment here, all we have to do is vote against this section of the Act and we've got the specific wording which says that people who are eligible electors may vote under the present section.

That is the reason you have no amendment in here, Mr. Chairman. It is not necessary when the Act reads as it does. It's the same, really, as it has been for the last 10, 20, 30, 40, 50 or 100 years. It's the same as the provincial Act is today. It's the same as the federal Act. There is the onus on the returning officers there to satisfy themselves they are eligible voters.

In this section, even if somebody found out after an election that there were not sufficient eligible voters on that nomination paper—

Mrs. Campbell: It wouldn't matter.

Mr. Swart: —it wouldn't matter. It deprives a candidate who may be defeated the right to challenge the validity of a nomination. There is a very real principle involved in this, I suggest.

Mr. Ashe: How can somebody get so far removed from the realities of the political scene that we all go through?

Mr. Charlton: You've said that already.

Mr. Ashe: What the hon. member has just said, is that if somebody gets defeated by his peers at the polls in the normal electoral procedure that he should still have the right to challenge that election because maybe there was the misuse of a name inadvertently on the nomination papers.

Mr. Swart: Or five, or ten.

Mr. Ashe: What he's saying is that it's the nominators who decide the election not the electorate that he or she is appearing before. I've never heard such ridiculous arguments in all my life; it's nit-picking.

Mr. Renwick: Eyewash—is that what you called it?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Ashe: One other point of clarity, Mr. Chairman. Let's not kid ourselves; under the old procedure or the new, somebody could be challenged on their right and eligibility to vote. It could be right up to and including polling day, that really hasn't changed. If anything, we now make it easier to be eligible to vote, but you could be disqualified or challenged on your right to vote before as you can now.

So let's really put the whole thing into perspective and appreciate the job that the candidate has to do, but also appreciate the job that the clerk has to do, particularly with his compressed time-frame.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall section 2 carry? Those in favour of section 2 carrying will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

The vote is stacked.

Sections 3 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment on section 7. Both of the opposition critics were provided with this minor amendment earlier in the week. It is really a correction of a typographical error in the original bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section 7: "Subsection 3 of section 117 of the said Act is amended by striking out the figure 104 in the third line and inserting in lieu thereof the figure 106," and that the present sections 7, 8 and 9 of the bill be renumbered as sections 8, 9 and 10 respectively.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, on section 7 as it stood originally, now section 8 with this amendment, I thought perhaps I should bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant that I thought perhaps maybe further consideration should be given to the section of that Act to say that when a liquor plebiscite is being held in a municipality, it should be held during the election year of the municipality.

I had an involvement with the local election and the plebiscite held in the city of Port Colborne and I can tell you it caused a number of difficulties throughout the community, particularly in an off-election year of a municipality. To me the Liquor Control Board can almost call a plebiscite at their wish, and I suggest that is costly at times to a municipality, since they have to go out and prepare the voters' list. I feel that where they're moving or having a plebiscite from a dry to a wet area, perhaps it should be held during municipal election year. It won't cost anyone or any particular party that's interested in a plebiscite one cent more, but it does provide some assistance to the municipality, and we don't have to call for a plebiscite during an off-year for municipal election. Hopefully, the minister and the parliamentary assistant could bring in an amendment some other time saying that a plebiscite shall be held during a municipal election year if it is requested by certain parties.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments?

Mr. Ashe: May I just say something on that particular issue? I appreciate some of the arguments that were put forward about creating elections at inopportune times. It is normally the policy to have the elections, of course, at election time.

I would appreciate it if the hon. member would just leave it with us for consideration and check the various ramifications. There may be others that I definitely am not aware of and maybe the minister isn't. If it proves to be no great problem and is feasible we'd be quite prepared to bring it forward as a future amendment to the Act.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall sections 8 and 9 stand as part of the bill?

Sections 8 and 9 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: We have two amendments before the committee.

The committee divided on Mr. Swart's amendment to section 1, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 15, nays 34.

Section 1 agreed to.

The committee divided on the motion that section 2 stand as part of the bill, which was approved on the following vote:

Ayes 33; nays 16.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill 30, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with certain amendments.

CITY OF TIMMINS-PORCUPINE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 5, An Act to amend The City of Timmins-Porcupine Act, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Renwick: What do you mean, Waterloo North?

Mr. Speaker: As opposed to South Waterloo.

Mr. Davidson: There is no such riding, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp: No such riding as Waterloo South?

Mr. Davidson: That's right.

Mr. Epp: Must be Cambridge.

Mr. Davidson: Cambridge is an entirety unto itself.

Mr. Warner: We're not sure about Waterloo North either.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill 5, An Act to amend The City of Timmins-Porcupine Act, 1972. We would be pleased to support this bill since it's going to provide for the minister the opportunity to divide the city into wards and, secondly, to determine how many representatives are to represent each of the wards and, thirdly, for the Ontario Municipal Board to make changes in the ward system from time to time and also to determine what those boundaries should be.

I believe this makes good sense since the city of Timmins-Porcupine would like to have these amendments and there are a number of municipalities in the province of Ontario that have wanted to be divided into wards in the past and have been permitted by legislation to do so. This city should also have that opportunity. We would be glad to support this bill as it's constituted.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill, too. It's a perfectly good bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Why are you supporting it?

Mr. Warner: First one in 20 years.

Mr. Swart: It's a good thing that it is and it's going to get unanimous support because I noticed again, as last year, that the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) is not present in the House to promote the Timmins bills when they've been before this House. The former member was always in the House when matters concerning Timmins were being discussed.

Mr. Turner: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's why he's the former member—you sit here long enough, you get unemployed.

[9:30]

Mr. Swart: I have one question to ask the parliamentary assistant with regard to this bill, and that is why the wording on the section with regard to the Ontario Municipal Board making decisions on the ward boundaries doesn't conform to the Municipal Act. There is quite a variation between the procedures here and under the Municipal Act for other municipalities; although the end result may be the same, there still is this great difference.

I have to say quite frankly that I support this bill because I believe it is better than the Municipal Act. Under the Municipal Act as the parliamentary assistant should know, section 13 provides that when a municipality is incorporated or erected, the municipal board shall divide the city into wards. It provides that the wards may be changed or abolished upon a vote of the municipality. That is the Municipal Act. This Act provides that the Municipal Board has power to do both upon the request of the municipality or upon the request of the ratepayers.

I think this actually is superior in a sense to what is in the Municipal Act, so I would ask, why the difference? And if this is superior, as I believe it is, does the parliamentary assistant or the minister intend to bring in amendments to the Municipal Act to make this simple procedure apply there?

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might answer the questions as well as responding to what was expressed previously by the hon. member for Waterloo North.

First of all, for the record and for clarification, I would like to say there was a slight misunderstanding of what this bill is doing. It is not changing wards or establishing wards in that sense.

Mr. Swart: I know that but you had better explain it.

Mr. Ashe: I said I was responding to the hon. member for Waterloo North.

The original bill in 1972 established the wards for that election. It also said that the wards would be for 1972 election and the 1974 election. In fact, it did not really say that the same boundaries and the same wards would also be defined in the 1976 election. Retroactively, this is saying 1976 was the way you did it, which was exactly the same way as in 1974 and 1972. It also says it shall remain thus until such time as it is changed in the normal course of events by application to the Ontario Municipal Board.

Getting to the question and query of the hon. member for Welland-Thorold, may I point out to him that, in fact, anything that would go before the board would still be handled in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the Municipal Act, which is exactly what it says. But under subsection (4b) (a), (b) and (c), it is really just summarizing, if you will, in non-legal terms, as I would define them, what section 13 does and the various things that can be done by the OMB in terms of redividing the wards, altering or dissolving the wards or carrying the composition of the council. But it specifically says: ". . . or upon the petition of electors in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the Municipal Act, the Ontario Municipal Board may, by order . . ." and it goes on to summarize.

I would suggest that although we would be very happy to take under advisement his particular comments relative to clarity and ease, for the time being section 13 of the Municipal Act would still apply relative to how the petition to the OMB would happen and how the OMB would handle it.

Motion agreed to.

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 5, An Act to amend the City of Timmins-Porcupine Act, 1972.

SHORELINE PROPERTY ASSISTANCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of the Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 6, An Act to amend the Shoreline Property Assistance Act.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, this bill is brought in to amend the Shoreline Property Assistance Act. The original bill was brought in in 1973, I believe, when we had big storms and so forth. One day the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) and myself had a special debate on high water and shoreline protection, and later the government brought in this bill to allow money to be lent to the municipalities, where residents could borrow the money at a reasonable rate of interest to secure their properties from storms.

One of the things that has been happening since is that some of the people wanted to repay their loans and have them paid off, and since the debentures were sold on a 20-year basis they were not able to pay them off. There has been some representation made by some municipalities. I have a couple here from the Haldimand-Norfolk region and another one from the town of Dunnville all addressed to Mr. Gordon Miller. I had some townships in my own areas that had requests from residents who wanted to be able to pay off their debentures.

Now that it can be paid at any time within the 20-year period—that's my understanding of it—this allows some people who wish to have their debt taken off the property to do so. It has not really been used a great deal in some of the areas but it certainly has served a real need for a number of people who were suffering a great deal from the high water in 1973 and 1974—mainly in 1973 when the damage was done.

So we support this bill wholeheartedly, because we have made representation to the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in the last year or so with regard to this matter and we are very happy he is bringing this amendment in.

Mr. Deans: I wanted to speak in favour of the bill too. The changes may be necessary; who can tell? I'm not about to make a judgement about them; I assume the ministry has looked into them. The thing that worries me about this bill is that while this takes care of the situation which arose some time ago, and which undoubtedly will arise again, it surely would make more sense if we were to take some time and take a look at what kind of action could be taken in order to avoid the continued repetition of the flooding and damage.

There is no point in providing people with access to loans in order that they can put back together that which is washed away periodically, and that is exactly what is wrong with this kind of legislation. It is nice to assist people after the catastrophe has arisen, but since we know full well that that catastrophe will arise again it's about time that we paid some attention to undertaking some public works on the shorelines of the province of Ontario in order to try to assure ourselves and those individuals that the kind of erosion that takes place during these periods of catastrophe will not occur year after year.

If you take a look at this year, for example, it would have required very little change in the temperatures in the province of Ontario to have resulted in yet another similar high water situation. We could have been faced today with exactly the same thing that we were faced with a couple of years ago. This kind of legislation doesn't help. It's too late. This only helps to put it back; this doesn't help to stop it.

I remember the debate that my colleague from Essex—wherever-it-is, who is no longer with us, told us he took part in. The debate was aimed not only at getting assistance for the people on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario and in other parts, but also at trying to find a solution to the problem. If the members will recall there was discussion about the possibility of using some of the excess stone that was available from some of the quarrying operations to build along certain parts of the lakeshore berms or whatever you call those things that go out into the water that would help to break the surf and therefore help to avoid the kind of erosion and catastrophe that overtook so many people—I think it is now three years ago.

I want to say to the hon. member that of course we'll support the bill, but it is time that the government took a serious look at the protection of shorelines. The province of Ontario is lagging behind the northern states that adjoin the other sides of the lakes we're talking about. There are major works being undertaken by a number of US municipalities at the behest of and with the financial assistance of the northern states in order to protect their shorelines.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sure the hon. member would want to talk about what is in the bill.

Mr. Deans: Yes, I do indeed. Therefore it would be better to spend the money that is allocated for use within this bill for the purposes that would better serve the long-term interests of the province of Ontario. I hope the minister and his parliamentary assistant will give some thought to that because it might even be a project that would create employment. We could use it.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support shown for the legislation. In fact, it does provide more flexibility to those people in those municipalities who wish to repay the loans, all or in part, prior to the original maturity date which is involved with 20-year debentures. That flexibility has been asked for and is now being used.

A couple of other points of interest: There have been approximately 465 loans made under the edict of the shoreline property assistance legislation. These have generally varied from $3,000 to $5,000. So obviously they've been put to good use.

I don't agree that the loans have been provided and used just for the purpose of having repairs done to property, albeit that was part of the original basis on which the money was available. It also was for future protection and that's where some of the money has in fact been invested.

As for what the government has done and is doing, I think there are two different areas that have to be investigated. Number one, many areas of the province, particularly along our immediate shoreline, are under the scrutiny of and, if you will, indirect control of the elements by—to the degree that is possible—conservation authorities which have been putting more and more of their emphasis on shoreline assistance, shoreline protection and, more particularly, flood control, albeit this is more upstream than in the lake proper. I appreciate that. But there can be flooding and erosion and so on upstream as well as in the lakes, albeit the elements are much more severe in the Great Lakes.

More particularly with the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority there have been many areas of assistance along the Lake Ontario waterfront, but with particular provisos. Again, one has to weigh the pros and the cons of how far the public purse is expected to pay to protect private property.

Mr. Deans: There is an answer to that too, by the way.

Mr. Ashe: I would have to suggest that most people who choose—for all reasons, of which many are very positive—to live along waterfronts, whatever they may be, make that decision consciously and hopefully agree to take the pluses and minuses of that particular decision. In most cases, they are pluses. On occasion, they are minuses. How much can the public purse pay to protect those properties?

Mr. Deans: How much do you pay now for storm sewers in municipalities to protect property?

Mr. Ashe: Yes, but those same people pay for those storm sewers.

Mr. Deans: That's right. Everyone in the municipality pays for it and everyone in the province of Ontario has access to the shoreline, if you want to make it that way.

Mr. Ashe: We're talking about the protection of private property, when we're talking about—

Mr. Deans: We're not.

Mr. Ashe: We are.

Mr. Deans: We are not!
[9:45]

Mr. Ashe: When we're talking about public property, the government and the conservation authorities have made great strides and even many private properties can be protected, and can take advantage of these programs if they wish to deed their landholdings under water—in other words, their water lots—to the public, namely the conservation authority, they will get the same advantage of whatever works are in their particular area.

Mr. Deans: That is the wrong forum, that's right.

Mr. Ashe: I might say that some have taken advantage of this along the Lake Ontario shoreline. But on the basis of equity, I frankly don't think we can expect the public purse to feel that it's bottomless in terms of expenditures to protect private property. Of course, that's the always overriding consideration. I really think this is somewhat removed from the bill but I've attempted—at least in a very small way—to respond to the concerns of the hon. member for Wentworth. I don't think anybody belittles what he has said, and he acknowledges the concern that everybody shares. Usually it is only highlighted in the event of a disaster. But I think we all have to be mindful of the public purse and how far it can be dipped into to protect private property.

In summary, I think what this particular legislation does is give what has been requested by municipalities and people who have benefitted by this legislation the right to prepay their loans that was unavailable under the original legislation as it was enacted.

Bill 6 agreed to.

Ordered for third reading.

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Conway: It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Peterborough had the floor.

Mr. Ashe: I think they are digging him up; if I may have the indulgence of the House for a moment, I think he'll be here.

Interjections.

Mr. Ashe: That was a very poor use of words.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure I rise to participate in the budget debate this evening. Spring is in the air, Pierre Trudeau is preparing to sell the nation another 10 years of Liberal temporizing, and the hon. Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. McKeough) finds himself contemplating yet again whether to hold a series of economic classes for the opposition.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could examine the budget with a bit more discipline than has been evidenced over the last few weeks. Judging by policy alternatives advanced by the opposition, it seems safe to say that they are conversant with the concept of progressivity in revenue generation, an important aspect of equity to be sure, but their difficulty with the concept of a full employment norm, coupled with their utter ignorance of the impact of revenue elasticity changes over the past few years, lead me to believe, Mr. Speaker, that this government's difficulties do not relate so much to policy formation as they do to communication.

Interjections.

Mr. Turner: When the Treasurer of Ontario released the Ontario tax study number 15—

Mr. Conway: Over $1 million deficit is lack of communication.

Mr. Turner: —Reassessing the Scope of Fiscal Policy in Canada, a few short weeks before the budget, members on this side of the House felt confident that the opposition would understand it as the foundation for a new and more enlightened approach to fiscal policy—

Mr. Conway: Is that the speech McCaffrey rejected?

Mr. Turner: —not only in Ontario, but hopefully throughout Canada. Instead, it seems that the connection has not been made at all, so let me make the connection here tonight, by touching briefly on the substantial issues of government debt and unemployment. While these issues have been clouded recently by a lot of heavy-handed emotionalism, they are at core predominantly technical issues which must be approached technically despite their human implications.

Mr. Conway: Kealey gets paid 30 grand for that drivel.

Mr. Turner: Tax study 15 stated, and I quote, "even with a return to full employment, both the province and the federal government are locked into substantial deficits . . . the potential for self-financing macro-stabilization policies does not exist and there is no fast, easy route to regaining full employment in Canada."

Mr. Conway: What's a macro-stabilization policy?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the member for Renfrew North is the next speaker, not the present speaker.

Mr. Turner: These interlocking statements are not easy to deal with and perhaps that is just the point. We have been so inundated with yesterday's wisdom that it appears our government's real task in the short term is to communicate forcefully today's realities. When, for example, public debt is casually discussed, all sorts of highly imperfect analogies are drawn to the moralistic virtues of private individuals living within their means. For the record I want to state the obvious, Mr. Speaker, that public debt produces public assets, and that, as the conference board puts it, "the extinguishing of public debt also extinguishes the assets as well."

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, don't let Darcy hear this. It's terrible. What private debt produces public assistance?

Mr. Turner: This acquisition of public assets and debt at one stage of a province's development and extinguishing of both the debt and the assets—

Mr. Lawlor: It's terrifying.

Mr. Turner: —at later stages, is a much-maligned but fundamental contributor to our growth.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Some lefty wrote that.

Mr. Turner: No. As far as unemployment is concerned, Mr. Speaker, our government has recognized, as I have quoted, "the potential for self-financing macro-stabilization policies does not exist and there is no fast, easy route to regaining full employment in Canada." Let me put it another way—

Mr. Lawlor: You have done that twice.

Mr. Turner: I know, I hope it sank in.

Mr. Lawlor: It did the first time.

Mr. Turner: Good, I'm glad.

The idea being expressed in some quarters is that we should be offering revenue concessions such as a retail sales tax cut to stimulate the economy—

Mr. Lawlor: That is fatuous.

Mr. Turner: —and that in turn this stimulation would yield enough additional provincial income tax revenue to pay for the original tax cut—

Mr. Lawlor: Well, it's the bankruptcy of the Liberal mind.

Mr. Turner: —while substantially decreasing unemployment.

Just a few years ago this idea may have been reasonable, when the elasticity of personal income tax was considerably higher, but today it is unreasonable and unworkable.

Mr. Lawlor: You are the best speaker I have heard in a long time.

Mr. Turner: It is also unreasonable to suggest that any of our structural difficulties can best be resolved in a climate of crisis and distrust. I want now to bring to the attention of the House the differing approaches that were used in confronting economic problems in two different instances in this province.

Mr. Lawlor: Both Tories.

Mr. Turner: No, not necessarily.

One difficulty was the Inco experience of layoffs caused by the soft world market. Despite the enormous media saturation of the issue, the sensational treatment it received at the hands of the opposition, and the extensive review it received here through committee, it is still legitimate to ask whether the intended beneficiaries of this treatment, the workers themselves, have really been any better served.

I would like to contrast that experience with an event that received little attention at the time in the Toronto media and failed to achieve the status of a cause célèbre within the opposition ranks, but managed somehow to be resolved successfully nonetheless.

The story concerns a company that operates in Peterborough, the Outboard Marine Corporation of Canada, and its decision last June to discontinue production of the Pioneer chain-saw line. If the politics of crisis management had intervened at that point it is likely that that would have been the end of the story, as well as the beginning. Fortunately, the theme of all our efforts was participation. City council participated by approving funding for a feasibility study of an alternative to closing the plant.

Mr. Reid: Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. Turner: Our own government, in cooperation with the federal government, participated by exploring rapidly and co-operatively complex mechanisms for financial assistance. And the workers co-operated equally, by equity participation in the new Pioneer Chain Saw Corporation Inc.

Mr. Lawlor: You're darn right. The workers will save you yet.

Mr. Turner: —and by agreeing to a formula in which they would receive lower wage rates in exchange for a profit-sharing arrangement.

Mr. Lawlor: Where is your entrepreneurial system now?

Mr. Turner: That's where it is—that's where it's at.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, it's in the hands of the workers.

Mr. Turner: I am not pretending that our spirit of co-operation created an unqualified success, because it did not. And I cannot predict what the world market will be like for chain-saws in the years to come; I cannot do that either.

Interjections.

Mr. Turner: The important thing for Peterborough is that we participated effectively as a provincial government, not by resisting the realities but by accepting them and then getting on with the task of finding reasonable approaches. That is the situation with the Treasurer's budget generally—

Mr. Lawlor: Not at all. Just the opposite.

Mr. Turner: Many tax increases are really only realignments necessitated by the changing real value of our dollar.

Mr. Warner: What utter nonsense.

Mr. Lawlor: You know this is an anomaly; totally exceptional.

Mr. Turner: And in the instance of health care we have accepted the reality that the people of Ontario have utilized the fine system—at an unprecedented rate.

Mr. Warner: You don't know how to run the thing.

Mr. Turner: Our real concern now is not so much with the posturing about progressivity as it is with getting a handle on health-care expenditure increases. We can talk forever about the fairest way to pay the bill, but the truth is that if the bill is too large, there is no such thing as a fair way to pay for it.

Mr. Warner: No other province has the problem—

Mr. Turner: And for those who would argue that OHIP premiums are unfair, I would say this—

Mr. Warner: —no one; no other province has the problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Turner: —the cost of the health bill skyrocketed when premiums were frozen for five years.

Mr. Warner: You should be frozen for five years.

Mr. Turner: It was those premiums and not the new ones that have resulted in hardships for some Ontarians by increasing the bill we must all pay one way or the other. To suggest that we freeze premiums again convinces me that some people learn nothing from history.

Mr. Warner: If you learned from history, you wouldn't have survived at Runnymede; they'd have run you through.

Mr. Turner: Our government is capable of learning. Unlike our federal counterparts, we have learned to streamline the operations of government; we have learned to reduce our claim on the economy; we have learned to reduce regional disparities by effective and selective participation in troubled sectors, and we have presented a budget that carries our insights over into clear policy positions.

Mr. Warner: Did Darcy write this?

Mr. Turner: Our support of tax incentives for research and development jobs, our support of the hospitality industry and our support of the mining industry were carefully targeted policy approaches. It is regrettable that the criticism they received was not as thoughtful.

Some suggested, for example, that our full allowance of foreign processing costs incurred in the processing of Ontario ores effectively exported jobs from Ontario.

Mr. Warner: It is called a sell-out.

Mr. Turner: There are at least four strong arguments against disallowance, not the least of which was the observation that disallowance would be counter-productive.

Our government and our system thrive on the constructive criticism of a constructive opposition. Our government is proud of its economic performance in a difficult economic period, and we welcome the day when constructive co-operation of all members creates even faster progress towards a common goal.

[10:00]

Mr. Lawlor: You're completely lost. You're out of control.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North.

Mr. Lawlor: Say, he's working overtime today, too.

Mr. Riddell: Now for some words of wisdom.

Mr. Turner: Now for the words of wisdom.

Mr. Conway: I should serve notice to my friends in the NDP that I had planned, because of time constraints made very clear to all of us, to speak only for roughly 10 or 15 minutes. I had anticipated the member for Peterborough going for some considerable time in addition to what he did.

Mr. Warner: You can't say your name in 10 minutes.

Mr. Conway: If the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere wishes to collect his otherwise scattered interjections into his speech for 10:15 then I suggest he do so.

Mr. Warner: No, I am going to collect your scattered speeches.

Mr. Conway: I am, as the member for Lakeshore pointed out in a very typical interjection, working overtime today, having had some occasion to speak earlier on two private members' bills. In the second of those bills, I was happy to rise in support of a private member's bill—

Mr. Warner: He's never worked a day in his life.

Mr. Conway: I resent these aspersions about my past working history, and I hope—

Mr. Reid: What past working history?

Mr. Warner: Past non-working history.

Mr. Conway: I would very much appreciate if that kind of personal attack—

Mr. Lawlor: It's the relatively new members who have to do all the work.

Mr. Warner: You retired the day after you were born.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased this afternoon to rise in support of a private member's bill, introduced by my good and quiet colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere, which sought to restrict the further use of regulations by this government, particularly the Treasurer, for the increase of OHIP rates in this province. However, in one of my common failures, I did not fully understand the constraints which you as Speaker drew to my attention in so far as that debate was not one that really was open to discussion of the OHIP premiums as such, but rather to the tax principle that the bill really was all about. So I wanted tonight to review briefly some—

Mr. Lawlor: That is up to you. The Speaker was wrong on that, but go ahead.

Mr. Conway: I want tonight to review some of my personal comments with respect to what I felt the most significant part of another do-nothing, know-nothing budget presented by the Treasurer here on March 7.

Mr. Turner: That is unfair.

Mr. Conway: The member for Peterborough says it's unfair. It may be unfair, but I think—

Mr. Warner: Yes, the budget was a disaster.

Mr. Conway: —the budget was a disaster, and notwithstanding the macro-stabilization points the member was making tonight from a very well prepared text—and I know that the Examiner will have it on the front page tomorrow. I just hope Peterborough can't—

Mr. Lawlor: Besides, do you think you were elected to be fair?

Mr. Turner: I would hope so, Patrick.

Mr. Conway: Yes, that's another point. The main point of the Treasurer's budget on March 7 certainly seemed to me, as a member of this assembly and as Health critic for the Liberal Party, to be the very substantial increase in OHIP premiums that he announced at that time.

As has been pointed out in this assembly on a number of occasions since that day, the 37.5 per cent increase in OHIP premiums announced on March 7, 1978, represent the second increase in three budgets, in fact bringing about a doubling of the premium rates in this province in 1978 over where they were pre-budget 1976. So the member for Peterborough may wish to crow ceremoniously about how pleasant it was when the government, in a majority status, refrained from increasing premiums and now it points to the requirement of doubling the premiums in two or three years' time.

It's interesting to see the rationale provided in the budget by the Treasurer for maintaining the premium principle in any shape or form. I've listened and I've read with my usual quiet interest and depth for the argumentation provided by the Treasurer and his friends, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and the next Minister of Health, the member for York East (Mr. Elgie), to hear what would be the salient arguments—

Mr. Hall: I'm going to go over there and see what you look like.

Mr. Conway: The member for Lincoln says he's going to cross the floor. Just remember to come back.

Mr. Gregory: I don't blame him.

Mr. Warner: They're all deserting you, Sean.

Mr. Conway: In the budget of March 7, the Treasurer says, "Premiums retain a visible link with the cost of services." It seems to me that to the extent that can be proven, to the extent that the premium mechanism has, in certain theoretical applications, an ability to relate to the cost of services, I'm prepared to accept that as an argument. However, I accept it in terms of this budget only until I get to page 33 of the same budget, drafted by the same very strong-minded Treasurer.

At page 33, in appendix C, headed "The Ontario Health Insurance Plan—Details of Premium Increase," he says: "Table 1 shows that the new premium levels will raise $1,120 million in revenue for 1978-79. Premiums will cover 34 per cent of expenditures, as opposed to 26 per cent [under the old rates]. Table 2 shows"—and I think this is the very important point—"that almost three-quarters of the increase will be paid for by employers, a reflection of the fact that employer subsidization of OHIP is a common fringe benefit in Ontario."

That is a very significant point in this document. Three-quarters of the increase in the premiums, like three-quarters of the overall OHIP premium revenue, will be employer-paid. So what does that mean? It means certainly that there is to be understood the fact that squarely 75 per cent of the premium revenue is paid by virtue of fringe benefit arrangements.

For example, take the member for Mississauga East (Mr. Gregory)—

Mr. Warner: You take him.

Mr. Conway:—a typical Tory in this province and, as it happens, a member of this Legislature.

Mr. Warner: Boy, that's a demeaning thing to say.

Mr. Conway: What is the visible link for him in his budget increase in the OHIP rates? It means for the member for Mississauga East as, I must admit, it does for myself and, pray tell, Mr. Speaker, even you, a $144 annual pay raise.

There is nothing wrong with pay raises for members of this assembly. I spoke very briefly to the subject not very long ago in this assembly.

Mr. Warner: Some day you might even earn one.

Mr. Conway: But it must be understood, taking the members of this assembly as an example, that there is no visible link—none whatsoever—between the OHIP premiums that are paid for us by a very benevolent population, by the taxpayers directly. There is no relation whatsoever, no visible link, for the member for Mississauga East, who smiles Cheshire cat-like tonight.

Mr. Warner: I would have said benignly.

Mr. Conway: He knows what I am saying is absolutely correct and why he should consider repudiating the very feeble and absolutely false logic of the Premier's claim for both maintaining and increasing premiums in this province.

Let us get this clearly in our minds: There is absolutely no justification for saying that premiums maintain a visible link to the cost of services. Increasingly in this province people have their premiums paid by virtue of fringe benefits in collective agreements. I am not saying there is not an indirect tax in that, but there is no visible link; there is none whatsoever.

Mr. Philip: Any insurance salesman would know that.

Mr. Conway: The member for Etobicoke says any insurance salesman would know that. And I see that Mississauga East, although I think he styles himself an insurance executive, nods accordingly.

Mr. Warner: A magnate.

Mr. Conway: But there is not one other argument presented in this budget for maintaining the premiums and, worse still, for increasing them.

I see the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea), who has been unduly quiet here the last three or four weeks.

Mr. Kerrio: Yes, isn't that a fact?

Mr. Conway: I thought for a while it was just another Catholic having succumbed to Lent. But Easter has passed and I see that little change has come over an otherwise controversial minister of that government.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, wait for my announcement. Just wait.

Mr. Warner: They have muzzled him. They have put the reins on him.

Mr. Conway: There is not one other reason provided in this budget or in any other document that this budget calls upon for maintaining or increasing this premium mechanism.

The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere this afternoon initiated a very worthwhile debate upon the premium tax or otherwise. There is no question, despite the fulminations of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz), that this is anything but a tax, a clear and very regressive tax, one that this government, in all its regressive social policies, continually depends upon and apparently to ever-increasing limits.

For those people in areas like Renfrew county, where we have been passed by in terms of the economic prosperity that this 34-year regime has handed out to such places as Scarborough East, there are an awful lot of people paying this $528 tax who simply are not very pleased about it and recognize it for exactly what it is, a regressive tax, a fitting and predictable result of Tory economics and a clear indication of how this government and how that party has been drawn away from the real thinking of the real people in this province. Tonight, I was just reading the Toronto Star—

Mr. Warner: Good for you.

Mr. Conway: —a very objective, socially conscious, non-partisan journal.

Mr. Philip: Almost as good as the Etobicoke Guardian.

Mr. Conway: It was interesting seeing in that, and I admit that it is but a very random selection of letters to the editor—

Hon. Mr. Drea: The last time you read them, you wrote them yourself.

Mr. Warner: That was Dear Abby.

Mr. Conway: No, in fact I live in the Ottawa area and I am too busy reading the letters of the former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. What do people say in tonight's Star? I just took two or three of these letters because I think they are very indicative of what is being told by dear little ladies in Lincoln to my good friend, the member for that area, and colleagues of mine who represent the rural hinterland of Huron-Middlesex. All of us who are in touch with the people understand just how penalizing, just how punishing and just how regressive is this McKeough tax.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Those are the usual letters endorsing my inmate work programs. Read those. That's the best part.

Mr. Conway: One letter that I thought was very interesting in tonight's Star—

Mr. Warner: The guy from Etobicoke.

Mr. Philip: That was the one I wrote.

Mr. Conway: —was from a Mrs. McCuaig of Don Mills; maybe that's an appropriate place for this letter to originate. Mrs. McCuaig, in her letter to the Star tonight, says she was shocked to read a certain letter in the Star not very long ago, a letter that apparently applauded the Treasurer for his courage in this misadventure.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Right. Right.

Mr. Conway: "I'll admit that such a decision as that taken by the Treasurer to raise OHIP premiums took courage"—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Will you read her letter?

Mr. Conway: —"but the courage lay in facing the public's reaction to his tactics. How much intelligence does it take to add money to the kitty when the bills are too high, rather than question why the bills are too high and attack the root of the problem? Which takes more initiative? To simply tack a $6 increase on all bills or to search out the people abusing OHIP?" et cetera. I'm not agreeing for a moment with the suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, oh.

Mr. Conway: I'm not for a moment suggesting that there is wholesale abuse of the OHIP system.

Hon. Mr. Drea: But you are going to search it out.

Mr. Conway: I am saying, for the edification of the member for Scarborough Centre, that it is quite pointless to shovel additional hundreds of millions into a system which we all understand needs streamlining, which we all understand needs a heck of a lot more control—

Hon. Mr. Drea: We do?

Mr. Conway:—than this maladministration has been able to effect over the last 10 years.

Mr. Gregory: If you are going to take part of those, take all of them.

Mr. Conway: I am going to say this further, this government, under the control of the Tories, has happily let this Legislature investigate everything from the after-hours use of school rooms to the very important and weighty problems of insurance in Dade county, USA.

Interjection.

Mr. Gregory: Conway, you are through.

Mr. Conway: One thing that this government has been very conspicuous in its avoidance of is any kind of legislative scrutiny of our health care system.

Mr. Reed: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Conway: I am not surprised—when the Minister of Health goes to the Wellesley Clinic of yesterday to give what was reported as a bland speech, he found certain of the health care professionals pretty unhappy with the system. I can certainly suggest to him, if he wants to go and meet those people who are now being forced to pay this direct $528 tax, that he will find something of the same reaction.

[10:15]

But you know, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Correctional Services stares into the distance. He knows exactly the truth of what I'm saying; that nothing has characterized the cowardice of that administration more than their unwillingness to bring this matter before a scrutiny in this Legislature with a legitimate committee where we can all take a look at what is happening.

Mr. Warner: Cowardly.

Mr. Conway: They've got no hesitation in hiring Laurier Lapierre and the Gallup organization to scrutinize their educational disasters, but they have got total reluctance to come to terms with a similar kind of legislative scrutiny for the single most significant fiscal and social commitment this province through this government has been making in the period of post-1969.

I'm going to suggest very constructively for those members of the executive council who are fortunate enough to be here tonight, to hear these words of wisdom, that maybe they had just better go back and prevail upon their other colleagues in cabinet—because we know, unfortunately, the Tory caucus counts for pitifully little—that some other members of the cabinet had just better be convinced on the need and the immediate requirement for some kind of legislative scrutiny of this system. That's why I think the member for Scarborough Centre can now smile in agreement.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I was smiling with derision.

Mr. Reid: Let the record show it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Let the record show it was in derision.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I think it's a very significant comment on Tory economics when the third largest provincial source of revenue is now the OHIP premiums.

Mr. Warner: More than corporate income tax.

Mr. Conway: It is a pretty significant and pretty sad comment when fully three-quarters of the additional revenue—

Mr. Warner: That's sad, sick government.

Mr. Conway:—that is being raised by virtue of various tax measures in this budget is being raised on the backs of the OHIP subscribers.

Hon. Mr. Drea: What's your alternative?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: I thought the member for Scarborough Centre had an ounce or a vein of progressivism in his being.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Me? You've got to be kidding.

Mr. Reid: He lost it in Georgia.

Mr. Makarchuk: It's a microgram, Sean, a microgram.

Mr. Conway: A microgram. Well, I think the member for Rainy River is even more accurate when he says he lost even that in Georgia.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I lost it long before that; I never had it.

Mr. Conway: You know, Mr. Speaker, I think it very interesting that the Treasurer would consider the choice of a very regressive OHIP premium increase to be infinitely more favourable than, let us say, a dependence upon the more progressive tax bases we all know exist in this province.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You want higher income tax? Let the record show he called for higher income tax.

Mr. Conway: I am certainly prepared to say this, that if we cannot find a more progressive system on which to base this kind of revenue generation than the regressivity the Treasurer offers this province, then I think it is an abject bankruptcy.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That Hansard is going to read beautifully.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: It's interesting—

Mr. Eaton: Don't beat around the bush, give us your position.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That man is standing for higher income tax and he doesn't want it in Hansard so that they won't read it back home.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that these interjections are going to force me beyond my 15 minute timetable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I might suggest to the Minister of Correctional Services that it's the custom of this House for members to speak only from their seats.

Mr. Martel: There, Frank.

Mr. Conway: The Treasurer no doubt felt nettled by the criticism which he received as a result of this gesture. I've got to say something about the nature of the criticism and the flow of response. I know perfectly well that the Treasurer made this misguided choice, knowing full well there would be relatively little response to it, because he understands just how incredibly unfair and how incredibly inequitable this Ontario health insurance premium scheme has come to be, because when 75 per cent of premium revenue is employer-paid, when every single member of this assembly will never see that $144 increase, there is not going to be the kind of immediate political response that other initiatives might generate.

I would be the first, being a very naive politico, to appreciate the twisted political calculation that's now fundamental to this very regressive system because, as long as the majority don't pay and have no visible link, there just isn't going to be much of a stink or of a response.

Mr. Eaton: You want to bury it some other way, don't you?

Mr. Conway: The Treasurer, in his imitable and machiavellian mental process, would like not to have a system put forward that would draw back to such a requirement all of those who are currently being exempted from the visible link of which he speaks.

Certainly, as long as the member for Middlesex doesn't pay, he's not going to be worried at all.

Mr. Eaton: I'll tell you, I paid my way until it was put on; and I'll pay it again. That's something you have never done. You have never been out in the working world, have you, sonny?

Mr. Conway: I'm going to suggest to the member for Middlesex that I hope he makes that proposition to his Treasurer at next week's caucus, that he's prepared to pay his way.

Mr. Eaton: You have never been out in the working world and paid your way yet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: The member for Middlesex has said it far more cogently than I could ever say it: He's prepared; he wants to pay. That's the kind of commitment we're going to require from the broad population who are being exempted from this kind of system. What does the Treasurer say in his letter of apology to the Globe and Mail of March 16? He says in part—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Read it all.

Mr. Gregory: Read the whole thing.

Mr. Conway: I'm only reading one paragraph.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You know the rules.

Mr. Conway: "The premium system," the Treasurer says, "is more progressive than some critics would allow. The large number of free premiums and the fact that OHIP payments are for the most part subsidized by employers, and any subsidized amount is taxable as income by the progressive personal income tax, attest to this fact."

Here is the significant part:

"Equally important, this government"—this Tory government—"is not about to damage the investment potential of the economy by increases in the income tax."

That says something about the mentality of this latter day Francis Bondhead. He is quite prepared to screw the individual in the $12,000 or $14,000 a year bracket right to the wall.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, come on.

Mr. Conway: But he's afraid to tinker with the progressive tax systems that we have all accepted as fundamental to our governmental process because, whether some Tories in Ontario in 1978 know it or not, we have basically understood our taxation to be funded and founded on the principle that you pay according to your ability to pay.

Mr. Warner: You give according to your ability to give.

Mr. Conway: And he says: "Finally an OHIP increase is preferable to an income tax increase because OHIP premiums are directly linked to health care expenditures and rising costs." That is just so much hollow and specious argumentation—

Mr. Warner: Totally inaccurate.

Mr. Conway: There cannot be any commitment on the part of a responsible opposition—to a premium system and a premium increase, the like of which we have been presented in this regressive document, based on that kind of logic.

Mr. Martel: I hope you vote for our no confidence motion next week.

Mr. Conway: That is why next week we are going to begin an examination of the alternatives.

Mr. Martel: I thought you were going to vote for our no-confidence motion.

Mr. Conway: The member for Sudbury East says, "I thought you were going to vote for our no-confidence motion." I don't for a moment ever dismiss the likelihood of my voting for any no-confidence motion throughout the course of the 31st Parliament of Ontario. I want that clearly understood.

Mr. Martel: But that's not the one.

Mr. Conway: I hope the member clearly understood that point. But I think we in the Liberal Party have taken, as the population expects us to take, a responsible and constructive approach.

Mr. Martel: But; here comes the "but."

Mr. Gregory: Yes, having said that—

Mr. Eaton: Having said that, now let's get on to the other side of the issue.

Mr. Conway: I hear the member for Middlesex howling in protest, but I remember standing in this chamber 11 months ago tonight, as the member for Riverdale said, and I can still see the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman)—now resigned in disgust about the jackpot into which his colleagues have placed the Tory principles in this province, resigned in disgust. I remember him sitting not too far away from the Minister of Corrections—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Correctional Services.

Mr. Conway:—on that brave and heroic night waving, not a white flag but a red flag, that 37 days later he and his group had stuffed down their collective palates.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The biggest majority I've ever had.

Mr. Conway: I suspect their heroism is one tampered and tempered with the keen understanding of the rebuff they got, justifiably, on June 9, 1977.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We only won eight more seats. How many did you win?

Mr. Conway: We took the constructive approach, the only approach that we had under the conditions, since this government had been so reluctant over these many years ever to allow a frank and full examination in the Legislature or any of its committees of this high-spending, highly sensitive health-care area: we decided to direct this matter to the standing committee on social development—

Mr. Martel: Yes, to find a way out.

Mr. Conway:—there to be guided by the excellent chairmanship of my colleague from Huron-Bruce, to look in a clear and objective way at both the argumentation that has led to this kind of nonsense—

Mr. Gregory: The Liberals never change.

Mr. Conway:—and the possible alternatives which we are sure have not been looked at; and maybe among other things to find out just what we can believe.

In 1976 the Treasurer stood in this assembly and said we needed to restore a balance in our health-care financing where premiums paid for something of the order of 28 per cent of insured health services. But rather than take my word, as I know the hon. members opposite would never want to do, let me quote from that budget statement: "Premiums," said the Treasurer then, "will generate approximately 28 per cent of the total financing of OHIP and this is a suitable long-run norm to maintain as health-care costs increase in future years."

Two years ago we were told that 28 per cent of insured health services, in so far as an OHIP premium coverage was concerned, is an acceptable long-term norm. Two years later this same Treasurer, brazen as ever, inconsiderate as ever, stands up and reneges as ever and says—no, let me say, the Treasurer says, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Martel: You will vote to support him.

Mr. Conway:—the point surely has to be that we couldn't believe the Treasurer on the basis of his 1976 statement and I want to know why or how I can take the Treasurer at his word now for those poor, beleaguered, downtrodden payers of the direct premiums? Why should they believe today any more than they did two years ago—

Mr. Warner: Vote against the government.

Mr. Conway: —that the premiums they are forced to continue to pay at ever-increasing levels will be kept to no more than 34.7 per cent?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. I wonder if the hon. member could look upward and to the left.

Mr. Conway: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Makarchuk: Look to the left anyway.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I will happily conclude this portion of my remarks by saying that the Treasurer of this province is increasingly becoming the victim of the credibility-gap politics for which he is the supreme architect. He no longer is being believed by members of this assembly and maybe much more importantly by the people of Ontario, and I don't think his cavalier, capricious kiss-off that "this is my latest thinking" is in any way, shape or form an acceptable answer to the people of this province who are being seriously and permanently affected by this kind of an increase.

Mr. Warner: Vote against the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member have any further comments? If so, he may adjourn the debate.

On motion by Mr. Conway, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 31, 1978

The House met at 10:00 a.m.

Prayers.

DEATH OF DR. CHARLES BEST

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it was with great sadness that we learned this morning of the death of Dr. Charles Best. He was a great Canadian who loved this country and gave to Canadians much of which to be proud. His work and success in research brought new hope to millions throughout the world, including some former members of this House and perhaps some current members.

Dr. Best always placed his first commitment to the betterment of mankind, setting aside financial gain or the many chances to take his talents and expertise elsewhere. His was an example to youth of all generations in Canada and throughout the world. Together with Sir Frederick Banting, as a young man Dr. Best showed perseverance and dedication despite great obstacles that would have discouraged lesser men. It was a spirit that continued throughout his lifetime.

This province and this country have lost one of the greatest scientists, humanitarians and patriots of our history. We all mourn his death, and on behalf of the government and people of Ontario I express sincere condolences to Dr. Best's family and to his many friends and colleagues throughout the world. I would ask the members of the House to join me in a moment of silence.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if I might just take the time of the House for a moment, I would like to add, on behalf of the official opposition, our condolences to the family of Dr. Best, a family doubly bereaved in recent times. I would like to say simply as a Canadian and as a physician and scientist, that our country has not had many people of that stature, but he is an example and has been an example because we have potentially a lot of people of that stature. Because he succeeded, because he saved, indirectly, so many lives and made so many lives more livable, and because he proved that Canadians can in fact produce results which are as great as any in the history of mankind, he has perhaps done more than the vast majority of us to prove that the Canadian identity is real, something we can be proud of, and something we can show to the rest of the world. In that sense, I think the country has suffered a great loss, but his life was a great gain to us and is part of the very fabric of our national identity. I simply want to associate myself with the words expressed by the Minister of Health at this sad occasion.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my words of condolence to the family of Dr. Best and pay tribute to him for his contribution to medical science and to our life as Canadians here in this country.

I grew up in this city of Toronto and two people who were heroes for us as young people in the 1940s and early 1950s growing up in this city, were Dr. Best and Dr. Banting for their contribution in the conquest of diabetes through the discovery of insulin. It's been an inspiration to many people, not just in the field of medicine, because Toronto has become a world-renowned centre due in large part to those initial discoveries and the kind of excitement and inspiration that those discoveries led to in other fields of endeavour as well. I know that all members of my party join with the comments made both by the Minister of Health and by the Leader of the Opposition.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Slim pickings, as usual.

Mr. Ruston: Use the shotgun approach.

Mr. Conway: Frank Drea's been awfully quiet. Try him.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the government House leader tell me if anyone else is coming as far he knows?

Hon. Mr. Welch: My information is that the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough); the ministers of Education (Mr. Wells), Natural Resources (F. S. Miller), Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) and Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes), and the Premier (Mr. Davis) are the only members of the executive council who will be absent this morning.

Mr. Kerrio: I thought the House leader was going to tell us who was going to be here.

Mr. Reid: All the first stringers.

Mr. Ruston: Pretty smooth.

Mr. Reid: Sending in the substitutes on the bench, are you?

Mr. Martel: That was the first question; now the second.

Mr. Deans: That was the best answer we've had all week.

Mr. Reid: Sounds like the lineup for the Blue Jays.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Do you have a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: The House leader has indicated that he would like a supplementary response.

INCREASE IN OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. S. Smith: Since I'm only talking to the supplementary part of the cabinet I'll address my first question to the Minister of Health.

Can the Minister of Health tell me how he feels being a member of a government in which, as pointed out in the report that has just come out from the National Council of Welfare on taxation and the distribution of income, his ministry is now being blamed for the fact that Ontarians who earn less than $20,000 a year, because of the new OHIP increases are to be the highest-taxed people in the land and that those at the poverty level or just above, those earning $10,000 or $12,000 a year, in terms of combined provincial income tax and health insurance premiums, will be paying vastly more in Ontario than in any other province of Canada. How does he feel about that?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition has me at somewhat of a disadvantage in that he has the report. I haven't seen it, so I wouldn't want to comment on it until I have had a chance to look at it.

I know there have been a number of figures bandied about. I think the record, though, shows that in terms of per capita spending on health care and in terms of increases in spending over the last five or six years, Ontario of all the provinces has led the way in showing reason in the growth in spending.

No matter how one feels about a premium system or other means, I have to think that, given the horrendous costs of health care, and the charge of $1.44 a day for a family or 72 cents a day for a single subscriber like myself, and considering the alternatives, it is still a reasonable system.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister doesn't pay it.

By way of supplementary, since the minister has not seen the report and since it has just come out, will he kindly listen to a few figures—and I won't take the time of the House unduly, Mr. Speaker—comparing two provinces that have premiums—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of order: I think this is a bit of a misuse of the question period to read a report to me and not to ask any questions. I would be glad to answer questions on specifics—

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask questions.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —but if the hon. member wants to read the particular report into the record perhaps he could do that during some debate.

Mr. Bradley: And let's have some ministers on the front bench.

Mr. S. Smith: I'll read a few for the minister.

Mr. Speaker: It is not really a point of order. If the question does not contain a question it will be ruled out of order.

Mr. S. Smith: I would simply take a moment to read the comparison between a province with no premiums—that is the province of Saskatchewan—and two provinces with premiums—Ontario and British Columbia. You may be interested to know that the total tax burden for those with $10,000 earned income and below in Saskatchewan is $122; in Ontario $798; in British Columbia $508. For $12,000 income: Saskatchewan $346; Ontario $960; British Columbia $677—I will only give you one more and then I will ask you a question—the $15,000 level: Saskatchewan $710; Ontario $1,223; British Columbia $952.

What I want to ask the Minister of Health—since obviously this situation is not his doing, it is the doing of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) who is merely using Health as an excuse to burden his taxation on the lowest income people in Ontario—how does it feel as Minister of Health having to put up with this? How does it feel having to pretend that it is one's own ministry's expenditures that are the reason for—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. S. Smith: —having to burden the people at the poverty level?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, again, I will be sure to get a copy of that report and review all of it. I am sure it has pointed out such things as the $5 a day charge for a hospital bed in the province of British Columbia. I am sure it has pointed out some of the deductible amounts in some provinces for some services, which we don't have in Ontario. Frankly, I think if you were to compare everything—all the variables, all the additional charges that apply in other provinces—Ontario would still come out at—

Mr. S. Smith: At the very bottom.

Mr. McClellan: That is not true.

Mr. Swart: That's nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I feel sorry for the Leader of the Opposition on Fridays. He twists his lip and he snarls and tries to be something that he is not. I feel sorry for him some days and this is one of them.

Mr. Cassidy: When your position is weak, shout.

Mr. S. Smith: I feel sorry for the people being taxed in this province at the poverty line.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Watch the Juno awards.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think we all acknowledge that arriving at the conclusions of his budget—

Mr. Kerrio: Look at the cartoon in the morning paper.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —was a very difficult exercise for my colleague the Treasurer.

Mr. S. Smith: This minister is the fall guy for the Treasurer's finances and he knows it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: But I was certainly pleased that in the budget he included a provision to raise the taxable income ceiling so that more people would now come under total or partial premium subsidies than has ever been the case before. We will now have, if I remember the correct figures, 1,820,000 people who will pay no premiums at all; and a further 60,000, I think it was, who will be on partial premiums.

Mr. Mackenzie: Nobody in Saskatchewan pays premiums.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We have been supporting them for years; that is the truth.

[10:15]

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: Since the minister and the government continually make reference to the differences in the costs and the hidden charges that are levied in other jurisdictions—

Hon. B. Stephenson: We paid their entire medicare program for years.

Mr. Martel: How did we do that?

Hon. B. Stephenson: This province did— in transfer payments.

Mr. Martel: This province?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The entire thing.

Mr. Deans: The minister was referring to the $5 and other charges in Saskatchewan—

Mr. Martel: We are now paying Alberta's. With all their oil, we are paying Alberta's.

Mr. Deans: The competition is getting to me.

Is the minister prepared to put on the record the actual costs of medical care in the province of Ontario—on a per diem basis, if you will, or on a per capita basis, or in whatever way the minister wants to calculate it—and then to draw exact comparisons from other provinces and to show us exactly where we get a better deal? Because it certainly isn't evident to anyone here.

Ms. Gigantes: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can certainly show comparisons between the per capita spending by this government and that of other provinces. The point I was trying to make was that it's something of an improper comparison when one considers that—take British Columbia, for instance, that comparison would not show the fact that in British Columbia you will pay $5 per day per bed.

Mr. Martel: My colleague is saying to put that in the overall package.

Mr. Deans: I'm saying to the minister to give us the total.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Once we get into the standing committee on social development, within the next week, these and other sets of figures will be available, and I'll be glad to share them with the committee.

I am certainly looking forward to seeing what the proposals of the official opposition party are going to be.

Mr. Deans: Frankly, I don't care.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have not seen any proposals from them in 14 months as the minister, and I think it is going to be quite an occasion.

Mr. Martel: He said he will be looking forward to it.

Mr. S. Smith: This program is a revenue-raising device and the minister is the fall guy.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: I would ask the Minister of Health, given the substantial increases in OHIP premiums effected in this year's budget and in the 1976 budget, whether he has undertaken any study to see if there are any early indications that more and more people just aren't bothering to pay these extremely high and prohibitive premiums? Does he have any statistics to indicate how many people are not covered?

The Toronto Globe and Mail, I noticed some weeks ago, in dealing with the notch-up problem—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Conway: —went out to find people at the notch level and found that people just weren't bothering to pay the premiums because they were so expensively prohibitive.

Mr. S. Smith: They figure welfare will pay for it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I haven't seen figures for a number of months, but to the best of my recollection—and I will be sure to dig these out and share them with the committee in the next couple of weeks—that is not the case at all.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary; the hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, will the minister, before we meet next Wednesday, table for us in this House the most favourable set of numbers that he can come up with? Never mind his allusions to the fact that he might have them or doesn't have them; would he just, once and for all, table those figures?

Mr. S. Smith: That's right.

Mr. Breugh: Let him fix them any way he cares to but let him give us something that shows us what he says is actually true, because no one else in the nation can agree with him.

Mr. Martel: Other than 57 Tories.

Ms. Gigantes: It's a big lie.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Absolute NDP arrogance—speaking on behalf of all the people of the nation.

Mr. McClellan: You should talk about arrogance!

Ms. Gigantes: It's a lie.

Mr. McClellan: Tell us about arrogance.

Mr. Martel: The epitome of arrogance is speaking.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No; I said his arrogance in speaking on behalf of all the people of the nation.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the hon. member, in doing his studies for his new role as health critic, would look at some of the materials in recent years from the Economic Council and other sources, I will be glad to—

Mr. S. Smith: We understand your connection with them. We know you like the OMA, but—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if we can pull out all the data; the thing is, I guess I would sooner get into this with the committee because there are so many different ways you can compare every provincial system—

Mr. Cassidy: No, just give us one example.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have no intention of cooking the books or whatever, but each system is different.

Mr. Conway: Darcy will look after that.

Mr. Cassidy: And your system is the worst of all.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Each system is different in the 10 provinces, one way or another. I don't know that a direct comparison is possible. But I'll certainly be glad to share with the committee any and all figures we've got.

Mr. Martel: You're so cavalier about making comparisons.

Ms. Gigantes: You are in trouble.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Since the committee is of course on the record, as it would be in this House, then what the member wants will be there as it would be here.

Mr. Warner: It's out of your control.

Mr. Kerrio: Leave the cooking to Darcy; he's the champ.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition with his second question.

Mr. Martel: That's three now.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right.

INDUSTRIAL INCENTIVES

Mr. S. Smith: I'll ask a question of the Minister of Revenue, again since the Treasurer is not here. I have sent him an advertisement, Mr. Speaker, which has appeared in today's Globe and Mail on behalf of New York State. The minister undoubtedly is familiar with the fact that the Treasurer says in his budget statement that "in Ontario our taxation levels compare favourably with those of nearby jurisdictions with which we compete." In this ad are listed about seven particular tax incentives that New York State offers and in the body of the material a number of others are listed. With the exception of tax credit on equipment and sales tax exemption on equipment, can the Minister of Revenue tell us which of these incentives are, in fact, offered in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Turner: You mean you don't know?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question under advisement, but I would inform the Leader of the Opposition that it has been the policy of this government up to this point in time that we are not going to get into situations of a competitive nature as is being done now by other states, particularly in the United States, where there's a highly competitive bid for industry. At this point in time our policy has not been to compete in such a way as to use tax incentives, for instance, to take industries from other provinces and so on.

Mr. Sargent: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Simply because we don't believe that's the route to go.

Mr. Sargent: A lot of guys out of jobs think it's a good idea.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Unfortunately these manufacturing industries understand what the route is to go and they're going to the United States. Is the minister aware that we're losing manufacturing jobs in this country, according to the Science Council of Canada, at approximately the rate of 10,000 a month?

Mr. Rotenberg: Because Trudeau's loused up the economy, that's why.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister aware that these are the kinds of incentives which are drawing away Ontario industries that could employ Ontario people—

Mr. Havrot: Why don't you talk to your friends in Ottawa?

Mr. S. Smith:—and why isn't the government competing? It's a competitive world. Why shouldn't we be competing?

Hon. W. Newman: You talk restraint one day and then spending the next day. Where do you stand?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If everyone competes in this kind of a game it only becomes a cut-throat situation and in the final analysis we all lose.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You really want it both ways, don't you?

Mr. S. Smith: Our throats are being cut.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: If the minister does not see fit to pursue this route, what does he have as an alternative to encourage industry to come here? Is there anything being done at a high level on the balance of trade that would induce General Motors and others to make certain that we have other pressures brought to bear that would have those factories come here, if the government is not going to go all that route,

Mr. Rotenberg: Tell Trudeau to fix the auto pact.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I suggest that particular question should go to the Minister of Industry and Tourism, under whose jurisdiction that falls. I have nothing whatever to do with that particular area. I'm interested only in the tax.

Mr. Kerrio: That's why we're in trouble.

Mr. S. Smith: Final supplementary, if I might: Do I take it, then, that the minister who is in charge of taxation disagrees with the Treasurer, because this minister feels it's not a good policy to be competitive in this way when the Treasurer says, and I quote again, "Our taxation levels compare favourably with those of nearby jurisdictions with which we compete"? Do I take it then he was not telling us the fact that the Minister of Revenue has decided we shouldn't be competing in the taxation field?

Mr. Rotenberg: Come on, don't misquote him.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If the hon. member recalls the answer to the first question, I said I would take his question under advisement and check to see what our tax exemptions would be in comparison with New York State. I'm not prepared to tell him that at this point in time.

Mr. Kerrio: Ah, you know what tax exemptions are available.

Mr. S. Smith: You are as aware as anybody of what's happening.

Mr. Kerrio: You're not even in the race.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I had promised that I would get back to the hon. member regarding the comparison. As the member is very well aware, the Treasurer directs the policy of taxation in this province, not the Minister of Revenue.

Mr. S. Smith: He's not here though.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that the lending policies of ODC were to the extent of $25,000 a job, and he has the audacity to stand there when there are thousands of people out of work and say he has no policy in this regard to entice industry here? VW was offered $100 million to locate its plant in New York State, and the minister has no policy at all.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That is not what I said.

Mr. Sargent: It's a fact.

Hon. W. Newman: It is not.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I said I would compare the tax policies of New York State with the province of Ontario to see how they compared. I said that if we're going to talk about other incentives it should be directed to the Minister of Industry and Tourism, who is in charge of that particular area.

ADOPTION SERVICE FEES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services concerning recommendation 59 in the ministry's consultation paper on short-term legislative amendments in the area of children's services. The ministry states in that paragraph, and I quote: "When adoptive parents can afford to pay towards adoption services, we think it should be possible for societies to charge and collect a reasonable fee."

Can the minister clarify recommendation 59 attached to that statement, which says that the ministry should have legal authority to establish and to regulate fees charged by Children's Aid Societies for their adoption services?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, that proposal for discussion in the paper was intended to assist in providing some opportunity for societies to charge a reasonable fee which would help to offset the administrative costs incurred in the process of arranging and processing an adoption. I'm not sure, beyond that, what the hon. member's question was intending to elicit. Does that answer the hon. member's question or is there something further?

Mr. Cassidy: I'll come to it in a supplementary, because we are very concerned about this idea that there be substantial charges for adoptions.

I'd like to ask this then: Is this intended to be a possibility for Children's Aid Societies or a requirement? I ask that in view of a letter from the associate deputy minister, Judge Thomson, to a Children's Aid Society in this province that the wording of recommendation 59—and I quote Judge Thomson—"was intended to allow for a ministry decision which would require a Children's Aid Society to charge for adoption services." In other words, there would be a requirement and not just the possibility. Has a decision in this regard been made yet?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The answer to the latter part of that question is no, the paper is still subject to discussion. We're presently reviewing briefs on the total package of proposals from Children's Aid Societies across the province, from agencies and interested individuals who have submitted briefs. The response and the interest was actually much greater than we had anticipated; the quantity of work that people put into the preparation of their responses was such that when requests were made for an extension of the period for consultation beyond the February 28 date that had originally been suggested, I agreed to do so on the understanding that, at the same time, we would begin to review and respond directly to the briefs that we had received so as not to unreasonably delay our schedule, since I had indicated to the House that I would like to meet the commitment of introducing some legislative change during this spring session. So there is still no decision on a policy basis on any of those proposals. They are still proposals which are under discussion.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: I want to focus on this question of whether Children's Aid Societies will be made to charge for adoptions or whether there will be such financial pressure put upon them that they will charge for adoptions.

In view of the response which the minister mentions has already been indicated by Children's Aid Societies—and that there will be action in relation to this recommendation number 59—can the minister give some idea what charges will be made, or will be permitted or encouraged in relation to adoptions, in view of the very real danger that Children's Aid Societies may start to choose adoptive parents on the basis of their ability to pay and not their suitability as parents, given the financial restrictions of the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Clearly, I can appreciate the concern of the hon. member on the latter point that he made. I can assure him this is certainly not the intent. I think that should this be approved on a policy basis, if there is any possibility that kind of bias might creep in, clearly there will have to be protections to prevent it.

Mr. Deans: It's not a very good idea.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I noticed that the hon. member indicated that he and his party would be opposed to the charging of any substantial fee. I'm not sure what the magnitude of any substantial fee would be. The terminology we've used in the suggestion is a "reasonable" fee.

Mr. McClellan: There's no room for a fee.

Ms. Gigantes: How much money does the minister want to raise?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Certainly, it is not the intention to inhibit persons, or to prevent persons from proceeding to adopt children. The intention is simply to assign a reasonable portion of the cost. As the member reads the recommendation which is being considered, it was that a reasonable fee be charged in situations where the parents could afford it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. Smith: He's had four or five.

Mr. Speaker: One final supplementary. The hon. member for Bellwoods.

Mr. McClellan: Given that the minister understands we are opposed to fees in adoption, period; let me ask the minister what is the average administrative cost of adoption in this province, which I gather is the basis for his proposed fees for adoption?

[10:30]

Mr. S. Smith: And what would be the cost if the child were not adopted?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't have the average costs at the moment. I will get that for the member. I am aware of the position, as the hon. member states, that there is opposition to any fees and I am sure that it covers areas that don't touch upon my ministry—

Mr. McClellan: You can keep your buy-a-child scheme.

Mr. Makarchuk: Put them out to the highest bidder.

Ms. Gigantes: How much do you want to raise?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think the hon. members again have completely missed the point that first of all it is not a policy matter. We have invited input from the hon. members and everyone else in the province on such discussions so that the members opposite would have something to discuss and apply themselves in the course of process.

Mr. Warner: Why would you suggest it even for discussion?

Ms. Gigantes: It was Darcy who started it.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary if I might: Why does the minister not simply lay that absolutely ridiculous scheme to rest, given the fact that it costs more to keep a child who is not adopted than one who is adopted, given the fact that the minister is not in fact saving any money by charging people for this, and given the fact that the whole thing is simply offensive to anybody's sense of decency and reasonableness? Why not simply declare now that that ridiculous idea is put to rest permanently?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I obviously will consider the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition in the matter when the discussion papers or the briefs have all been submitted and I hope that he has taken the trouble to make some such submissions to us as well.

HOSPITAL WORKERS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a second question to the Minister of Health. Can the minister report to this House on his discussions with the Canadian Union of Public Employees about the difficulties which are being undergone right now in continued master contract bargaining for hospital workers across the province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I met with representatives of the Canadian Union of Public Employees a few days ago. I had asked to see them a few weeks ago inasmuch as I had seen some of the people who are negotiating on the hospital side and I wanted to be briefed on both sides.

I indicated to the CUPE delegation that I would certainly hope they and the representatives of the hospital bargaining team could get back together as soon as possible. I indicated, as I had in a letter to Mr. Douglas of CUPE a number of months ago, that the government is not going to force either side into a master contract relationship. That is something that, if it happens, will have to evolve.

The representatives of CUPE left with me a couple of suggestions which they wanted me to consider and which I am considering along with my colleague, the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson), but certainly we are not injecting ourselves in the ministry into the middle of this. We want the two sides to get back to the table as soon as possible.

Mr. Mackenzie: Given the direction of the government in terms of the construction industry and the efforts at province-wide bargaining, does the minister not see the merit of master bargaining in the health field with the hospitals and the hospital workers?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: To give a brief answer, Mr. Speaker, no.

Mr. Warner: Why not?

Mr. Martel: What's the difference?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, let me elaborate on that and just say that over the last number of years there have evolved various forms of central bargaining, and in fact we are just coming to the end of the first contract with centralized bargaining between various hospitals and certain unions—CUPE and SEIU. As I say, however what evolves in the future is up to the parties—the unions and the hospitals involved. Let's never forget that of course just as the individual locals have a great deal of autonomy, particularly in CUPE, so too do the individual hospitals. They are after all community hospitals, administered and overseen by community boards.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Mackenzie: Individual contractors have the same kind of autonomy, and I think the minister is on the wrong road.

Mr. Speaker: That's not a question.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Mr. Riddell: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the riotous situation which has developed at Fleck Manufacturing Company where police had to close two schools and public thoroughfares leading into the industrial park yesterday in the interest of the safety of schoolchildren, teachers and others who work in the park; and in view of the conduct of workers coming from other areas of Ontario in support of the Fleck strikers breaking into the plant, smashing windows and doors, ransacking offices, and threatening to burn the place down; what action does the minister contemplate to help resolve the differences between the two parties so that this part of the country can get back to a civilized way of living?

Mr. Warner: Get rid of that sweat-shop for a start.

Hon. B. Stephenson: As the hon. member knows, the Ministry of Labour has been keeping contact with both parties in an attempt to get them back to the negotiating table. Late yesterday afternoon we appointed a disputes advisory committee which is at this moment meeting to plan its course of action in order to attempt to resolve that problem.

ESCAPE OF SULPHURIC ACID

Mr. Lupusella: My question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the leak of concentrated sulphuric acid at the Prestolite Battery plant at Dufferin and Dupont. On the morning of March 19, 1978, a leak developed in an elevated sulphuric acid tank located at the west side of the plant and the prevailing high winds that day carried a mist of the sulphuric acid southward to a car wash located at the northwest corner of Dufferin and Dupont, forcing the owner of the car wash to close down his operation because his employees complained of skin irritation.

Can the minister report to this House whatever information is available to him and what they have discovered as to the nature and the cause of the leakage?

Hon. Mr. McCague: As to the last part of the question—what have we discovered as far as the leak is concerned—it was a broken seam in the tank.

Mr. Lupusella: By way of supplementary: Considering the leak has aroused considerable concern among neighbours of the plant and because of the fact that this particular incident is clearly something that should not happen again in any circumstances, particularly in the middle of a residential area, can the minister tell us what kind of action his department has taken against the company? And can the minister assure us that the Prestolite plant will be inspected by his officials to detect any chemical container located in the plant and outside the plant which can constitute a hazard to the public and to the employees working in that particular plant?

Hon. Mr. McCague: There has been an investigation. I don't have a report yet, but I will report to the member when I have that.

UNITED PARCEL SERVICE

Mr. Sargent: A question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications: With reference to the excellent series in the Toronto Star by Brian Vallee on the UPS application—or, I suggest, eventual take-over here in Ontario—I would like to ask the minister, as the only elected person in Ontario who can do something for us in this regard—and in view of the fact that he sold us out in the Greyhound corporation deal. We can understand the fact that free enterprise can take over, but the minister rates very easily in the public sector here—I would like to ask him, because very many people, hundreds of thriving smaller firms in the parcel industry will be wiped out of business by this take-over unless he gets up off of it and does something; my question is this: Why doesn't he, in view of this newspaper series which is very relevant because we have heard that crime is organized—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. You have indicated you were going to ask a question on three different occasions and I have yet to hear it.

Mr. Sargent: I have to qualify the setting here.

Mr. Speaker: You have been around here for 12 years. If you don't know how to frame a question, it's time you did.

Mr. Sargent: All right, thank you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He hasn't been around long enough; he has not really been around.

Mr. Sargent: Whose side are you on there?

Mr. Speaker: I'm trying to help you to ask a question, with great difficulty.

Mr. Sargent: Why doesn't the minister investigate the fact that the rates will increase 150 per cent because of their past experiences? Why doesn't he cancel their licences, because they are now bootlegging in unregulated, modified cars—passenger cars? Why doesn't he cancel the licences until the hearings are completed?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Working for the post office, Eddie?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'll try to reply to the statements by the hon. member. First of all—

Mr. Germa: Just answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Snow:—I don't believe the UPS operation that the hon. member referred to has any licences that can be cancelled. There are certain cities within the province—Metropolitan Toronto; Ottawa, I believe; Windsor; perhaps more—where the company does hold a cartage licence issued by the municipality. I cannot cancel that cartage licence.

Mr. Sargent: But they're breaking the Act now.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The corporation has made application to the Ontario Highway Transport Board for a licence, as it is the right of any corporation or any individual to do. I do not intend to rule unilaterally, even if I had the power to do so, that UPS—or Eddie Sargent enterprises limited—cannot make an application to the Highway Transport Board to carry parcels.

The application was made. The board is hearing the application. It is without a doubt, I guess, the most complicated and the most lengthy hearing the board has ever had since it was established back in the 1920s. The applications started back, I think, in October—October 1 perhaps. There have been many days of hearings.

I did talk to the chairman of the board a few days ago when he advised me how many days of hearings had gone on in this application, and the fact that he expected it to go some time yet. I forget now the number of witnesses who have appeared, both on behalf of the applicants and are now appearing in opposition to the applicants.

The hearing, I think, is being conducted in a proper, legal way and the board will eventually issue its decision. When that decision is issued, then as you know both parties have recourse to appeal. I just have to say there's no way that I will or that I should interfere with the due process of the law in the handling of this application.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Would the minister advise me somewhere along the line why the elected people cannot work on behalf of the people, because of the track record—with every market they've gone into, they've broken the market and put everybody else out of business, across the world they've done this. Is there any reason why they won't do the same thing here in Ontario?

Secondly, I understand even the government is using this service now. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm not sure any of the statements the hon. member has made are right. As far as whether the government is using this service or not, I have no idea. Certainly not to my knowledge, but I cannot say that someone has not used UPS to deliver a parcel. I can't give the hon. member that commitment. But certainly not to my knowledge.

Mr. Sargent: Final supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Etobicoke have a supplementary?

Mr. Philip: I would like to ask a supplementary if the other hon. member would kindly sit down and allow me to ask my supplementary.

Is the minister prepared to admit that a carrier who does not have licences has an unfair advantage in being able to acquire customers in a way that would not be allowed by those who have licences, and thereby use those customers as proof, in their application for a licence, of necessity and convenience for the service?

I hear in the specific case of UPS where they have used automobiles. Would the minister not admit that a licensed carrier would never be allowed to get away with that, because he would be called in and questioned on some other item, and pressure would be put on him by the transport board?

[10:45]

Mr. Conway: Somebody had better talk to Doug Moffatt.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I totally digested all of that question, so I will take it as notice. I would like to read it very carefully.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: In view of the fact that 140 Canadian firms and the Canada Post Office is appearing against this, and it is going to cost us hundreds of millions of dollars down the line, why would the minister not personally intervene on behalf of the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that quite well in my answer to the original question.

Mr. Sargent: You haven't answered it at all. Don't you have any clout at all down there?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have no power, and I don't believe I should have, as the minister, power to tell the board that it cannot hear an application. There are avenues for appeal under the legislation which the member is very well aware of.

Mr. Cassidy: You are acting like a babe in the woods.

ABITIBI FOREST PRODUCTS LIMITED

Ms. Bryden: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Today and yesterday were deadline dates for Abitibi Forest Products Limited in meeting control orders under the Environmental Protection Act. In view of the importance of enforcing these orders, if we are to make any progress in ending the very severe pollution of our waterways by the pulp and paper industry, could the minister indicate if Abitibi has, in fact, met the three deadlines for today and yesterday; namely, the two orders against the Thunder Bay and Fort William divisions of the company to submit an application for approval of a system to reduce the suspended solids in the mill effluent to 50 parts per million, and the one order against the Sturgeon Falls division to submit a report to the director proposing how they plan to reduce the phenol loading from the press runoff at the hardboard mill by 75 per cent?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, on the first two orders that were mentioned I can't give the member an answer today, but will on Monday. On the second part, on Abitibi at Sturgeon Falls, I don't think we have anything from them yet but I guess they have the rest of the day.

Ms. Bryden: If they have not complied with these orders by Monday, what action does the minister intend to take?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I would like to have time over the weekend to consider that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: That is called planning.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Since Abitibi, Thunder Bay, has obviously been in violation of the control order with respect to BOD emissions in 1977 as opposed to 1976, does the ministry intend to charge that company?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member is saying "further"; and that too will be considered.

Mr. Breaguh: Don't take the whole one, George.

Mr. Makarchuk: You will have a busy weekend.

Hon. Mr. McCague: That's right.

GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY

Mr. McGuigan: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue, and I would hope that the Minister of Agriculture and Food would be interested in this.

In view of the fact that the greenhouse vegetable industry and the floriculture industry is struggling to cope with the high escalating costs of energy, and in view of this government's interest in energy conservation, would the ministry eliminate the sales tax on thermal blankets? By way of explanation, these thermal blankets are a system of introducing an extra layer of covering and are responsible for saving up to 60 per cent of the energy. Recently mechanical systems have been introduced to make this very practical. So I would ask the minister to consider reducing the sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Again I have to say that that type of policy is made by the Treasurer and not by the Minister of Revenue. From a personal viewpoint, I'll certainly be happy to look into it and discuss it with the Treasurer. It sounds like a fairly good idea.

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer won't like that.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Since this matter is very important to the greenhouse industry, that is to say, the entire energy ingredient in their operation is vitally important, as was recognized by the Minister of Energy in the study that ministry undertook to utilize waste heat from nuclear plants and apply them in a greenhouse operation, would the minister undertake to speak to the Treasurer about this immediately to see if some problems cannot be resolved quickly, in view of the fact that the greenhouse industry is already involved in a new season's production and will continue through that season in the next number of months?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, I will make that commitment to discuss it with the Treasurer. I will get back to the members.

MULTIRACIAL ADOPTIONS

Mr. McClellan: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. In view of the fact that a member of the Ontario Human Rights Commission made allegations that the Ottawa Children's Aid Society practised a policy of discrimination with respect to adoptions in reference to the adoption of white children by East Indians—and I am quoting from a CP story of about two weeks ago that specific allegations were made that the society did not permit multi-racial adoptions—I want to ask the minister what actions he has taken to investigate those allegations which were made some time ago and what he has discovered?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I was not aware that there had been any allegations made by a member of the Ontario Human Rights Commission. If there is any substance to those kinds of allegations, I certainly am very concerned about it and I will respond to the member more fully when I have had a chance to investigate the matter more fully.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, do I understand from what the minister said, that he has not yet investigated those allegations which were made some time ago and were reported quite widely in the media?

An hon. member: Let the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) answer.

Mr. Philip: Let him answer his own questions.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not sure whether it is a problem of semantics or not but I will again state that I was not aware of any allegations being made by any member of the Ontario Human Rights Commission. I will check into that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North.

Mr. McClellan: May I have a final supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: You will have an opportunity after the minister responds to your initial questions.

Mr. McClellan: He didn't respond, with respect.

Mr. Speaker: He took them as notice.

Mr. McClellan: No, he didn't.

Mr. Deans: He didn't.

Mr. Speaker: He did.

Mr. Deans: He didn't.

Hon. Mr. Norton: With the greatest of respect.

OMA FEE SCHEDULE

Mr. Conway: My question is of the Minister of Health and it deals with the recent OHIP matter. Can the minister indicate to this House whether or not his ministry is giving any serious study to the matter of altering in any substantial way the present payment of 90 per cent of OMA fee schedule? Is he contemplating any change to move significantly from that 90 per cent ratio?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Certainly not for the balance of the year that is presently under agreement until May 1. As for the future, I think we have to wait and see what comes out of the negotiations with the medical association for the balance of 1978 and beyond.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Then do I understand the minister to state to this House that in future months the 90 per cent ratio is from his point of view very much a negotiable item? Can he assure this House that to the extent it is a negotiable item—and if it is not I would like the minister to say very clearly to this House here today that it is not negotiable—is he in any way contemplating adjusting that 90 per cent ratio downwards, to perhaps bring to bear certain patient participation that could very well serve to be the most inequitable form of deterrent within our health care system and to possibly ruin the concept of the universal—

Mr. Speaker: The question's been asked.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Give him a suggestion. Give him some alternatives from over there.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have to be somewhat obtuse on this today because we are in negotiations with the medical association—

Mr. Deans: Today?

Mr. Warner: You are always obtuse.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —on the next fee schedule. Let me say, though, that certainly this year's negotiations are considerably different to any that have occurred in the past because, again, following on the instructions of the council of the medical associations, and based on the instructions of the membership of the medical association, they have indicated that it is their intention to write a "realistic" fee schedule. I have indicated in turn to them, and publicly and in this House a day ago, that there is no way that the government can consider, or will, pay 36 per cent more on the OHIP benefit schedule.

At this point, I think we have to realize that perhaps where we may end up is with a separate OHIP schedule of benefits and a separate OMA fee schedule, rather than the current relationship under the regulations where the OHIP benefit is 90 per cent of the OMA fee schedule.

Mr. Dukszta: Supplementary: Will the minister tell me then if he is prepared to accept the OMA proposal of the government paying 75 per cent—once he allows for the increases in fees which they demand—which in effect would mean that the patients would pay infinitely more than they're paying right now?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Without trying to destroy the negotiations and make them a meaningless exercise, I would have to say that I would expect that we will probably end up with two separate schedules.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is the minister saying, therefore, that with two separate schedules it will be possible for all doctors in the province to bill over and above what OHIP pays and yet not have to opt out of the OHIP plan? Or will the minister simply be allowing all doctors under the present-day circumstances to opt out of the OHIP plan, bill the patient directly, and then the patients will bill for the so-called OHIP schedule from the government?

Is the spread going to be more than 10 per cent and will that be allowed without having to opt out the way one presently has to do?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Those are two different questions.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is not what I'm saying. I think we should take one thing at a time. Let's complete the negotiations with the OMA and see where we end up. As I've already indicated, I think I have a good idea of where we're going to end up, but I'm not talking about changing the law that pertains to opting in and opting out.

Mr. Duksza: Would the minister tell me then, in spite of the obfuscating words that he is using, is he now going to move to introduce a deterrent fee and abolish the opting-in system? Is that what he's telling us?

An hon. member: That's what it boils down to.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, he just said he wasn't.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Sometimes when the hon. member speaks too quickly, I don't understand. But I'll try.

Mr. Reed: When you speak too quickly, we don't understand.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I know. I have been very careful.

Mr. Duksza: I just said that the minister obfuscates when he is speaking.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I've been very careful. If you notice, I've slowed down. I'm taking lessons in diction.

Mr. Kerrio: Sometimes when the minister speaks slowly we don't understand.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: And he's talking louder.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: And I'm talking louder.

Mr. Martel: Yes, but you're just trying to imitate McKeough.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That wasn't the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not saying that at this time we intend to do what I think the member said.

Mr. Speaker: The final supplementary; the hon. member for Renfrew North.

Mr. Conway: Would the minister not agree that given the fact that it seems to be a negotiable item, and given the fact that this seems to provide an opportunity to fundamentally qualify the entire health insurance system in this province, will he be prepared to bring to the social development committee next week a statement of policy, as soon as he can? And I realize the situation with regard to the negotiations. Will he be prepared to tell us then what, in general terms, the policy of the government will be in this vital area and when those negotiations with the OMA are expected to be concluded so that, in fact, we can see the final product of these very important and sensitive discussions?

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: One would hope the negotiations would be concluded in a few weeks but, realistically, we are probably looking at another month.

Mr. S. Smith: By coincidence only.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: They have been held up for a variety of reasons but I won't go into that right now. Certain government policy is the law at present.

Mr. Sargent: You're stick-handling.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Depending on the outcome of the negotiations, that can have an impact on it. And if a miracle occurs and we get an original idea from across the floor that looks appealing, that could have an impact.

Mr. Sargent: You need all the help you can get.

FOODLAND ONTARIO PROGRAM

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I wonder if he would tell the House whether it is his intent that farm produce be wholly produced in Ontario when displayed under the Foodland Ontario logo? Secondly, is he monitoring the supermarket advertisements and other uses of the logo to make sure it is being used only to promote sales of Ontario produce?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in order to answer the member's supplementary question first—

Mr. Martel: Slow down.

Mr. Deans: More slowly.

Hon. W. Newman: Okay, I'll slow down.

Mr. Cassidy: You've got all the time in the world.

Hon. W. Newman: It's kind of nice to get a question. To answer what will be the member's supplementary question first, we have had excellent co-operation from the chain stores, from the marketing boards—actually right through from the producer to the processor and to the final sales outlets. We have had excellent co-operation on the Foodland symbol and on the advertising in the stores. We have had tremendous results from our program, which I would be glad to make available to the House.

Mr. Sargent: How do you know?

Hon. W. Newman: Because we know how many—

Mr. Speaker: That wasn't part of the original question.

Hon. W. Newman: I'll ignore that.

We do have the figures to show how successful the promotion has been. There have been thousands of Foodland Ontario symbols used in the ads in the daily papers. Out of the thousands of symbols that have been used by the chains, there have been four mistakes made. Those were either done in the type-setting or somewhere else, and in one case one of the chains apologized that it got in; it wasn't done intentionally. There have been four mistakes out of the many thousands of symbols that have appeared.

Mr. Swart: May I inform the minister then—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a supplementary.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, I have two newspapers here with more than four mistakes in them. What would be his opinion on these newspaper ads from the Niagara Falls Review of March 8 which had logos sprinkled all over them where American produce was being advertised and, more particularly, a part of the ad for "orange juice, Bel-Air frozen concentrate, 12.5-fluid-ounce tin, 69 cents, Foodland Ontario"?

May I ask him what his opinion is about the Dominion Store in Niagara Square, Niagara Falls, where the Foodland Ontario logo is displayed all along the canned fruit section, by the Australian peaches and by the fruit cocktail using California grapes—and that's right in the Niagara Peninsula? Will he do an effective monitoring and will he advise the supermarkets to use the logo only for Ontario produce? Doesn't he think this is a misuse of the logo by these supermarkets, probably to promote their own sales?

Hon. W. Newman: It's no wonder the NDP doesn't have a single person over there who knows anything about agriculture. It's quite obvious to me. The hon. member brought his bill forward last week—

Mr. Martel: When in doubt, attack.

Mr. Cassidy: That's why we don't ask you questions.

Mr. McClellan: Tell us about Ontario orange juice.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Only one person has the floor at a time.

Hon. W. Newman: In answer to the hon. member's question, I know about the one on orange juice, but let me tell him this: It's a very successful program. We are doing monitoring in the stores within the ability of the staff that we have. If somebody makes a mistake—and it does happen—

Mr. McClellan: It's a rip-off; it's not a mistake.

Hon. W. Newman: I honestly and sincerely believe that we are getting great co-operation on this program from all sectors. I'm telling the hon. member that the sales have proved, that we've moved Ontario produce out and that we're helping the farmers.

Mr. Warner: You're the minister of baloney.

Hon. W. Newman: The hon. member wants to nit-pick; that's all he's doing. He's nit-picking on one or two—

Mr. McClellan: That's fraudulent advertising—not nit-picking.

Hon. W. Newman: He's nit-picking because there were some mistakes—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister is not really answering the question.

PURCHASE OF POWER GENERATING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, if I can get his attention. Who is responsible for the cost involved in the overall repairing of the generator rotors in the six operating units at Nanticoke generating station which are now being sent to England? Why was this equipment purchased offshore when such equipment can be constructed here in full or in part in Canada with proven performance?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will answer that question in full detail next week.

Mr. Haggerty: Supplementary: Is the ministry now monitoring Hydro's purchase of equipment for the new nuclear plant at Darlington? Is the equipment being bought here in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is yes, we are monitoring it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister then give us some information to the House in terms of the proportion of Canadian-made equipment which is going into that plant and the reasons for which equipment is being bought elsewhere?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will be very pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TENANT PROTECTION

Hon. Mr. Welch, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Grossman, moved resolution No. 11: Resolved: That the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations' report on the policy options for continuing tenant protection (Sessional Paper No. 13) be referred to the standing committee on general government for consideration of such matters as: The implications of rent controls; the need for adequate quantity and quality of rental housing; the affordability of rental accommodation; methods and procedures for the resolution of landlord and tenant disputes; tenants' need for security of tenure; the rights and obligations between landlord and tenant; and that the committee report back to this House at its earliest opportunity, but no later than June 1, 1978; and that the committee have full power and authority to employ counsel and to call for persons, papers and things and to examine witnesses under oath; and the assembly doth command and compel the attendance before the said standing committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations for which the Honourable the Speaker may issue his warrant or warrants; and that the proceedings of the committee be recorded, transcribed and printed by Hansard in the format of the daily House Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for my absence when the order was called. I was trying to explain the new liquor advertising guidelines.

I am pleased to be rising at his point in time not only in the life of this minority Parliament but also at this point in time in the development of new ideas and concepts in the Legislature of Ontario. Green papers have been around for a long time—green papers, white papers and every other coloured paper. At this point in time, what with a lot of discussion about freedom of information, open government and grassroots public participation, we thought that it might just as well be time to attempt a new approach in the area of development of governmental policy.

I thought that this would be especially a very appropriate place to begin this new exercise since it is hardly a secret that the rent review scheme in Ontario, the nuts and bolts of it, is, if anything, a creature of this Legislative Assembly. It has been dealt with, tinkered with, amended, and changed in great detail by this assembly. There's nothing wrong with that. That's the way the system must operate.

In acknowledging that the system that the tenants of this province and the landlords of this province are living under at the present time is a creation of the very intense debate that has occurred on two or three occasions on the floor of this House, I thought it was time that perhaps we acknowledged the fact that this system very much emanates out of what happens literally on this floor in this chamber. If that's the way it's going to be with this particular piece of legislation, we ought to be fair to everyone out there, and give them the opportunity, the right and the privilege to participate in the process right from day one.

I think it is an important concept in the development, for example, of free and open information. At this stage, if I had followed the advice given to me through the media by way of a press release issued yesterday by the leader of the NDP, then I would be sitting with all the documents and all the studies, the benefit of all the work that my very excellent staff has done, I would be sitting over at my office at 555 Yonge Street developing policy over the next few months without saying to the people of this province or this assembly, "Here's all the information I have. Let's work with it together. Let's have all of you see what I've got to work with."

Then next fall, perhaps 10 or 12 weeks before the expiry of the current program, I would suddenly be coming to this House introducing new legislation with the ordinary compendium being presented to the opposition and expect that at that stage there would be enough time and a lack of pressure sufficient to allow a full and complete, honest, open, sensible discussion of the future of rent control for 1979 and beyond. I don't think that's a sensible way to operate. The leader of the NDP thinks that's a good way to operate—

Mr. Warner: You want to get out of it, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and I say to the leader of the NDP, I prefer to operate by giving him all the information that I have.

Mr. Warner: You're abandoning the tenants of this province, and you know it. Call it for what it is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Surely I would expect his colleague from York South (Mr. MacDonald) to understand and appreciate that step.

Mr. Warner: It is a sham, an absolute sham.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So what we've done is to present for the members of this House who care to read it rather than knee-jerk react, the analysis that we have, all the facts and figures. Those members who have taken the time to read the green paper with the red cover will notice that we have covered the background, the history, provided statistics, the experience in other jurisdictions, and finally, each and every alternative and option that civil servants from three different ministries could compile for the information of the members, as they hopefully reach a carefully thought out, rational decision.

On top of that, I want to inform the House that they will have seen the invitation by me to the public at large to communicate with me directly, letting me know what their thoughts are on the future—

Mr. Reid: You would have almost thought there was an election on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I communicate with them during elections. I have invited the public to communicate with me directly to let me know which policy options they thought were satisfactory for them. The public has been kind enough to respond in a fashion which has been very creative. I haven't got many letters that say, "Dear Larry, I love rent controls," signed Michael Cassidy; nor have I had many letters saying, "Dear Larry, I hate rent controls," signed—

Mr. Martel: Stuart Smith.

Mr. Makarchuk: Larry Grossman.

Mr. Kerrio: In fact, you don't get many letters anyway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: — by one of the friends of the corporate donors that the NDP refuses to accept funds from. In any case, I have had very few of those letters. I have had very reasonable, constructive suggestions in those letters, and in accordance with this government's policy of openness and freedom of information we are going to turn over all those communications, as I have done on the condominium responses, to the committee and to the opposition, so that the opposition will, in this period of time, be able to fully participate in the development of the policy options for tenant protection over the next few months, rather than being forced to do it in the absence of all the public input I am getting, in the absence of the excellent work that has been done by my staff, in a period of time six weeks prior to the expiry of the present program.

I believe, quite sincerely, that that sort of slow and careful non-pressurized development of a tenant protection package is much preferable to the pressure packed situation which resulted in the last two pieces of legislation. It may even avoid last-minute, ill thought out amendments being brought forward and passed, which later sometimes have to be revoked or changed.

Mr. Martel: Or elections.

Mr. Breaugh: Yes, or it might avoid elections, Larry.

[11:15]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There seems to be some impression that this is a strange and unusual step, and, indeed, in Ontario this sort of process of referring a green paper is rather unique. It is not, however, unique to Canada. There have been several examples in the federal government—and heaven knows I hardly hold them up often as a fine example of openness or democracy—where green papers have been referred to committees prior to the legislative stage. I'd like to let the House know about some of those initiatives.

We talk about green papers and white papers. I was interested to know that there's an orange paper on social services. It was considered by Parliament and federal-provincial conferences and most of the proposals that were dealt with and received through that process have been now dealt with by way of governmental responses.

There is a green paper submitted to the federal House on MP's conflict of interest. Both federal houses set up committees to consider the green paper. They reached quite different conclusions, the members might be interested to hear, and the matter now is before the federal cabinet at the legislative stage—after the green paper has gone through two series of committee deliberations.

There has been a paper on tax reform. Two parliamentary committees were appointed to consider that paper and sat for a full year. The legislation which resulted from that process closely reflected the report of the House committee.

The election expenses task force produced a green paper which was sent to committee. The revised Unemployment Insurance Act, in fact, started out as a green paper document which was referred to a House of Commons committee for their report to the House.

So these are examples of where the executive branch of government has at an early stage sought consultation with the members of the assembly. It's worked very well federally. There is not a wide range of issues where, because of the very technical nature of the problem, or sometimes because of the pressures of time, that procedure is not effective. There are very many more instances in which the only way to deal sensibly with a piece of proposed legislation is to put it in legislative form, draw up an Act, present it to the assembly and do it in that fashion.

So there's no set of rules, there is no standard set of proceedings which is automatically applicable, I believe, to every single government initiative.

Then we come to rent control. I think it's important that we assess whether this green paper process being referred to the committee suits the development of policy options for tenant protection. I look at the allegations made by the members of the third party here, claiming that the government is about to try to depoliticize the issue—to get politics out of the issue. I want to be very honest with them, as I always am. If it depoliticizes the issue I think that's great. I think the landlords and the tenants in this province are entitled to a heck of a lot more than to have to live with a rent review scheme that is the product of sheer knee-jerk politics. I think they are entitled to have the thing dealt with on a fair basis.

Mr. Warner: You want to get out of it and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those who disagree with me over in the very raunchy third party this morning—

Mr. Warner: You don't understand.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —I want to tell them that the members of this party on that committee will not be whipped. They will not be instructed, they will not be pretaught, they will not be pre-conditioned, they will not be told how to vote, they will not be told to vote together on all occasions. They will be invited to go to that committee and actually sit and listen and learn what they can over the period of time—

Mr. Warner: And then abandon the tenants.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —based upon this option paper, based upon the mail we've been receiving, and based upon the public hearing.

Mr. Warner: What nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I challenge the third party to do the same with their members. I challenge them to do that—and I hear no one taking me up on that challenge.

Mr. Warner: We will be there to protect the tenants because you won't.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Absolutely no one there can take me up on that challenge because they're too fixed into the knee-jerk reaction. Every time we on this side of the House—and I even want to be fair to the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition—every time one of our party mentions the words "rent review" or "rent control," the third party reacts by saying, "You're out to kill tenants. You're out to screw the tenants. You're about to drop the rent review."

Mr. Makarchuk: We're looking at your past record.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, just so that those members will know the way this minister and this government feel, let's talk for a moment about the rhetoric that the NDP went through during the last campaign. They were out to assure all tenants—who they believe vote for them exclusively, but of course that is foolish; they don't—that if they elect a Davis majority government it will immediately dump rent controls. That simply is not true.

Mr. Martel: That is what you are doing now. We listened to Sidney Handleman. Tough Sidney.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those members who were here and listened will have heard the Throne Speech that came in March 1977, wherein the government clearly committed itself to a continuing program of tenant protection.

Mr. Martel: Until 1978.

Mr. Warner: That is not what your paper said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is exactly what it said in the Speech from the Throne; that is exactly what it says in this paper.

Mr. Warner: It does not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If those members want to calm themselves down, or offer to resign if I prove them wrong, then they can sit there quietly—

Mr. Turner: Why don't you read it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will see if I can find it.

Mr. Warner: Try the first paragraph.

Mr. Handleman: Couldn't you get past the first paragraph?

Mr. Warner: It was conceived as a temporary program.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Take it easy, you are going to have to sit and listen.

Mr. Breaugh: That is the best part of your speech.

Mr. Handleman: It takes a little bit of brains.

Mr. Martel: Well that leaves you out, Sid.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am going to read from the preface. Maybe the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere was too busy writing the press releases for his leader to read the preface to the option paper, which was the subject matter of that press release.

Mr. Breaugh: Do you need any help?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The third paragraph of the preface says: "On March 29, 1977, the Ontario government announced an extension of the rent review legislation"—the Ontario government, not the then opposition—"to the end of December 1978 in the Speech from the Throne for the fourth session of the 30th Parliament of the province of Ontario. This action extended the period of rent controls from the original 24 months to 41 months."

Mr. Martel: Until the end of 1978. You left that part out of it, to the end of 1978, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "At the same time, the Throne Speech announced that measures would be taken to stimulate the production of rental housing accommodation and that the government would be placing before the people policy options for the continuing protection of tenants. It is this latter commitment that this green paper attempts to meet." There it is. The commitment was there in the Throne Speech. It was there in black and white.

Mr. Martel: Go back a bit.

Mr. Warner: Check your own book. The first paragraph says it is a temporary program.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Unless those members are willing to call the Lieutenant Governor a liar, I want to tell them it was there. They can go and get a copy.

Mr. Martel: You wrote it. Don't give us the stuff about the Lieutenant Governor.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Have the person who handed your seatmate the second question yesterday run over to the legislative library to see if he can also find a copy of the Throne Speech. They will find it there.

Mr. Martel: Don't give us the nonsense about the Lieutenant Governor. You wrote it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Our commitment is clear, and let's reaffirm it right now. Don't go David, you will be sorry. You will be sorry because you will find it. Don't say I didn't warn you. In any case, just so we are absolutely clear about it, let's understand that rent review is here in this province not because of a minority situation. Whether this government were re-elected with a majority or not, we are and were committed to a scheme of tenant protection.

Mr. Martel: That is not what Sidney said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can send the members dozens of my speeches and I know they will not pay much more attention to them than they did to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Warner: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick in his remarks indicated that I was not correct in the statement as outlined in this red-covered green paper.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You're red-covered too now, come to think of it.

Mr. Warner: I simply want to correct the record. On page 4, in the introduction, the very first line reads: "Ontario's current rent review program was conceived as a temporary program."

Mr. Eaton: That is the then current one.

Mr. Warner: A temporary program. It does not mean that it is permanent protection for the tenants of this province, and that is what I was saying and that is why I am opposing the move to remove the protection of the tenants of this province.

Mr. Turner: You didn't say that.

Mr. Handleman: There's more than one way to protect tenants.

Mr. Elgie: Tell them the facts.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I thought the member might be interested, now that he is looking back and reading old documents, to hear this: "We categorically reject the government's decision to discontinue rent control after only two years in August 1977. Long-term measures are needed to equalize the power between tenants and landlords and these measures should include rent control until the housing crisis is at an end." Does that sound like a statement made by someone who thinks rent controls should be temporary? Of course, it does—temporary until the crisis is finished.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And that was issued by someone who was then the housing critic for your party—Michael Cassidy, MPP, Ottawa Centre—on November 6, 1975.

Mr. Martel: Are you saying the crisis is past? Is the crisis past, Larry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wouldn't speak for him today—I never speak for him—but he at that time was acknowledging that rent control was a temporary measure, as indeed the member's colleagues in other provinces, other socialist provinces and formerly socialist provinces, have also acknowledged.

Mr. Martel: Tell us when the crisis is over, will you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Even his cousins in Sweden who had the archetypal rental control system have ended it. And by the way, in case the members haven't done that research, they ended it mostly at the request of the tenants' group over there who acknowledged that the continuance of rental controls was smothering them, was killing the market. So that is the situation.

Mr. Warner: Are you finished twisting the words? Then go back to the first sentence.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Like the leader of the NDP—I'm only going from what I read—

Mr. Warner: That is not what it says here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —we believe that rent controls are a temporary measure, and we never held them out as anything other than that, until the housing crisis ends.

Mr. Martel: When's that?

Mr. Warner: That is not what it says here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will agree entirely that the members, when they were going door to door during the election with all their colleagues, held out rent controls to tenants—not to those other people but to tenants—as being a forever situation if they just elected the NDP. The NDP would keep their rent at whatever figure the NDP was using—$50, $100, $200 a month—whatever it was—

Mr. Warner: What sheer nonsense. Boy are you lost.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and rent controls would be in forever if they would just elect Stephen Lewis before he retired. That was the deal the members sold at the doors but it wasn't the deal they sold in these press releases. The deal they sold in these press releases was that it's a temporary measure and "we must find a way"—I'll read it to the House again—"to equalize the power between tenants and landlords." What do the members opposite think about that? Is that what their party is saying today, that it is coming here to find a way to equalize the power between landlords and tenants? Because I want to tell the House, I am sure as heck not going to guide the members of our party who are serving on that committee; but since the NDP has already indicated its hesitancy about participating in the policy formation, I am going to see that the members of my party know the statements made by the NDP over the past little while just so that they can let us know whether the members of that party have kept within the bounds of the criterion they've always set out for rent control: "Temporary measures" until one finds a way to end them, until one finds of way to "equalize the power between landlords and tenants"— the member should take the advice of his friend in front of him who is telling him to cool it—and I know they will be temperate in the development.

Mr. Warner: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Point of privilege, he is not your friend?

Mr. Warner: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I don't think the minister or any other member of this assembly should be able to twist the words and meanings from statements which are made.

Mr. Eaton: What have you been doing?

Mr. Reid: You've got to give him credit for gall, anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I don't think that is a point of privilege.

Mr. Reid: It certainly isn't.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind the members of this House that we are now debating a resolution and any member will have an opportunity to get up and speak to the resolution.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really have more to say but I am going to let them blow off some steam in the meantime. I am sure every member of their party is going to speak because we have uttered the magic words—rent control.

I want to make it quite clear—

Mr. Conway: Perfectly clear.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Abundantly.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I won't say "perfectly clear." I want to get it on the record—

Mr. Renwick: Well, it will get on there automatically.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —because I am just not prepared to permit that party to run around the province saying the Tories are backing away from rent control. They did it yesterday in their press release—

Mr. Warner: It happens to be true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I won't talk about twisting words. I don't call that twisting words; I just call it wrong.

Mr. Turner: He is honest.

Mr. Conway: Claire Hoy twisted you around.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to get on the record at the start of the debate that this government is committed to tenant protection.

Mr. Warner: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This government developed this option paper in order that we can find a mechanism by which we can be fair to landlords and tenants. That is entirely consistent with equalizing the power, and I quote from the member for Ottawa Centre, between the landlords and tenants. That is very consistent with what this government has always stood for, that is, equity and fairness.

Mr. Renwick: Not all the time.

Mr. Martel: You even say that in a pious manner.

Mr. Renwick: There wouldn't have been any rent control at all, if you could have avoided it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We're not about to go out and say we are only in the business—

Mr. Martel: Every cabinet minister says he's never introduced rent control. You opposed it before the 1975 election. Don't give us that nonsense.

Mr. Renwick: That's right.

Mr. Turner: If you want to make a speech, stand up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: You didn't want rent control, and you know it.

Mr. Renwick: You've been trying to get rid of rent control ever since the day you got it and you're still trying to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's look at the facts.

Mr. Martel: You're opposed to rent control. You didn't want to introduce it.

Mr. Turner: You're very sensitive.

Mr. Renwick: This government won't protect the tenants. It never has.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This government can simply sit here and let the current scheme expire.

Mr. Martel: Read Donald Irvine's statement, the one on rent control.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: Read what the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) said. He couldn't find a minister to support him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm glad I'm not sitting on that committee with you guys.

Mr. Martel: Don't come here with that.

Mr. Warner: You're not half as glad as we are.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This government—

Mr. Martel: Is holier than thou. Your halo is getting too tight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now that is twisting things for them to accuse us of being holier than thou.

Mr. Handleman: We took lessons from them.

Mr. Martel: You'll have to watch your halo. It's going to fall over on top of you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This government could sit here and let the current scheme expire. It is sunsetted in the magic words of the Leader of the Opposition and my colleague from London South (Mr. Walker).

Mr. Breaugh: Ah, you got yourself out of that very nicely.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It dies at the end of 1978. If the members of the NDP were right in saying that we don't have a commitment to tenants, that we don't have a commitment to rent review—

Mr. Martel: You don't.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —then we could just sit here and let the thing die at the end of this year.

Mr. Warner: That's just too obvious.

Mr. Renwick: Or you could tell us what your policy is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We're not doing that. My friend, the member for Riverdale, says we could tell the House what our policy is. I say to my friend that, unlike all the experts on his benches—

Mr. Renwick: You're the government. Do you know that?

Mr. Warner: They've forgotten about that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —who accuse us of being holier than thou, we are quite humble over here. We acknowledge that on March 31, 1978—

Mr. Martel: You are too pious. That's why your halo is falling. Can you believe that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —we do not have a complete, comprehensive answer to the problem because it is a very difficult one.

Mr. Warner: You have none. You answer for UDI.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Unlike the members of that party, we do acknowledge—

Mr. Martel: You came into rent control not wanting to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You've got 14 speakers. If you want me to sit and listen to all of them, you're going to have to sit and listen to me.

Mr. Martel: But we'll tell the truth.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That would be so unique the place would probably close.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We'll get a large crowd if you promise to tell the truth. We'll get all our members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: You can't block this one.

Mr. Martel: He can't put up 20.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The point of fact is that the development of a new scheme is necessary because we acknowledge the inequities and problems in the current scheme. The current scheme is one that would have worked well over a shortened period of time, which is what it was originally intended for.

Mr. Warner: It was nicely pointed for UDI.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, in order to be fair—are you ready for this?—

Mr. Martel: Let me brace myself.

Mr. Breaugh: We're ready for anything now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —to the tenants out there, some of whom have been faced with the requirement under the current legislation to carry all the increased costs in terms of increased rents on their backs, and in fairness to those tenants who have been faced with two eight per cent increases and a six per cent increase without appeal, when perhaps those increases were not warranted because of an increase in cost—those are the landlords who stayed away—in fairness to them, we think we must develop a scheme which deals with those problems. We can't keep the current scheme. It's unfair. It's unfair to a lot of landlords and it's unfair to a lot of tenants.

Mr. Warner: Bring in some legislation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At the same time, consistent with this government's lead in the development of residential landlord and tenant laws in this country—

Mr. Breaugh: Watch it. Your humility is showing again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —we have also included in the green paper an analysis of the problems in the resolution of landlord and tenant disputes. One of the things we acknowledge in there and one of the things which I hope the committee would address in detail—once you fellows can get by your reluctance about discussing anything to do with rent control, other than a change—is how to deal with the horrendous problem of a tenant whose landlord won't clean the lobby or won't shovel the snow. Currently, one has absolutely to go to the county court to take any action against his landlord. It's inequitable, it's unfair and it's not workable.

Mr. Renwick: That exists whether there is rent control or not and that is a matter of landlord and tenant law for which your ministry is responsible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: It has nothing to do with rent review.

Mr. Handleman: Maybe there should be something else.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Riverdale says that has nothing to do with rent review. I presume I can take it then that his members will overcome their fright about discussing rent review or anything to do with rents and, in the committee stage, they will at least deal with that part of the option paper which deals at great length with easy and swift resolution of landlord and tenant matters. There was a representative of the Attorney General's ministry sitting on the development committee of that document; he was there to give all input on landlord and tenant problems.

The terms of reference of the committee are quite clear in the order paper: Part of the process is to deal with landlord and tenant matters. I hope the members of the committee will spend a lot of time in resolving that problem. Forty per cent of the calls coming to our rent review officers are landlord and tenant calls. They do not relate to rent review. That's why we think it's time a committee of this assembly dealt with the problem of sending landlords and tenants to two different places to resolve two different problems with regard to their tenants.

Mr. Renwick: You have two separate problems. You can't run them all together.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We in this party think there is a possibility of putting them together; and although I don't have all those press releases, I know that given time—maybe by the time this debate concludes—I'll be able to show that, in fact, the NDP has supported the proposition of putting them all together in one tribunal: a rentalsman concept. I don't know if that concept will work; this government is perfectly direct about that. We don't know if that concept will work, but we think it bears investigation.

I urge the members of this assembly, and specifically the members who will be sitting on that committee if this resolution carries, to develop a scheme which includes the landlord and tenant problems, the rental problems and the housing supply problems, and to produce something that is as much as possible free of politics. I'm not that much of an idealist—I can't be, after this long in office—to believe they're going to do it totally devoid of the politics of the situation. But I do hope, by following this scheme, we can accomplish a couple of things.

First, I hope we can remove the pressurized aspect from it—and long before we move to the legislative phase.

Second, I hope this vehicle will permit the maximum amount of public input.

There is authority in the terms of reference for the hiring of counsel, the spending of some funds and a sufficient length of time to meet. I hope the members of the committee will listen carefully to the public input they receive from both landlords and tenants in the next few months, not in an adversarial fashion but to learn everything there is to know about the situation.

We must come up with a system that is fairer to everyone involved. The option paper sets out all the options that the staff from the three ministries were able to devise. That doesn't mean those are all the options. Again, being a humble group on this side of the House, we don't purport to have all the answers, or all the possible answers.

Mr. Martel: Your humility is getting to me.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We invite the members of the assembly, the members of that committee and members of the public to read over the options and help us. Are there other options we haven't considered? Is there another way to work the scheme? If there is, we very badly need it.

I invite the members of this House to join with us in this process. Maybe it will work and maybe it won't, but I've heard for very long about the desire of the opposition parties to take advantage of the minority situation and participate in the development of policy. Well, this is the time.

Mr. Renwick: No. You're the government; we're not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can't tell them how to act, what things to look at or the ground rules by which to play. I can't tell them how to assess their own political priorities; they will do that themselves.

I urge the members, though, to apply themselves to the development of overall concepts, the policies to be followed and the types of alternatives that should be selected, so that when we get down to the debate in the fall, when we introduce legislation reflecting the results of the committee's deliberations this spring, we can spend serious time in committee stage, and on the floor of this assembly, looking carefully at the nuts and bolts of the policies that have been indicated previously as being acceptable by the members of this House.

We need that to provide fair treatment to the landlords and tenants who, come the fall of this year, will be wondering what's going to happen to their rents on January 1, 1979. In order to do that, they must have some certainty developed along about September of this year. In order for that certainty to be there, then this committee must deliberate, pick the policy options that it prefers and permit us to develop and come forward with the specifics of the government's legislation along about September of this year.

Obviously I will be back in this House trying to get that piece of legislation passed by this minority Parliament, and I hope it will be passed—and with some consistency with regard to what the committee's deliberations are this spring. That's the only way that we can restore some order out there in the rental housing market.

I want to conclude by saying that our schedule, in order for the orderly development of a rent review program to take effect next calendar year, goes something like this: The committee will report on or about June 1. That will give us time to move into the legislative drafting stage, implementing the general principles approved by that committee. About the middle of September, I hope to be able to announce the specifics of at least the government's intention, reflecting the desires of the assembly as expressed through the standing committee's deliberations. Then in October when the House reconvenes, we will move that legislation into the House. Hopefully at that time, perhaps even some of the venom of the third party on this issue will have been dispersed through the standing committee route, and we can move into a sensible, reasonable debate on clause by clause next fall.

I acknowledge the rent review nuts and bolts have been tinkered with and changed by this assembly and that this assembly has the right to do that. It will always have the right to do that and that's the way it should be. But I think in fairness to everyone out in the marketplace, a 41-month scheme of rent controls permitting a cost pass-through only, and permitting all others essentially to take an eight per cent increase, now a six per cent increase—essentially without appeal, because there aren't many appeals against those—and where those figures have become the minimums not the maximum, the scheme is just not working. That rent review scheme was a temporary one—41 months becomes too long.

Mr. Dukszta: So you are admitting it's a temporary one.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: I have never been shy about admitting the problems with the present rent review scheme—never. I started off that way. I said right from the start that the current scheme is not good enough. It is not a long term scheme. It's a short term scheme—

Mr. Martel: That's not the way you started off.

Mr. Renwick: It was dragged grudgingly out of you.

Hon. Mr. Crossman:—and now this government is moving to a long term scheme. We want to get down to what's going to be in place for the next few years. One of the problems in the development of rental housing is that landlords don't know what's going to be happening four years from today. Will there be a scheme in place? If so, what scheme? Will it be six per cent or eight per cent? Will it be in all municipalities or some? Whatever it is, they have to know. They may not like the scheme but I have always admired the ability of private enterprise to adapt to almost any scheme that governments lay on them—

Mr. Martel: Yes, right, whatever the ground rules are.

Hon. Mr. Crossman:—provided there are some rules, provided there is some consistency. I can never assure them that socialism will not overtake them, but at least I can assure them that until that day happens there will be a consistent and sensible set of rules—and I hope fair rules.

I urge the members of this assembly to participate in the development of some very difficult policies. We acknowledge it is difficult. If it breaks down to a back-biting political exercise, then I would agree in that case with the third party, that there will be no point doing that exercise if it's going to be knee-jerk politics. I urge the members not to miss this opportunity—not to fail to take this opportunity to participate in the policy development stage of a rental control program for 1979.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, Ontario embarked on a program of rent controls in late 1975 with the enactment of the Residential Premises Rent Review Act. In its recent green paper on rent review called "Policy Options for Continuing Tenant Protection" the government has tried to justify it as part of the national effort to control wages and prices stating that the legislation was "complementary to the federal government's anti-inflation program."

This statement betokens a singular lapse of memory. The fact is that rent review in Ontario was enacted before Ottawa's anti-inflation program, as a strictly political response during a hotly contested election campaign. The conditions that existed were emergency ones only in the political sense that the Conservative government in the summer of 1975 believed that its survival was at stake. [11:45]

One of the reasons the present program had so many problems associated with it was that it was clearly not thought out at that time. The terms of the objectives were not stated clearly. This is not to say that a real problem did not exist or does not exist in Ontario today. The rebirth of rent controls in this new form of rent review is a response to the problem that rents have been increasing at a faster rate than the incomes of many Canadians.

By the mid-1970s, rents were rising, and vacancy rates in many centres were low. Rent review legislation was imposed as a temporary stopgap measure to protect tenants from excessive rent increases, and we agreed to this. The situation which characterized the rental housing sector in the first half of this decade has not improved. Vacancy rates are still declining, rental housing construction activity is still low, and landlords are still seeking high rent increases.

On the one hand, rent increases have been out of line with income and it is clear that there are hundreds of thousands of households that cannot afford any rent increases at all. On the other hand, large rent hikes seem to be in the offing, and they are apparently needed if the private rental sector is ever again going to be building more rental units.

Thus, we recognize that there are two key issues at stake here. Number one is that there is a real affordability problem for over a quarter of a million people in Ontario. None of the options in the green paper will do anything about this affordability problem, and it is very conspicuous in the green paper that the government has not tried to deal with this matter. I think it is indicative of the fact that the government, after 35 years in power, is very short-sighted and is not planning ahead the way it should. The second key issue is the health of the private rental market. We as Liberals recognize that this is a tough issue, that this is a complex issue. Unlike the NDP, we realize this is not a simple issue of confrontation, as they indicated in their press release. This is not a black-and-white issue. We are not posturing on this issue and we do not intend to posture on this issue.

Mr. Davidson: Would you like to clarify that?

Mr. Epp: We believe that this issue is an important one and should be resolved as quickly as possible. Therefore, we agree and will work in this committee, but we will insist that it look at the real problem of rent control, the real problem of affordability, the real problem of making sure that we have a healthy market in which to obtain rental units, and we will not be bound by the short-sightedness or by the focus of the green paper.

Mr. Duksza: Mr. Speaker, there are three reasons why our party opposes the referral of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations report on policy options for continuing tenant protection to the standing committee on general government.

First, the rent review program must continue beyond the end of the year, period.

Second, the government actions are phoney. It is clear the government would dearly love to abandon the present rent review program, preferably in its entirety, and abandon tenants to so-called market forces—other words for legalized robbery by landlords—and is referring the matter to the committee hoping that the tacit coalition between the Conservative and Liberal parties will get the government off the hook. It is my fervent hope that the Liberal Party, including the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), will wake up to its responsibility towards tenants and vote solidly against the referral.

Mr. Reid: Come on! You can do better than that.

Mr. Reed: Talk about twisting words.

Mr. Duksza: The concept of the government House leader's resolution makes the government's intentions clear. The committee is to examine: 1. the implications of rent control; 2. the need for adequate quantity and quality of rental housing; 3. the affordability of rental accommodation; 4. the methods and procedures for the resolution of landlord and tenant disputes; 5. tenant needs for security of tenure; and 6. the rights and obligations between landlord and tenant. The resolution makes it clear that the present ultramontane government is questioning—and by implication wants to abandon—the hard-won rights of Ontario tenants.

The third reason for our opposition is that the government's green paper is a thoroughly tendentious document. This means it's biased. It's titled, "Policy Options for Continuing Tenant Protection" and proceeds to examine and support options which have nothing to do with tenant protection, but have a lot to do with the reduction, if not destruction, of tenant rights. The report even begins with a lie: "Ontario's current rent review program was conceived as a temporary program complementary to the federal government's anti-inflation program." Anyone who was in Ontario in the months leading up to the 1975 elections knows that this is patently untrue.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. It's double-think.

Mr. Duksza: The establishment of rent review had nothing to do with the anti-inflation program. The goal of the paper is obvious from the outset. The covering letter from Mr. Robbins, the executive director of the rent review program, to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations laid it out clearly. "It is our hope that by focusing on the issues involved and some of the alternative policy options that may be considered, this paper will serve as a basis for constructive debate and will prove to be of assistance to the government in determining an appropriate course to follow in the post-rent-review periods." I repeat—"in post-rent-review periods."

The basic assumptions of the report include: (a) rent review is an anti-inflation policy to prevent "unconscionable" rent increases;

(b) Much of the desire of tenants for rent review is actually a response to broader landlord-tenant problems;

(c) "Tenants need landlords and landlords need tenants"; in other words, future non-ownership housing development will be by private-for-profit developers. To quote the report: "In part, this emphasis on private activity has reflected the beliefs of the majority of Ontario citizens in the primacy of private (owner's) decisions. It also reflects a basic satisfaction with the standard of housing production by the private sector." And: "Any policy must include provision for an adequate return, if continued private involvement is to be assured."

(d) Tenants must bear the cost of providing the "incentive" to landlords and potential landlords. Even the limited public assistance now available to builders must be limited: "Any argument in favour of government involvement or activity must stand the test imposed by financial restraints."

The effect of those assumptions is to set up a trade-off between rent review and tenants' rights on one hand, and housing production and investment on the other—a trade-off in which tenants are the losers. The part of the report dealing with the general landlord-tenant disputes and tribunals is a safety valve which the government hopes to use to ease the pressure from tenants on the fundamental issue of rents and security of tenure.

There are four overall approaches suggested by the green paper—1. continue the program more or less as it is; 2. alter the program with basic changes aimed at relaxing controls; 3. alter the program with increased exemptions of various categories; 4. terminate the program.

Three out of four options are hostile to the present rent review program and nowhere is it suggested that rent review should perhaps be strengthened into an ongoing rent control system. Furthermore, the bias inherent in the report makes it clear that the purpose of including continuation of the program as one of the options is not to make a serious proposal for continuation but to marshal the arguments against rent review.

It needs no genius to see that the paper, under the guise of phoney objectivity, is making the argument that rent review must go. The conditions that led to the establishment of the rent review program have not changed. In fact, if anything, they are worse. Rental vacancy rates are even lower now than they were then. The vacancy rate in Metro Toronto in October 1977 was one per cent as compared with 2.2 per cent in October 1975; in Thunder Bay 0.3 per cent compared with 0.5 per cent two years earlier; in Ottawa 2.3 per cent compared with 2.6 per cent and in Windsor 0.8 per cent compared with 3.4 per cent.

The rental housing construction situation is no better or worse, for that matter, than it was in 1975. It is obvious that to eliminate rent review would be to force on Ontario tenants the same kind of massive unjustified rent increases they suffered in the early 1970s. We in the NDP will not stand for it. We oppose the referral of the green paper for discussion by the committee because for us tenant rights are not negotiable. Our difference of opinion with the government on this issue could not be more fundamental.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about landlords' rights? Are landlords' rights negotiable?

Mr. Duksza: The government sees rental housing primarily as a business. Its housing policies, such as they are, are aimed at making housing as profitable a business as possible. When it comes to the crunch, when reasonable rents and security of tenure get in the way of the housing business, tenants' rights have to go.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Rhetoric.

Mr. Duksza: We see housing as a fundamental social right, as fundamental as food, health or education. When the interests of business conflict with the interests of tenants, we'll come down on the side of the tenants every time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So will we.

Mr. Duksza: Our opposition to the resolution is not based on complete satisfaction with landlord-tenant law in Ontario as it now stands.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Your colleague liked it.

Mr. Duksza: There are a number of changes which we would like to see made to the rent review program to make it a viable long-term policy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For both landlords and tenants.

Mr. Duksza: The administration of landlord-tenant law in general should be simplified to make it more accessible to both landlords and tenants.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Tell your leader.

Mr. Duksza: The principle of the rent review Act, namely that only increased costs or anticipated increased costs experienced by the landlord can justify rent increases, should be maintained.

Mr. Handleman: What has that to do with the motion?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He has heard this speech before.

Mr. Duksza: Therefore, the proposed changes will deal with two aspects of the application of the Act. The two aspects are the effectiveness of the Act in limiting rent increases and the administration of the Act. With respect to the effectiveness, the green paper indicates that on the average, increases of 12.5 per cent are allowed. This is about double the present six per cent guideline. The major cause of increases in excess of the guideline is the financial loss provision of the rent review Act. In fact, the financial loss provision has become a major loophole in the Act, permitting increases far higher than those originally intended by the Legislature.

Mr. S. Smith: Then come to the committee and change it.

Mr. Duksza: The Act must be amended to close the loophole.

Mr. Handleman: That's right. What has that got to do with the motion?

Mr. Duksza: In addition, amendments should be made to the Act to render it more effective in controlling rents.

In answer to the Leader of the Opposition's question, this is not where the amendments are going to be introduced since there is no Act at the moment to introduce amendments to, though he may have forgotten this.

Mr. Handleman: Amend the motion, then, to make it possible, but stop talking about the Act.

Mr. Duksza: I can't make a motion. I am not the government. It is the minister's responsibility to introduce it to prolong the Act beyond December 1978. What the hell are you talking about?

Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. That was impolite. [12:00]

In addition, the following amendments should be made to the Act to render it more effective in controlling rents:

1. The equity requirements for landlords should be raised from 15 per cent to 20 per cent.

2. Repayments of principal should not be allowed in financial loss calculations.

3. Expenses incurred in "bringing a building up to standards" should not be allowed in granting rent increases.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm glad you are going in with an open mind, Jan.

Mr. Duksza: Secondly, the administration of the Act leaves much to be desired and continues to be a major source of dissatisfaction and frustration for both tenants and landlords. Accordingly, the following changes should be made:

1. There should be no specific termination date for the program.

2. Only one hearing should be held for each building or project, except on tenant-initiated applications, in each 12-month period. That hearing should deal in advance with all leases due to expire in the period, the officers' orders coming into effect as leases expire.

3. All rents in a building or project should be registered with the rent review office, publicly accessible, updated as changes occur, and posted in the building concerned so that all tenants know what is the legally permissible rent on those units.

4. The Act should require the landlord making an application for rent review to file all information supporting the application with the rent review office at least two weeks before the hearing date. No further information should be considered by the officer hearing the application.

5. The Act currently provides for assistance to people appearing before rent review officers. This provision has been so narrowly interpreted by the government that only blind or handicapped people need apply. Tenants should be given financial assistance under this section, particularly since landlords are allowed rent review costs in getting rent increases.

6. The rent review program should be required to enforce its own orders and to conduct investigations of compliance under the Act on its own initiative.

7. The Act should give tenants the right to cross-examine landlords' evidence.

The suggestion in the green paper that the establishment of a residential tenants' board with adjudicatory powers should replace the expensive and complicated county court in landlord and tenant matters is probably the only good one. We have been calling for years for such a move. We are pleased that the government is now prepared to consider that part.

But even in its discussion of landlord-tenant laws the green paper, by supporting a substantial weakening of security of tenure law, makes it clear that the principles on which the green paper is based are not the principles of the New Democratic Party.

That brings me back to our reasons for opposing this motion. We cannot accept this motion because we cannot accept either the spirit in which it is put or the principles on which it is based.

The government must believe that tenants have fallen asleep and no longer care whether or not there is a rent review program. That is not true. I have attended a number of tenant meetings in my riding and everywhere I went there was an awareness of the termination date of the present rent review program and an expression of real concern. At a tenants' meeting at 55 Triller Avenue, the tenants made a decision to inform others of the impending termination and to prepare immediately for the exact eventuality that we are now discussing.

On March 13 I attended a tenants' meeting at Parkdale Library where there were more than 140 people present. One of the panellists was Mr. Robbins, the executive director of the rent review program. Although Mr. Robbins supposedly is a neutral civil servant, he spoke adamantly and at length about difficulties caused by the rent review program and blamed the rent review program for the present stagnation of rental housing construction. So much for objectivity; so much for the tenants' friend in court at the ministry.

At the meeting there was unanimous support for extending the rent review Act and, when I was leaving, the executive committee of Parkdale Tenants was busy making plans to present a brief at the standing committee hearings if this came to pass, or take any other necessary action to make its voice heard in protest against the government's smarmy document, against the government's virtually explicit bad faith towards tenants and its blind loyalty to big business interests.

The tenants of this province are not asleep. The government will find that out soon enough. The government is using tenants' rights as an excuse for the failure of its housing policies. These policies have failed. There isn't enough rental housing being built, private development industry blames rent review, and the government buys the explanation without question. In doing so, it ignores the fact that, even before rent review, rental housing starts had virtually dried up. It ignores the fact that new construction has always been exempt from rent controls. It makes the clear decision that the profits for the development industry are now more important than protection for tenants.

I admit the issue before us now is a symbolic one. The government is proposing a committee to abolish rent review. We cannot accept the need to discuss the abolition of the rent review program because we do not think it should be abolished. I want to make it clear that our vote against the referral of this green paper to the committee is only part of our fight to continue the rent review program.

If the motion passes, despite our opposition, we will not be co-opted by the government on the committee. The Leader of the Opposition's remarks made me think the government has already managed to co-opt the Liberals on to its side.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't talk nonsense.

Mr. Duksza: We will participate in the committee hearings.

Mr. S. Smith: You were elected to do a job here, not posture.

Mr. Duksza: I can only interpret what you have said publicly only 10 minutes ago.

Mr. Bradley: Misinterpret. You misinterpreted the word.

Mr. S. Smith: The word is "distort," not "interpret."

Mr. Duksza: I did not distort what you said, dear Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Handleman: Why come to the committee? It's all on record.

Mr. Duksza: Our role in the committee—

Mr. S. Smith: The opposition's job is not just to oppose. It is to be constructive sometimes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who said "holier than thou" earlier?

Mr. McClellan: Is that what you really want to do?

Mr. Handleman: What about sharing responsibilities?

Mr. S. Smith: Next election we will.

Mr. Duksza: The Liberal Party has no option at the moment but to vote against referral if they really believe that the tenants' rights are paramount. I do not believe that they will do so because they have also, like the Conservative Party, abandoned the tenants to the fate of the landlords.

Mr. S. Smith: Rubbish.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So why have hearings? Why let the public participate? If you guys have made up your mind, why invite the public to participate?

Mr. S. Smith: Why did you run for office at all?

Mr. Duksza: Let me tell him what our role in the committee will be, if the minister is prepared to listen.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'll read your press release later, Jan.

Mr. Breagh: Listen with your ears, not with your mouth.

Mr. Duksza: Our role on the committee will be quite simple. We'll try in any way to prevent the government from manipulating tenants out of rent review and to protect and enhance the rights of the tenants.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If I might, I'd just like to draw the content of the motion to the members of the House. I hope they realize that the content of the motion includes that the green paper be referred to committee, that the committee be allowed to hire staff and that Hansard be able to record the comments made by the committee. I feel that the three members who have spoken previously have extended their remarks probably beyond the resolution. I hope that all the further speakers would try to keep their remarks within the content of the motion.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I presume, if I understand it correctly, that the question of whether or not this green paper should be referred to the committee or whether other actions should be taken on the basis of the question of rent review is what is before the House right now. Is that correct?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On reading the motion, I would say that the motion is whether or not the green paper should be put before the general government committee for discussion with the other things I mentioned previously.

Mr. McClellan: That's exactly what is being discussed.

Mr. Handleman: I was going to make that point of order during the member for Parkdale's comments. Now that you've made it, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that I will speak entirely to the motion, which I will be supporting.

Mr. Cassidy: This is the anti-tenant member for Carleton.

Mr. McClellan: The anti-rent review member for Carleton.

Mr. Handleman: I have some reservations about it. I'm not at all surprised at the position taken by the New Democratic Party. I want to remind the member for Ottawa Centre of an evening—the night after the election, as a matter of fact—when we appeared on television together.

Mr. McClellan: Why did you sabotage rent review Sidney?

Mr. Handleman: He said: "Minority government will work if we all share responsibility." What ever happened to that willingness to share responsibility? I challenged him then, I challenge him again. He doesn't want to share responsibility, he wants to play politics.

Ms. Gigantes: We don't want the government's crummy policies. It's their crummy policies we don't want to share.

Mr. Handleman: That's fine, that's their privilege; this is a political forum. But don't let him pretend he wants to share responsibility and make minority government work.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What's your point of order?

Mr. S. Smith: There is no point of order; in fact it's pointless.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: What's your point of privilege?

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Carleton should speak to the Treasurer of the province who has ignored completely the nature of minority government in the province.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you going to share OHIP? What are you going to do?

Mr. Cassidy: If you want to respect minority government, then back down on those premiums.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Duksza: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, in the very last remark I made in my speech I suggested we will participate in the committee on behalf of the tenants, and defend their rights. Nobody should say we would not participate nor participate in the structure of the House. We only said that on behalf of the tenants.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Carleton.

Mr. S. Smith: Then why are you participating in the committee?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have already made up your mind.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Makarchuk: Have you discussed the budget for this?

Mr. Handleman: I would like to concern myself now with some of the reservations I have about the motion, and I do have some.

First of all, I would like to see this new approach be effective. I think we have to develop new options for the future in tenant protection. There is no suggestion of abandoning the tenants anywhere in any of the documents before us.

Mr. Cassidy: It's just what you do.

Mr. Handleman: The committee will have less than two months to deal with the problem which the government has had before it for something like three years. It's a very complex problem. I hope the committee will have the time to deal with it in its entirety and in its full complexity. I am concerned that the committee by its terms of reference is not empowered to travel. I understand the constraint measures that put that restriction on its activities. I visualize the Urban Development Institute and HUDAC with counsel throughout the entire committee hearing.

The Metro tenants' association undoubtedly will either be there or have its counsel there throughout the meeting. I am concerned about people outside of Toronto having an opportunity to be fully educated and informed and to have full input.

Mr. Renwick: What do you mean they will have counsel there?

Mr. Handleman: I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, and I speak now for my own constituency—including the entire Ottawa area, it's the only place in the province where more than 50 per cent of the households are rented—people there are very concerned about this problem.

Mr. McClellan: Resign.

Mr. Handleman: It is one of the areas in the province where the federal government seeks not to give us a tenancy vacancy rate but to combine us with Hull to make it look good. Actually, I would suggest, the vacancy rate in Ottawa-Carleton compares somewhat with Toronto's. We have a concern over continuing tenant protection.

I speak now to the chairman and the members of that committee. I hope they will give full opportunity to people from outside of Toronto to be heard. If necessary, I suggest that the counsel, who would have the privilege of travelling, might very well convene meetings in areas outside of Toronto so that those people can be heard and heard fully.

One thing that seems to be forgotten quite often on the NDP side is that a substantial number of the landlords—in fact the majority of the landlords in this province—are small landlords.

Mr. McClellan: There's the voice of the landlords.

Mr. Handleman: They always talk about the giant landlords, and I agree they can well look after their own interests.

Mr. McClellan: Listen to him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about the member for Ottawa Centre? He's one too.

Mr. Handleman: If they have read the green paper at all, they would know that over 40 per cent of the rental housing stock in nine Ontario cities consists of fewer than 20 units. It's clear that a very large number of landlords in this province, not only are small landowners operating in the best principles of the free enterprise system, having invested their savings in what they think will be an income-producing property—

Mr. Makarchuk: It doesn't necessarily indicate that.

Mr. Handleman: —but also their average income is $14,000 a year, less than the members' of this Legislature. It puts them in the low income group.

Mr. Cooke: But who controls the market?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Read the paper.

Mr. Handleman: Let's face it, many of the people who rent are in the low-income groups. Who is going to speak to this committee for them, the Metro tenants' association? I suggest there has to be some way of bringing input to the committee and through the committee to the government from those outside of Metropolitan Toronto. I don't know whether the Board of Internal Economy can authorize a standing committee of this Legislature to move around.

[12:15]

I am very concerned about the shortness of time. I know that the government which apparently has not developed a full policy for continuing protection, has had trouble with all its resources. I am concerned about a committee with counsel, in the space of less than two months, being able to come to grips with this problem.

However, I think the leader of the New Democratic Party should accept what the minister has said, that this is an exercise in sharing information. I hope it will do more than simply educate the members of the committee, because certainly they will learn a lot. I hope they will be able to develop alternatives. I think every member of this House is concerned about the fact that we have between 40 and 50 per cent of our population living in rented premises. They must have protection. By whatever technique their powers must be equalized with those who have greater powers.

Mr. Cassidy: You said you would resign if rent review was continued.

Mr. Handleman: You were there when I said that "this program of rent review." What I heard from your speakers and your interjections was that this program of rent review was great, so let's just keep it going. I don't agree. I think it has had damaging effects on the housing market. I think we have to find some successor program.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not what the green paper says.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Handleman: The green paper provides options for continuing protection. That's exactly what it says and that's what it does. The committee is not limited in any way by the options that are put forward in the green paper.

Mr. Cassidy: Of course it is, and you know it.

Mr. Handleman: Any member, including the member for Parkdale, can come forward with what he put into Hansard today, bring it to the committee and try to persuade his colleagues to accept all or part of his motion. There's no reason why he can't do that. That's why I say that the committee exercise can be good.

Mr. Makarchuk: It's the same exercise in futility as the Hydro committee and the Inco committee.

Mr. Handleman: I hope the committee will be able to hear from those outside of Metropolitan Toronto because the problem, despite some of the media publicity, is not necessarily a Metro problem. We do have problems in other parts of the province. In fact, I think the members from the Lakehead might say their problem is worse than Metro Toronto. I will support the motion. I hope my reservations have been noted by the chairman and members of the committee, and the minister.

Mr. S. Smith: I wish to speak briefly to the motion. I think there are really just a few points to be made about whether or not this matter should go to committee. It's perfectly clear that the government has decided to take a very difficult political issue—a very thorny one and admittedly one which has a number of sides to it—and has decided in this instance to share some responsibility for the further progress of this matter with the opposition in this Legislature.

Depending on one's stance about these things and depending on how one views the opposition role, one can either rant and rail against the notion that one is being co-opted and that one is somehow being put into a position where we might share blame for difficult decisions which the government may or may not have in mind; and I don't know what the government's intentions happen to be. Or one can take the position that finally the government is willing to accept that in a minority Legislature it is much wiser to have some input, as I suggested the very first day after the election, from the other parties rather than constantly play brinkmanship and confrontational games in the House, which I think is to—

Mr. Warner: Are you for coalition government still?

Mr. Cassidy: It's your only way into the cabinet.

Mr. S. Smith: —the detriment of the people of Ontario. There are those who feel that any type of co-operation somehow or other is a type of coalition and so on. Such naive viewpoints from those who prefer confrontation in labour-management relations and confrontation in the political sphere and that type of thing, are what has led our country, in my view, to some of the difficulties we presently have.

The polarization, the attempt to portray everything in extreme terms in the political spectrum or in labour-management relations, that kind of constant determination to portray everything, as I say only in extreme black and white terms, to set management and labour against each other, to set government and industry against each other, as though somehow or other we are not all in the same boat, that is the kind of peculiar—

Mr. Germa: We are not.

Mr. S. Smith: —mentality which is part of the New Democratic Party and is something which I certainly regret even having to have beside me in this House.

It's about time we all learned, in society generally if I might just digress from the motion for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that in this country, whether we be in management, in labour, in government, in the professions or in any situation, we are in the same boat. We can't always assume the other guy is our enemy, that the other guy is always dead wrong, and start drilling holes in our portion of the boat without realizing that the whole boat will go down if we don't start to co-operate with each other.

I take my responsibility as Leader of the Opposition seriously. I see it as a situation where on the one hand one is supposed to oppose—after all, it is much like being a defence lawyer in a trial where to make the system of justice work properly the defence lawyer has to constantly oppose the views of the opposing lawyer; he has to constantly put the best face that he possibly can on the oppositional view, such as it may be, in any given trial. I accept it to some extent; that is the oppositional role, where you have to criticize, you have to be tough, you have to constantly keep the government on its toes. I think the members opposite understand that.

But there is a second aspect to the role—particularly in a minority government, but I think in any kind of a government. That is to be constructive sometimes. That is to be willing to put forward alternatives sometimes.

Mr. Cassidy: We were making constructive speeches about rent review before you even came into this House.

Mr. S. Smith: I think, too, it is part of the role also to say if the government is doing the right thing, as on the liquor advertising matter which the minister brought in. I've just gone on television to say that he has in fact done the right thing in this instance.

An hon. member: For heaven's sake, do you expect someone to say he did the wrong thing?

Mr. S. Smith: I feel we have to be constructive sometimes.

It is interesting, if I may say so, that this particular government is quite willing to share with us the very thorny issues and not quite as willing to share some of the things they should be sharing with us—

An hon. member: That's right. When did you learn that? That's the point.

Mr. Renwick: You are being co-opted, and you don't know it.

Mr. S. Smith: —and I include this phoney committee being set up, a so-called sunset committee, consisting only of Tory back-benchers and one Tory cabinet minister.

An hon. member: What has that to do with rent review?

Mr. S. Smith: The fact of the matter is—

Mr. Speaker: You are straying somewhat from the resolution.

Mr. S. Smith: No, no, it's very similar. I'll explain the connection. Because that's the committee that we should have all-party representation on. It's perfectly clear that they are asking for this matter go to an all-party committee, when another matter—

Mr. McClellan: With enemies like this, you don't need friends.

Mr. S. Smith: —should in fact be put before a committee of all three parties in the Legislature. But then there is always the danger that the committee might actually find something to get rid of in the boards, agencies and commissions, and may even tread on the hallowed territory of Tory fund-raisers; they may even tread on certain dangerous areas of friends of the party; and you can only be sure and safe if you keep it in your own back bench. I think that's a phoney committee.

An hon. member: The Tory senate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We don't need your help on that. We have those answers.

Mr. S. Smith: But despite that, and despite this provocation, despite this obvious provocation on the part of the government with regard to this phoney sunset committee—

Mr. McClellan: Let him sell out, he's dying to sell out.

Mr. S. Smith: —we are prepared to work on this important matter of rent review. I want to quote to you from a speech made by the minister, by the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick, on March 16, 1977, just about a year ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wasn't minister then.

Mr. S. Smith: He said then, "How long should this scheme continue?" He said, "The scheme in my opinion should continue until the pressures on the market disappear. The only solution to this then is to tie length of the program and duration of the program into the vacancy rate. In simple terms, he said, "we must require that the scheme continue until there have been 12 consecutive months during which the vacancy rate of the particular municipality has been in excess of 3.5 per cent."

And I must say those are excellent words. They are words that I look forward to sharing with him; they are ideas which I look forward to sharing with him on the committee. Obviously, if the minister himself takes such an enlightened view of matters of this kind, we have nothing to fear by sitting in the committee with him. We will continue, I am sure, to protect the tenants as we have shown every determination to do.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, the government even used our determination to protect tenants as an excuse for the last election. But should I complain about that, since it had only the effect of elevating me to this lofty position which I presently am enjoying thoroughly?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And me to mine. I'm not complaining.

Mr. S. Smith: I must say I am not one to quote generally from columnists, although I respect them greatly.

Some hon. members: All of them?

Mr. S. Smith: I feel they have their job, and I have mine.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did you see the one this morning about me?

Mr. S. Smith: The one about you? Yes. But I want to read from the column by Jonathan Manthorpe. He says, "No, the NDP wants the good old days back when they could shout and damn the Tories and, knowing full well the government would defeat their proposals, it was always so much easier to present the public with a picture of maligned and downtrodden virtue than to have to take responsibility for finding solutions to problems."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well put.

Mr. S. Smith: He also goes on to point out, as their 14 or so scheduled speakers are suggesting, if they're so resolutely opposed to this matter going to committee, if they think it's a simple matter of being co-opted and so on and so forth, they have the option of not showing up at the committee.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, no, and leaving you to manhandle the tenants of the province.

Mr. S. Smith: What Jonathan Manthorpe says is, "The only logical thing for the NDP to do now is to refuse to take part in the committee discussions."

Mr. Warner: You're as big a sellout as they are.

Mr. S. Smith: That's what Mr. Manthorpe says, and although he and I have disagreements from time to time—of a minor nature, I'm sure—in this instance I have to agree with him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But they'll go so they can put out a press release.

Mr. Reid: They don't even go any more, they just put out press releases. It's the first thing they learn when they get there—write press releases.

Mr. S. Smith: The fact of the matter is that we are resolute in our determination to protect the tenants, we are resolute in our determination—

Mr. Germa: We rely on you when we are in trouble!

Mr. S. Smith: —to make certain that until the vacancy rate goes up the controls remain, but we are prepared to discuss ways to get apartment buildings built in this province. We're prepared to sit down and discuss with members of any party and with members of the public ways that we can get apartments built in Toronto and in Oshawa and in Hamilton and in every other place that they happen to be needed, in Thunder Bay and so on.

It is not our habit to simply issue press releases, take postures, grandstand as the protectors of one particular group in society—

Mr. Germa: Listen who's grandstanding. The saviour of the little people.

Mr. S. Smith: We'll protect the tenants as well as anybody in this society and my record is clear in this matter. We're prepared to work as well to make sure that we start getting some construction in this province, to get rid of the red tape that's holding up construction in this province, to get apartments built in this province, to get affordable housing built in this province. If we can take our ideas to a committee, if we can take our ideas to any platform in the province, we are prepared to participate and take our ideas there and let our ideas be judged by the public when they're put forward in any forum, be it a committee, be it the Legislature or be it any platform in Ontario. Therefore, we will accept to have this matter go to committee, to have a staff hired for the committee so the facts can be brought before the public and we are looking forward to these discussions.

Mr. Germa: What empty words.

Mr. Davison: I rise, as did my colleague from Parkdale, to oppose the motion to refer this red, white and black green paper to the standing committee on general government.

This little piece of propaganda, this sham called Policy Options for Continuing Tenant Protection, has absolutely nothing to do with continuing tenant protection, but rather has everything to do with, and is designed as the opening gambit in, the government's bid to rid Ontario of a rent review program and to put tenants in Ontario at the mercy of landlords.

The paper's theme and basic premise is clearly outlined in the letter that is accompanying the green paper to the minister from W. M. Robbins, the executive director of the rent review program and the chairman of the little in-house committee that drew up this plan. As my colleague from Parkdale pointed out, the last few words of that letter show clearly what the government's plan is and show clearly what its intentions are and refers only to a post rent review period. So before we even get into the report we know that option number one in the government's choice has already been done away with.

It's possible that perhaps in our party we've made too much of that particular sentence attributed to Mr. Robbins. Perhaps it's simply a misprint in the letter or a case of a simple misunderstanding or misrepresentation. Under normal circumstances, that's something I wouldn't consider very likely in such a government document, but as I read through the document and got to page four, the first sentence on the page jumped right off and it reads as follows: "Ontario's current rent review program was conceived as a temporary program complementary to the federal government's anti-inflation program."

I must say that has shattered any faith I had in the author's credibility, in the credibility of this document and in the author's capacity to accurately record information.

As somebody who stood for election in the 1975 election campaign, as did many others here, and as someone who sat in this House during those fall days of 1975, I somehow was under the impression that there was a connection between what happened in the election campaign and the Premier's (Mr. Davis) promise to bring in rent review. I somehow had the thought and the feeling that there was a connection between the seat distribution—in other words the minority government in this province—and the fact that the Premier kept his promise, brought in some kind of rent review and it was passed in this Legislature. I did not realize at that time that it was something that had nothing to do with the 1975 realities coming out of the 1975 election, but was designed to fit in with the government's anti-inflation program.

In case in my partisan mood I had misunderstood what had happened in 1975, I referred to the great impartial observers of our world, the press, and read a number of press clippings from that time and from recent days. The press currently is reflecting back upon the realities of 1975 and also doesn't agree with this first sentence in the report we have seen. That most excellent paper, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, said on February 14, after viewing this document and after reading that sentence: "The ruling Conservatives gave the province rent controls in December, 1975, a move made in desperation during the heat of an election campaign. Their hearts were never in it, although the need was obvious at the time."

That is a much more accurate reflection of the events of the fall of 1975 than is the first sentence in this document we see before us. That the authors of this green paper would stoop to rewriting such recent history is something that leaves the paper totally devoid of credibility. In the end, I decided to give credit to Mr. Robbin's comments, only because they seem to reflect the opinion of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and the government in general.

Given the widely-stated goal of the paper to generate discussion so that the government can engage in an "exercise in public dialogue and policy formation," some people in the public who don't know this world of politics so well as members in the House, might think that the government is approaching this issue, this matter, with an open mind, willing to listen to reasonable arguments and willing not to go in with a closed mind as to what they want to do with rent review. Such does not seem to be, and such is not the case.

On February 10, 1978, the London Free Press, reporting on one of those sessions that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations periodically has where he bares his soul to the media, said: "He"—Mr. Grossman, the minister—"said he didn't want to announce his support for any of the many options discussed in the paper prepared by senior civil servants in the Consumer, Housing and Attorney General's ministries. Grossman made it clear he doesn't favour keeping rent controls."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. That is not true. If I were one of you I would stand up on a point of privilege, but I will let you finish.

Mr. Warner: Why wouldn't you?

Mr. Davison: In response to the minister's objection, I am simply reading from the London Free Press.

Mr. Warner: Do you not defend your privileges?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is it in quotation marks? Is it in quotation marks?

Mr. Davison: If he would like to accuse the London Free Press of misrepresenting what he feels, that is his privilege, as an individual or as a member of Parliament. Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Okay, I do; I did. Even free enterprise can be wrong.

Mr. Germa: Free enterprise?

Mr. Warner: It is not a dirty word.

Mr. McClellan: I bet he wouldn't say that to the constituents in St. Patrick's.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Inco is a four-letter word.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has already contributed to this debate.

Mr. Davison: It is quite clear that the whole purpose of this exercise is not to seek opinions on continuing tenant protection, but rather for the government's purpose of finding a way to end the rent control program with the least amount of political flak and trouble. The New Democratic Party in Ontario opposes this motion because we believe that continuing tenant protection is needed and that means that rent controls must continue. They can be continued in an improved fashion. Any government that we had to drag kicking and screaming into the program was sure to frustrate it at every possible turn, and they did.

There are problems with the current review program. There are problems that can be fixed when the government will bring in amendments to fix them. But we are not interested in a committee, the function of which is solely to justify the elimination of controls. We are just not interested in such a committee. The tenants of Ontario understand and support that position, because our position is the same position as the tenants'.

Mr. Rotenberg: How do you know?

Mr. Davison: Why don't you listen, David, and I'll explain it to you.

Mr. Rotenberg: If that were the case, you would be the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the member for Wilson Heights go back to his own seat if he wants to interject.

Mr. Davison: Or go further.

Jack de Klerk, the chairman of the Metro Tenants Federation has warned that without the kind of controls we now have tenants in Ontario will face increases of 15 to 20 per cent immediately.

Mr. Rotenberg: And how many members has he?

Mr. Davison: The tenants of Ontario and the New Democratic Party of Ontario totally reject this subterfuge called the green paper.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, you don't even like green papers either.

Mr. Davison: Totally. Even when it comes in red, white and black format.

Mr. Gregory: If it had been red you would like it.

Mr. Davison: It would appear—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The red cover is for you.

Mr. Davison:—that despite our party's reasonable and sensible opposition to this motion that the government, with their limp-wristed Liberal friends, will be able to carry it through the House.

Interjection.

Mr. Davison: That will mean that we will go to the committee with one purpose and one purpose only—

Mr. Gregory: To agitate and write press releases.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To write press releases.

Mr. Davison:—and that purpose is to defend and protect the rights of tenants in Ontario. It's quite clear today that neither the Conservative Party nor the Liberal Party share that desire to protect tenants' rights.

Mr. Reid: What a bunch of nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: New leader, old speeches.

Mr. Reid: They always want to have it both ways.

Mr. McClellan: The Liberals are a bunch of cream puffs.

Mr. Davison: At that time there will be an opportunity to deal with the contents of this so-called green paper at some length and therefore I am not going to spend any great amount of time today dealing with the specific details. But I feel compelled to comment on at least one aspect of the paper that's the central issue before us today and the central issue that is going to be before us when we get into committee; and that is the question of affordability of rental housing, that's what it is all about.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not the issue today.

Mr. Germa: Darn right it is the issue.

Mr. Duszta: That's what is the issue.

Mr. Davison: There are four options outlined under affordability of housing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Talk about the issue.

Mr. Makarchuk: There are lots of houses for $60,000.

Interjections.

Mr. Davison: I took that issue because that is the reason—

Mr. Speaker: Will the members for Bellwoods and Brantford stop interrupting their colleague?

Mr. Davison: It's a well-welcomed interruption.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Even they can't take it either.

Mr. Davison: The reason we had rent controls in 1975 was because tenants were being ripped off financially. That was the issue then and that is the issue today, affordability of rental housing.

Mr. Reid: That's two different things actually.

Mr. Davison: Listen to the first sentence under the heading "Affordability of Rental Housing" in this green paper: "Unfortunately, to one man—" or if we might add, one person—"financial viability can be another's affordability problem." That is what it is about. The government is trying to swing the balance from the tenants to the landlords.

When we go through the four options—the one option that would hold out some hope for the tenants and the three that are designed to support the landlords—what do we have in terms of that all important issue? Number one, extend the program as is; indeterminate is the response. What that means when you read more closely is that for those not going through rent review the proportion of income going to rent will change according to the guideline limits established for rent increases, as compared to the rate of income increase experienced in the post-anti-inflation program. For those going through the rent review hearing process, their affordability position will be made better or worse depending on the cost experience of their landlord.

Well, better or worse, but better in every case than with any of the other three options, whether we go to option number two, making basic changes where the green paper admits it will be worse for tenants; or whether we go to increased exemptions, where the green paper admits it will be worse for tenants; or whether we go to termination—and how they could even include that as one option—where we find the financial situation for tenants will be much worse; and that's an understatement. There's only one option presented in this report that will continue tenant protection. The other three issues are irrelevant. It's the only one worth considering, and that is the extension of the program. This is obvious to me; this is obvious to the New Democratic Party; this is obvious to tenants.

Mr. Rotenberg: Some.

Mr. Davison: And there is absolutely no need for this House to witness the kind of circus that this government is proposing, absolutely no need whatsoever.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So boycott it.

Mr. Davison: Finally, while we oppose this motion because it is an attempt to eliminate rental-increase protection for tenants, we will participate in the committee for the sole purpose of defending tenants' rights. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of writing press releases, you mean.

Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the motion before us, I would like to say that I do so with a great deal of concern and feeling about the problem. The very fact there is a debate about the question of referring this matter to the standing general government committee is reason enough for me to stand and speak in support of the motion. The question of tenant protection—indeed the whole question of housing for the people of Ontario—is far too important an issue in my view to be made a political football. The very idea that any group or party could or might posture themselves as the sole champion of tenants in this province is frankly repugnant to me.

Ms. Gigantes: It's the truth.

Mr. McClellan: It's a reality.

Mr. Elgie: The issue requires reasonable and dispassionate consideration with as much input from as many participants as a possible; the people of Ontario do not deserve less.

Mr. McClellan: All right; give us some legislation and we will take that to committee.

Mr. Elgie: I would remind this Legislature, the public, and the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan), that the public perception of minority government is that this House is composed of three political parties whose members have the capacity and the maturity—

Mr. Reid: Two of which are responsible.

Mr. Elgie: —to contribute positively and meaningfully, as well as negatively when it's appropriate to the issues facing them; and the perception that it is possible for mature, responsible men and women to act in concert to discuss such an important problem as this in a non-partisan fashion.

Mr. McClellan: Coalition government.

Mr. Makarchuk: Who created the problem?

Mr. Elgie: If that is not a true perception that the public has—

An hon. member: It is not.

Mr. Elgie: —then let's say so and clear up what may be a public misperception.

Mr. Lawlor: It's very curious that maturity serves your own interest, isn't it?

Mr. Elgie: Having participated in the deliberations of the select committee on the Inco and Falconbridge layoffs—

Mr. Makarchuk: With successful results, no doubt.

Mr. Elgie: —I know and appreciate how illuminating and invaluable it can be to bring a problem such as this before members of all parties to be exposed to their scrutiny and inquiry. The layoffs issue was, of course, a difficult one to deal with, but it was an example, in my view, of how well-intentioned co-operation can lead to well-considered conclusions.

Mr. Makarchuk: Did you stop the layoffs?

Mr. Elgie: I believe that the public concurred with that co-operative committee effort. I believe that this issue—the issue of tenant protection before us today—is another such matter.

In my view, the need for tenant protection, with all of its ramifications, will be with us so long as there is a shortage of rental accommodation. It is, however, the kind of issue that poses different problems, as the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) has said, different problems in different parts of the province—

Mr. McClellan: He created the problems. That's why he quit.

Mr. Elgie: —and that is why, in my view, it is important that we encourage the widest possible canvass of fact and opinion, both from within this Legislature and from the public at large. If we can achieve what the minister so earnestly desires, a consensus on these comprehensive proposals, we may well lay the groundwork for a process that may go on and prevent unforeseen future problems. What is important here is that the ministry staff be given the benefit of the best information and suggestions that this House, in its wisdom, can produce. It is not fair, in my view, to expect that staff to conduct its hearings on its own.

[12:45]

As the minister has indicated, it might be difficult for them to be totally objective, given the fact that they have already worked very hard to produce this policy options paper.

Mr. McClellan: Norton's staff is doing it on its own.

Mr. Elgie: It would be equally unfair to the people of Ontario to have legislation produced on such an important topic and then subjected to partisan wrangling.

The object of sending this sessional paper to the standing committee is to receive constructive input.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you going to stand as an independent? You'd better resign.

Mr. Makarchuk: Never mind the input, build affordable housing.

Mr. Elgie: In my view, partisan posturing should have no place in the developing of laws relating to tenant protection.

Mr. Makarchuk: Try affordable housing for a change.

Mr. Elgie: We all know the story of the lengths to which the penultimate leader of the third party went in painting himself as the champion of the tenant in 1975. That might be overlooked, of course, because that was an election year. But that example is precisely what I'm talking about.

Mr. Cassidy: You might give some credit to the new leader of the party as well.

Mr. Elgie: I don't want to see this issue overtaken by partisan rhetoric, even from an old high-school mate. I do want to see it depoliticized.

Mr. McClellan: Never mind the old school ties.

Mr. Reid: Nobody over there is as old as you are.

Mr. Elgie: Certainly not as mature.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A lot of high-schoolers.

Mr. Cassidy: That was a low blow.

Mr. Elgie: As stated before, I feel certain that an all-party committee, with its own staff and with the capable assistance of personnel from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, could provide maximum exposure of all points of view.

Mr. Makarchuk: How about housing?

Mr. Elgie: It could deal with the inter-related questions of rent levels, landlord and tenant relations, and the housing market; and it could deal with them in a careful, considered fashion.

Mr. Cassidy: And maximize exposure of tenants to gonging.

Mr. Elgie: I am not suggesting for a moment that we should ask the impossible and try to place this sessional paper before a standing committee that will not have any partisanship. Many members, even some of the newer boys, seemed to have learned the value of contributing to Hansard, or talking out the window, as the Austrians call it.

It is my opinion, however, that a standing committee can produce top-flight insight into the most appropriate course of action. It is also my opinion that the reference to a standing committee will expedite matters.

Mr. Cassidy: What a government! For two years you wouldn't listen to any suggestions about rent review.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope in the little time we have remaining in this debate that all members will listen, because we do have some high-schoolers from the most northerly community of Ontario where one can drive, all the way from Pickle Lake and Osna-burg, in the west gallery. I'm sure they'd like to hear the balance of the debate.

Mr. Rotenberg: What party was that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Elgie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that settles the riff-raff.

Mr. Reid: Very neatly done, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Elgie: Not that riff-raff, but the other riff-raff.

Mr. Lawlor: That is unparliamentary.

Mr. Elgie: It is also my opinion that the reference to a standing committee will expedite matters.

As the minister has indicated, timing is of the essence. It is imperative that these hearings be completed before June in order that legislation can be drafted for the fall sittings.

The sittings and deliberations of a standing committee of this Legislature are bound to attract more attention in the media than would otherwise be the case; and this is important, because we want to achieve maximum public participation.

By holding our discussions in committee, in my opinion, we would encourage more participation and we would encourage action rather than reaction.

The problems involved in achieving an equitable balance between the interests of tenants and landlords will not be easy. We know that strict rent controls tend to depress starts of multiple dwellings. On the other hand, a wide-open situation combined with low vacancy rates could place tenants at the mercy of a few unprincipled individuals. Of course, it goes without saying that this party and this government totally reject any all-encompassing notion that rental accommodation should be produced and managed by government. The proper operation of a free market is the best guarantee of efficient production and the corresponding creation of productive employment.

It is not the intention of the ministry or of the government to shackle either landlords or tenants.

Mr. Makarchuk: How about the speculators?

Mr. Elgie: We're not talking about you today, Mac.

Mr. Makarchuk: There are more over on the other side.

Mr. Elgie: We are confident today that all groups—producers, consumers and government—can come together under the auspices of the standing committee and work out equitable solutions to the many problems.

It would be unthinkable to allow uncertainty to dominate public consciousness. In these times of inflation and unemployment, it would be totally unfair to have tenants needlessly contemplating spiralling rents or diminished standards of accommodation. On the other hand, it would be equally unfair to expect investors who build multiple dwellings to endure diminishing income in the face of rising costs.

I mentioned these two aspects of the question simply because they are so obvious and so perplexing. There are many more, and that leads me to comment on this sessional green paper. In my view, it is an excellent working document and I commend those responsible for its production.

Mr. Dukszta: You must be kidding us.

Mr. Elgie: A review of the paper makes two things abundantly clear to me.

Mr. McClellan: That you hate rent control.

Mr. Elgie: First, any decision as to whether or not Ontario's current rent review program should continue in one form or another must take into account the availability of an adequate quantity and quality of rental housing. In communities where there is a high vacancy rate, market factors, which on their own can serve to control rents, clearly function, whereas in a large metropolitan community, such as this, the vacancy rate in October 1977 was only one per cent, as referred to by the member for Parkdale and market factors cannot function adequately. I must, therefore, conclude that some type of rent control and rent review are therefore necessary in certain communities.

Secondly, although the rent review program was originally conceived as a short-term program to address the problem of inflationary rent increases, it soon became evident that those tenants and landlords found it difficult to restrict their discussions at rent review hearings to matters of rent alone. In other words, it is clear that there is a need for a simple method of resolving landlord and tenant disputes.

I have spoken to the minister on a few occasions about this and have stressed my own view that we must place greater emphasis on the provision of inexpensive and more accessible means of resolving landlord and tenant disputes and, in particular, to facilitate enforcements of covenants in leases.

I am sure it's also of interest to all members of this House to note with some degree of satisfaction that on March 16 this Legislature approved the resolution of the member for Simcoe East (Mr. Taylor) that called for simplification of consumer contracts. I certainly support that principle, particularly with regard to leases.

In conclusion, I fully support the motion to refer the policy option paper to the standing general government committee. Such an action would, in my view, accomplish three goals. First, it would assist us with the crucial problem of timing. Legislation can be produced in an orderly and considered fashion for legislative action in the fall. Second, referring the paper to committee would minimize the degree of political partisanship involved in evaluating the options proposed and it would, in my view, be in line with the public's perception of how minority governments should function. Finally, the committee would encourage maximum public participation and the greatest amount of critical intelligent appraisal of the problem.

I feel certain that acceptance of this motion will enhance the likelihood of producing valuable comprehensive and lasting legislation in this area that is of concern to all of us.

Mr. Blundy: I rise to support the motion to refer this complex matter to an appropriate committee. I have a comment on one fact first, that is, the wonderful and strange amount of co-operation that is being offered by the government party in this matter now, when there was a strange lack of co-operation with the people who were standing up for tenant protection back just a little while ago before I was here. Now I see that the government wants to talk it over with us and wants to get our views. Why? Because they have never wanted to have rent review and they never wanted to be the party that had to bring it in.

I say we have to continue it. The one reason I rise and support this matter is that I have taken one small sentence out of the green paper, or a part of a sentence. It says: "Policy options for continuing tenant protection." Let everybody know, and particularly the government members, that that is the purpose as far as I am concerned in discussing in committee ways of working out a satisfactory continuation.

When I talk about that, I also want to say that in my riding we have lived through five years of a rent situation where the vacancy rate has been, for nearly five years, 0.05 per cent. We have just moved out of that now to one per cent. It is an important thing to us. We also have to look at ways of making it possible for builders and developers to get through some of the red tape and get into building so that we will have more affordable housing and decent housing for people.

There are a number of things that this committee can consider. That is one, how we can increase the housing numbers in our province, ways that we can build more quickly and more efficiently. I think there are areas that may very well be able to have some relaxation of controls, but certainly not in my riding, nor in Metro Toronto. There is also perhaps the possibility of relaxation or exemption in the case of luxury apartment buildings and so forth.

These things all have to be looked at very closely. We also have the recommendations that are coming before us now regarding market value assessment and the implementation of it, and the split that has been suggested between private residential accommodation and high-rise apartment accommodation. These are things that need to be considered.

I know that we are just about out of time. I want to say that we in the official opposition are ready and willing to take up our responsibility in this matter. We look forward to being able to sit down and discuss with the other members of the committee ways of continuing protection for the tenants of Ontario. We also want to look at ways of encouragement for the developers and the builders. We want to ensure that the people who are going to be providing the decent living accommodation for renters in this province are able to continue to do so, and are encouraged to do so. In the long run, by looking at all of these various things in the committee, we are going to reach our goal, which is to continue affordable housing for the people of Ontario and protection for the tenants of Ontario. I look forward to the matter being referred to the committee.

Mr. Breagh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I assume that you are about prepared to adjourn for today. I would like to ask the Speaker to recognize that this resolution, in particular one last part of it, not being drawn into the violence against the thing, is contrary to provisional order 21 concerning Hansard. I would like the Speaker to give us a ruling on Monday as to whether or not this resolution can carry as is. If it is seen to be contrary to the rules of the House, will the Speaker make the ruling by himself or will he seek unanimous consent of the House to step aside from those rules?

Mr. Speaker: The provisional orders indicate that the only committees that will be transcribed are those of supply. The House, in its wisdom, can do anything it wants, as long as it is incorporated as a part of the motion, and if it so directs that the proceedings of that committee and its hearings be transcribed, it is within the power of the House to do so. However, I will reflect on it over the weekend; but I think, in general, that's the way it is.

On motion by Mr. Warner, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Grossman, the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 3, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY MUNICIPAL GRANTS

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the members that earlier today I arranged to have deposited, the annual document on provincial assistance to local governments. Normally this publication becomes available on budget day, but this year's early budget made that impossible. As it is, today's release makes it the earliest on record.

As the members will note, the document provides an overview of total assistance, accompanied by detailed descriptions of the more significant changes in grant programs for 1978. Particularly, it emphasizes the unconditional grant programs and provides every municipality with our best estimate of its 1978 entitlement to total unconditional grants. Most of the critical information on 1978 assistance was already provided in my September 16, 1977, announcement, plus subsequent details from other ministries. However, the data in the document I am releasing today should be of great assistance to municipalities in verifying their own calculations.

ORAL QUESTIONS

CASH RESERVES

Mr. S. Smith: A question to the Treasurer. Could the Treasurer please explain the nature of his policy which has prompted him to use $362 million of his borrowings this year to increase liquid reserves, the cash that the government has on hand, to more than $1 billion? Could I ask the Treasurer why he is following quite that small-c conservative policy with regard to cash on hand? What is the lowest level to which these reserves have dropped during the last five or six years, and what problems is he anticipating that lead him to wish to have a little more than $1 billion in cash on hand?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think I might bring together some information for the Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps I might give a brief statement with that information, either at the opening of the House or on second reading of the Ontario Loan Act, which I believe is tomorrow. Then I can give more precise details.

The reserves, for obvious reasons, did not increase during 1977-78; in fact they fell. I don't have the precise figure. Even at the level we had hoped to have, there perhaps was not sufficient in the liquid reserves at any given point during the course of the year.

The reserves normally go up in the first two or three months of the year, then fall off very dramatically during the course of the summer and start to build again in the fall. We would come very close to having a theoretical zero balance at some points during this year—or would have, had we not moved to increase the reserves.

Finally, I might say that as a rule of thumb—and it is a very rough rule of thumb—it is felt that reserves at year end should be about 10 per cent of the budget, which in this case would make them in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion. That may be somewhat high, but we would like to increase them somewhat.

I should also add that these monies are constantly employed in short-term deposits and various other ways so that we are earning interest on them at any given moment in time.

Mr. S. Smith: I appreciate that answer and I look forward to hearing a more detailed answer from the Treasurer. By way of a brief supplementary, may I ask him if, when he is explaining why it should be at 10 per cent of the budget, he would give us the record over the years and if he would also agree with me that if he did not have to increase his borrowing by $362 million to increase the liquid reserves, and merely left the reserves at $688 million—which is where they are now, or at least at year end—that the $362 million he borrowed would have been available to have been used by the pension funds in the private sector? Is this a factor which he takes into consideration when he decides his liquid reserve policy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I don't think the two things particularly tie in together. If our reserves were invested, as I have just said, then of course the option—and this has been done—would be to use them, if they became too high, to reduce outstanding debt, which has been done on several occasions.

OMA-OHIP FEE SCHEDULES

Mr. S. Smith: A question, which I would prefer to direct to the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) but which, in his absence, I will direct to the Premier: I wonder if the Premier could assist us with regard to the question of the two fee schedules currently being negotiated, where I think the minister has assured us in the Premier's absence that there would be two fee schedules, an OMA fee schedule and an OHIP fee schedule.

Is the Premier familiar with these negotiations and can he tell us whether we can assume that the two schedules, in total and in average, will be a percentage apart greater than the present difference of 10 per cent, and exactly what measures the government has in mind, other than the Anti-Inflation Board, to make sure that the doctors do not opt out in great numbers as a consequence of this additional incentive?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the subject is still being negotiated or discussed, and when the minister or the government has some specific answers to that particular question, and to the supplementaries to it, I am sure the minister will certainly be pleased to inform the House. I think it is somewhat premature at this moment.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Given the fact that we would like to know in this House what is considered negotiable and what is not considered negotiable by the government of the day, would the Premier not agree, if people are going to the trouble of developing two separate fee schedules, that chances are they are likely to be considerably more than the present 10 per cent apart? Can he explain to us why we should be so sure that the doctors are not going to apply the higher fee schedule and opt out in order to do so? Why would they go to the trouble of negotiating an entirely separate schedule if they had no intention of using it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't speak for the medical profession. I think this is a subject that is not only complex but very important, and when the minister is ready to disclose further information to the House he will be more than prepared to do so.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the Premier tell this House whether it is the intention of the government to abandon the principle of universal health insurance, which was adopted in 1969 by Ontario, by means of deterrent fees or their equivalent, which would in effect prevent people on modest incomes from having adequate health care? Is that now the government's intention? If so, how can the government justify it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough)—and I am only going by memory—made some reference to the question of deterrents in the budget. I think there was some reference to the decision on the part of the government to increase premiums rather than go the route of deterrents. So the answer to the question has already been stated.

Mr. S. Smith: If I might have one more supplementary on this, is the Premier aware that if the two schedules are farther apart and doctors do opt out and bill for the higher amount, that will effectively be for their patients a very large deterrent fee indeed? Can he assure us that the difference in the schedule being contemplated would not be such as to render the entire plan ineligible under federal legislation which, as he knows, says that in order to be part of the federally approved plan it must not impede or preclude either directly or indirectly, whether by charges made to insured persons or otherwise, reasonable access to insured services by insured persons? Is the Premier familiar with that piece of legislation and can he be absolutely certain that what the government is contemplating will still be within the framework of that piece of legislation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know there has been some speculation in the past few days on this matter. I would only re-emphasize that nothing has been settled or decided and that really it is premature to be having this sort of discussion. I am quite aware of the legislation. As with all policy decisions made by this government, we make a very real effort to abide by whatever legislation exists. We are not always right.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary: I would like to ask the Premier, since he has just told us that the government opted for higher fees as opposed to deterrents, would he give us his assurance now that the government does not intend to implement that part of the Taylor committee's recommendations that it referred to as balanced billing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Taylor committee's report is being assessed by the ministry. Ultimately, there may be some recommendations coming to the cabinet. If there are such recommendations, these too will be discussed here rather fully in the House. I think, once again, to take any one particular aspect of the Taylor committee's report and say we will or we will not, would be somewhat premature. It is the kind of report that needs a rather complete assessment, which it is receiving.

DENISON MINES LIMITED

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Is the minister aware that Dome Mines Limited of Toronto and two of its subsidiaries have just agreed to purchase a 10 per cent interest in Denison Mines Limited from Madison Funds Incorporated of New York for $31 million and that at this price all of Denison would have been available to Ontario for $307 million, which is equivalent to the $300 million in interest-free advances that we have put forward for uranium developments in Elliot Lake? Does the minister not feel, with that evidence before the House, that Ontario missed an opportunity to provide the people of Ontario with a more economic uranium supply by acquiring Denison Mines?

Mr. Havrot: You're only two weeks behind time.

Mr. Samis: The answer is yes.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I do not accept as at all valid the premise on which this question is asked. It says the mines "would have been available." That assumes they would have. There is no shred of evidence to say that in fact all that stock would have been available.

Mr. Deans: There are ways of doing it though.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Did the government, in fact, investigate to see whether Denison was available, and is it the minister's position, if a company refuses to sell because of ideological reasons, that he should just simply take that decision lying down?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think the evidence on that subject is available in voluminous amounts, based on the deliberations of the select committee which looked at this thing. [2:15]

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, now that the minister is obviously very satisfied with the position taken by his government in terms of the purchase of uranium, has he made any concerted efforts, since the time of that signing, to deal with the federal government in order to establish a two-price system for indigenous uranium?

Mr. Deans: How about the indigenous energy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: How about the indigenous gas?

Mr. Warner: Talk about a two-price system! Talk to Gillespie about that.

Hon. B. Stephenson: How about oil and gas?

Mr. Reed: We are not net importers of uranium.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. minister have any response to that question?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are exploring this question with the federal government, as we are other matters relating to world prices on other energy commodities.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Denison Mines, which is being bid for, is also bidding; and is the minister aware that Denison has recently bid $158 million to acquire a one-third interest in the Key Lake uranium deposits in Saskatchewan? Has the government attached any condition to the profits that Denison Mines will earn from its contract for Elliot Lake uranium with Ontario Hydro in order to ensure that those profits are reinvested in this province and not elsewhere in the world?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Elsewhere in the world? Saskatchewan is in another country, is it?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I thought Saskatchewan would be one place you would approve of.

Mr. S. Smith: The NDP wants a financial barrier to the rest of Canada so you can't take your dollars out of Ontario into Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will take that question under advisement, Mr. Speaker. It's a ridiculous question to begin with, but I'll still take it under advisement.

Mr. Conway: Reuben, you left the NDP at the right time.

Interjections.

CAMPGROUND RATES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Treasurer: Since he is committed to improving tourism in Ontario, can the Treasurer explain how he justifies removing the provincial sales tax on tourist accommodation while, at the same time, allowing provincial campground rates in Ontario to increase by up to 75 per cent, thus putting them at a level which is not competitive with other neighbouring jurisdictions?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I don't accept the last part of that question, and perhaps the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) might have something to say about it.

There is another competitive aspect: I don't think it's any secret that, in fact, we undercharge for services in our own campgrounds, thereby putting at a very serious competitive disadvantage those in the private sector who operate similar enterprises—

Mr. Laughren: That's really where it's at.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and whom we would very much like to encourage and, in fact, do encourage. By holding our own rates down, we make it very difficult for those in the private sector in the campground industry, of whom there are many who are doing well and making a significant contribution to this economy. I would doubt, however, that that would be a consideration the hon. member would take into account.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister aware, to take one neighbouring state, that in the state of Michigan they charge $2, compared with the forthcoming $5 charge in Ontario for an unserviced campsite—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: No, no. That is not true.

Mr. Cassidy: —and that they charge $5, compared with a forthcoming $7 in this province, for a serviced campsite? Has the minister determined what effect differentials like those will have on tourism by campers in Ontario?

An hon. member: Why don't you move to Michigan?

Mr. Martel: You go to the Bahamas.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you camp in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would suggest that the leader of the third party put that question to the Minister of Natural Resources, but I indicate again what I said before: We are also interested in fair competition with those in the private sector within Ontario and we aim to maintain our respect for fair competition with them.

Mr. Deans: That's what drove the price of housing up. That exact same policy drove the price of land up in Ontario.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Could the Treasurer tell us, in view of reports in the Ottawa press on the weekend that certain operators in the Ottawa region were not passing on the reduction, whether he is doing any follow-up to see that the tourists in Ontario get the benefits of that seven per cent removal?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I'm not aware of such reports. I'll have a look at them.

Mr. S. Smith: What about when the minimum wage makes us non-competitive? What does the hon. member think of that?

Mr. Foulds: I think maybe you should go on minimum wage, Stuart.

Mr. Swart: Is the Treasurer not aware that the rates of the private camp operators usually follow those set by the provincial parks, and therefore there will likely be a very substantial increase in all of the rates, which will be a deterrent to the tourist industry? Would he be prepared to comment on this?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: My experience would be that it's the other way around.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question for the Premier and I would like to direct it to the Premier, though part of the answer may have to come from the Minister of the Environment. Can the Premier inform me whether a decision has been reached by the Ministry of the Environment to establish a liquid industrial waste treatment facility in the city of Nanticoke in the region of Haldimand-Norfolk, and does he realize the extreme opposition to this proposed facility by residents of the area, to the extent that I have on my desk 1,200 signatures from people voicing their objections? With his permission, I would like to hand these petitions to the Premier today.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is asking me a question as to whether or not I would accept the signatures that he is sending across during the question period, the answer to that is yes. I always made an effort to accommodate his constituents before he became a member, I do so while he is a member, and will at that point in time in the future when we will once again have representation from that particular great geographic area on this side of the House.

Mr. Kerrio: You don't have the addresses to prove it.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, after those kind of remarks, can the Premier give an answer to the first part of the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest the first part of the question might be properly directed to the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of the Environment advise me whether a decision has been made on the industrial waste site being advocated in the city of Nanticoke in the region of Haldimand-Norfolk?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is asking if a decision has been made by the cabinet, maybe the Premier should have answered that, but I'll tell him no.

Mr. S. Smith: Pass the buck.

Mr. Warner: That was a short stay in the cabinet.

Mrs. Campbell: Obviously neither of them can answer it.

HIGHWAY 17

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In view of the opposition of the band council of the Garden River reserve to MTC's plan to pave the shoulders of Highway 17 through the reserve, expressed to the minister at a meeting we both attended a few weeks ago, and the government's commitment to restraint in expenditures, does he intend to proceed with the contract without modification?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes, I intend to proceed with it, as I stated to the chief and the band council that day. I also agreed to take into consideration possible signing and other things that we might do to accommodate some of their concerns.

Mr. Wildman: Has the minister also considered the proposals made by the band council for indications of MTC's good faith and for the paving of only three feet on either side of the road, rather than the 10 feet stipulated in the contract?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker, we don't feel that would be a suitable solution to the problem.

Mr. Nixon: You should have a four-lane highway up there.

MERCURY POLLUTION

Hon. Mr. McCague: The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) asked me about the spill in the Niagara River last week. We are aware that the Olin Corporation did, indeed, discharge excessive quantities of mercury to the Niagara River but do not know of the specific quantity.

Immediately we became aware of the discharge, my staff contacted the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation to obtain details of the discharge. We found that the company had provided the state with false information concerning the concentrations and quantities discharged over a seven-year period. The company apparently made a voluntary disclosure of these activities.

The state is not aware of the actual amount discharged but considers the figure of 38 tons to be highly exaggerated and thinks the amount is closer to the company's revised figure of 5.17 tons but it is carrying out further investigations. Information which was provided to the state in the past and of which we were aware through our discussions with the state indicated that the company was regularly in compliance with its permit.

The United States EPA is proceeding to prosecute the company and three former employees. New York state is obtaining additional data and was understandably quite reluctant to disclose further information because of the pending court action.

Notwithstanding this, I have written Mr. Peter Berie, commissioner of the department, to express my concern and obtain a full report of the situation. With regard to the hazard to human health, mercury discharge to the water course poses no direct threat. Any hazard to human health would be as a result of eating fish containing excessive amounts of mercury, and we are continuing to sample and monitor the fish.

Mr. Kerrio: I have a new question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A new question? The hon. minister has the answer to another question.

Mr. B. Newman: I have a supplementary.

Mr. Deans: Why can't the minister answer them one at a time?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Would the minister care to tell us just exactly the date on which he first found out that Olin Chemicals was dumping mercury and mercury contaminated compounds into the Niagara River?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I personally found out about it the same day as the hon. member for Niagara Falls, who read it in the paper.

Mrs. Campbell: How does the minister know?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has the answer to another question.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) asked a question on Friday.

The region of Wentworth is responsible for monitoring and controlling municipal and industrial waste being deposited into the upper Ottawa landfill site, and for sampling, testing, recording and controlling any leachate emanating from the site. My staff have also carried out leachate investigation and have instituted monitoring procedures to determine the effect of the landfill operations on Red Hill Creek.

The most recent inspection reports dated November 17 and November 22, 1977, of inspections conducted by ministry staff, are being forwarded separately. These investigations have not demonstrated any detectable adverse effects on Red Hill Creek stemming from the disposal of industrial liquid wastes at the site. Any pollution from the industrial waste in Red Hill Creek would be mostly in the dissolved form and, therefore, it could be detected by normal sampling procedures even under high flow conditions. Concentrations, however, would be diluted in this case.

In discussions with the staff of the region, it was learned that they recently became aware of some industrial liquid waste being deposited into the site that appeared to be suitable for disposal by other means or that appeared to have an excessive concentration of some metals. It is understood that the region, as a matter of prudence, took prompt action to ban access of these materials to the site until a more thorough investigation could be carried out.

The follow-up investigations revealed that some liquids can, in fact, be disposed of more efficiently by other means. However, the metals detected in the sampling program were in the solid form similar to the metal on tin cans and thus would not gain access to Red Hill Creek. It is stressed that the action taken by the region was a precautionary measure and not a result of any detrimental effects being found in Red Hill Creek.

It may also be worth noting that the Ottawa Street site has been used for approximately 20 years by the city of Hamilton. The amounts of deposited industrial waste in liquid form have been recently dramatically decreased by the introduction of the solidification program and by the recycling of oil recovered from the waste.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. provincial Treasurer has the answer to a question asked previously.

Mr. Foulds: That will be a switch.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, on March 30, the Leader of the Opposition requested that I provide him with information regarding the package of materials distributed by the government entitled, "Ontario at the Conference of First Ministers on the Economy."

The package, sir, was mailed to about 90,000 Ontarians across the province. Another 2,000 copies have been made available to the government book store to respond to public requests for this material. It is available in either English or French. The total cost of this distribution was $154,000—

Mr. Bolan: What? Shame!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —including printing, postage and handling. A sample of the groups across the province which received the material are insurance companies, credit union managers, real estate brokers, doctors, lawyers, manufacturers and union executives.

Mr. Conway: What, no plumbers?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: For this last group, the Ontario Federation of Labour was kind enough to make available to us its current mailing list, as did several other organizations.

Mr. Bolan: What about the unemployed?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The purpose of this broad distribution was clearly set out in the letter from the Premier (Mr. Davis) which accompanied this material, to provide as many citizens as possible with an opportunity to comment on the Ontario proposal to the conference and the conclusions reached by the first ministers.

An hon. member: Why didn't you run an ad?

Mr. S. Smith: Some of them could read the newspapers.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I'm sure the members opposite would agree the Ontario proposals played an important part in the conference and deserve a more detailed consideration by the people of the province.

Mr. Peterson: Don't assume anything like that. Don't insult us.

Mr. S. Smith: At a cost of $154,000?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Second, the English-language media coverage of the conference was far from complete. Neither English-language television network provided full, live coverage.

Mr. S. Smith: That's pure propaganda.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Third, the process of devising a medium-term economic strategy for Canada is a continuing one.

Mr. Wildman: How much time does the minister want?

Mr. Conway: Only Gallup polls are more expensive.

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In my view, the first ministers made a positive beginning in February, and they intend to meet again in November; in these circumstances, consulting with the people of Ontario on their number one concern—job creation and economic development—is, to my way of thinking, just plain good common sense.

Mr. Martel: Too bad it wouldn't be the government's.

Mr. Samis: Then came the budget.

Mr. Martel: What in the budget created a job? What jobs did the Treasurer create? He has such concern.

GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I have a response to a question by the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) last Friday who asked if it would be possible, in view of this government's interest in energy conservation, to eliminate the retail sales tax on thermal blankets for greenhouses. In the past, those greenhouse operators who produced food were entitled to exemption on thermal blankets for greenhouses as farm equipment while those who produced flowers were not entitled to the exemption.

Mr. Speaker: I am pleased to inform the House that we are in the process of preparing a change in the regulation dealing with farming which will include all greenhouse operators under the definition of "farming." Consequently, effective March 8 of this year, which was the date of the budget, all greenhouse operators will be entitled to exemption on their purchases of thermal blankets for greenhouses.

Mr. Reed: Since the minister has taken the initiative and demonstrated his interest in energy conservation, I wonder if he would now extend the tax exemption to stove pipes?

Mr. Speaker: That's not really supplementary. The hon. member for Niagara Falls.

AUTO PACT

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I have a question of the Premier. In answer to a supplementary question on March 3, regarding subsidization of the big three, the Premier made some comments that I think were valid, and I just wondered if he has decided on a particular policy as it relates to incentives to the big three to locate in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to know the hon. member recognizes the validity of everything I say.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, no; that's not what he said.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, didn't he say that?

Mr. Ruston: Not quite.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought that's what he meant.

Mr. Speaker: just to add to this discussion, I did communicate to the Prime Minister my concern about this province or any province getting into, shall we say a bidding war in terms of location of major capital plants of this or any other nature. I reminded the Prime Minister of our discussions at the first ministers' conference related to the auto pact and the automotive industry, and pointed out that I was concerned about the principle of having to get into this type of situation with those particular corporations. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we are keeping something of an open mind, because we want this kind of investment within the province, but we would much prefer to have it done in the spirit of the auto pact rather than by having some major capital appropriation made to any of the big four. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) has commented on this as well as the Treasurer and myself.

There's no question that some states of the union, and perhaps, sister provinces, are taking a somewhat different approach. This is one reason we are meeting with the auto companies again in the next few days, and we will continue to keep a very close eye on it. I do emphasize that we are reluctant to get into a situation where we have large scale capital funding in order to attract an industry that under the spirit of the Act should be locating here in any event.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I wonder, then, if a survey has been made of production capacity in automobile making and parts, and to what degree do the auto manufacturers really owe us a future in the manufacturing of autos and parts in Canada, and in the province of Ontario specifically?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Obviously, we have a particular interest in the province of Ontario. I must confess I am not sure that the auto pact specifies the province of Ontario. I think it refers to Canada, and so it is difficult for me to comment other than as it relates to our own province. Obviously, we would like to see the bulk of this investment take place in our own province, but I don't think the auto pact precludes the possibility of some of it taking place in our sister provinces, and I am sure the hon. member wouldn't want to preclude the possibility of that happening on occasion, knowing the very fair-minded type of person he is.

In terms of what is presently going on, we are discussing not just the existing figures but the publicly stated figures of the industry as to their tentative plans over the next several years. It is very difficult to develop figures that are based on possible investment. I can get figures for the hon. member relating to the state of the auto pact, say in 1977; I don't think we can get them for 1978 yet. We are really talking about future investment at this precise moment.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the Premier has written letters regarding the auto pact to the federal minister who is supposed to be in charge, can he indicate at this time whether he has received a reply, whether he intends to get a reply or whether he has given up hope of getting any kind of reply from the federal government?

Mr. Wornton: Where there's life there's hope.

Mr. Makarchuk: I'm not sure there's life.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I always live in hope.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: When the Premier is meeting with the executives from the big four, what approach does he plan on taking with these people? Does he have any proposals to give to them in order to encourage Chrysler in particular to keep the 750 jobs at the truck plant in Windsor? What approach does the Premier plan on taking with these people, or is it just an information meeting?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can assure the hon. member we will certainly make it very clear to Chrysler that we are concerned about not only the maintenance of existing employment, but the potential in terms of whatever future investment they may be contemplating as a corporation. We will be dealing with both.

HOSPITAL BUDGETS

Mr. Breaugh: I have a question for the Minister of Health. It is a little difficult to find hospitals with expansions going on, but I did find two, and I have a question relating to both of them. The Peel Memorial Hospital, which is well-represented in this Legislature, and the Charlotte Eleanor Englehart Hospital, also well-represented in this Legislature, both have expansion programs on for this current year.

Hon. B. Stephenson: What's the second one?

Mr. Breaugh: It's the Charlotte Eleanor Englehart Hospital in Petrolia.

Mr. Nixon: Where's Petrolia? Is that Lambton riding?

Mr. Breaugh: It's in Lambton. In the case of these two hospitals which have expansionary programs and yet at the same time are trying to live with the ministry's budget operating restrictions, will we see the phenomenon this year of hospitals closing beds in one ward while they open up new beds in new additions?

Mrs. Campbell: Again.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, I want to agree with the comments about the quality of representation in the two ridings concerned; I think we all agree with that in all parties.

Mr. Wildman: They will have to increase the size of the beds.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let the record show I paused to let the applause to that die down.

Mr. Foulds: Let the record show there was a short pause.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sure members will find in a number of parts of the province that the uses to which certain beds are put will change during the year. They will see in some cases active treatment beds become chronic care beds and they will perhaps see obstetrical beds become medical-surgical beds and that sort of thing. I don't carry around in my head the facts and figures to do with all of the almost 250 hospitals—who is doing what and who has got new programs and in what ward.

Mr. Lewis: Why not?

Mrs. Campbell: Just for Tory ridings.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Certainly, in the case of Peel Memorial they have been given the go-ahead to proceed with an additional 60 beds. Their architects are working on it now. There are a number of projects like that around the province. There are also as many or more projects involving the rationalization of existing facilities to make sure they are put to the most effective and economic use. As I stated, with almost 250 hospitals I can't carry all the figures around in my head.

Mr. Deans: You are speaking too quickly again.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the member would like me to find out for him from the area planning co-ordinators what these two particular hospitals are doing vis-à-vis their budgets for this year, I will certainly be glad to get that information for him; or it could be that if he wanted he could get it directly from the hospitals himself.

Mr. Breaugh: Supplementary: The question was not related to rationalization of bed use. I want to know will we see the phenomenon of certain wards in hospitals being closed and those beds not used at all, while we have expansion and new beds provided in other parts of the same hospital?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It could happen; for instance, if a hospital is opening up a day-surgery unit and a traditional ward was closed down and something near the emergency area or the operating theatres was opened for this purpose, that's possible. Every hospital, of course is different. The layouts are different and sometimes in order to make the most effective use of the facility it means closing down one area and opening up another. But—

Mr. Warner: That's not good practice, Dennis.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is good practice.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. Bradley: My question is for the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker. In view of the policy of the Ministry of Community and Social Services to phase out training schools and to integrate the children from them into the various communities across the province, would the minister indicate to the House what special provision for funding he has made to various boards of education so that they can accommodate the needs of these children? I think we can assume such funding would be over and above what one would expect from the children who are in the present schools in terms of special education, special training for teachers and special programs.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, under the Education Act and the general legislative grant regulations, the province pays for these services to children, such as the hon. member has indicated, that are provided by local boards. There's a special arrangement and special payment for services provided to students from those homes or community facilities going into the local schools. There is also provision for the local school boards to provide educational services to teachers and supplies into various community institutions that happen to be in their jurisdiction.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate to the House in general terms—I recognize he wouldn't have specific figures—how the various boards of education have been responding to this particular policy? Has he received further representation from boards or from organizations representing those boards as to the need for further funding in this area?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm not aware that anybody is in the need of further funding. It's my recollection that the provisions we have provide for close to 100 per cent payment by the province for services in this area; either for the students attending the school in a local board jurisdiction where they don't have taxpaying parents, or for the services provided in an institution.

I do know there is concern in certain parts of the province that too many of these facilities will be in their particular jurisdiction. Some of the boards and some of the directors have spoken to me about this concern and whether they will be able to provide all the services that would be necessary if a whole host of community facilities suddenly ended up in their board's jurisdiction. We're working with them on that.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: When the minister was consulting with the directors of education and some of the boards about this change in policy, did any of them bring to his attention their concern that many of the young people have behavioural problems that are treated better in separate settings? Was he told they anticipate, unfortunately, some problems in the general classroom setting when these young people move into that setting?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think it's fair to say that it's easy to generalize in this area. There's a great tendency today to believe that regularization—putting everyone in a regular classroom setting—is the best answer and that's the way we should be moving in every case; of course that really isn't so. Each individual child must be looked at, and in some cases provision of a program in a regular classroom will present a problem. That concern has been expressed to me.

But on the other hand, for a long time we've felt that the only way to treat a lot of people was to create special facilities and special classes and keep them away from the regular school program and the regular school stream. We're now trying to hit a middle course that provides regular programs for those that can take those programs, but not forgetting there will always be some students who will need some specialized form of facility or class.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

Mr. Deans: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Did he read the report in which Mr. R. J. Toombs was quoted as saying there might have to be oil and energy rationing in Canada by the year 1982?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yes, Mr. Speaker.
[2:45]

Mr. Deans: He did; good.

Mrs. Campbell: Did the minister read Alexander Graham Bell on the same subject?

Mr. Deans: I'm sorry, what was that? I know it must have been important.

Mrs. Campbell: I asked if the minister read Alexander Graham Bell on the same subject.

Mr. Deans: Did the minister read Alexander Graham Bell on the same subject? No; okay. I just wanted the minister to answer and save a supplementary.

Mr. Martel: He can't read.

Mr. Deans: Given the nature of that report and the problems that that obviously brings to mind, has the minister given any thought to whether Ontario might make representation to the energy board with regard to the continued sale of natural gas out of the country in very large quantities, and the fact that in many instances the use of natural gas and the use of oil is interchangeable, so we could in fact make some rationalization and change?

Does the minister think it appropriate that we continue to sell natural gas? Today's report is of another 250 million cubic feet daily to be sold, that is another 250 million cubic feet to add to God knows how many other millions of cubic feet we sell. Is the minister prepared to make some representation with regard to energy conservation at that level; keeping it here in Canada for our use and rationalizing the uses to which it can be put?

An hon. member: Dog in the manger.

Mr. Deans: Dog in the manger nothing.

Mr. Kerrio: The minister didn't even do that with uranium.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Certainly this whole very complicated question of energy supply—and how much we require domestically, and how much we should sell to other countries—is, as the hon. member opposite has implied, a very complicated and complex question.

Mr. Haggerty: What is the minister doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And it certainly needs to be constantly reviewed.

Mr. S. Smith: That's Joe Clark's policy

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In this particular report that the member has cited, I would have to question some of the statements, some of the assumptions, some of the conclusions that have been reached by that author, because I suspect some of it is based on conjecture more than on fact.

In other aspects of the report, it may well be that he is operating on a very solid basis, but certainly at this given point in history it remains very difficult to know really how much reserves we have in natural gas for our own purposes and how much we can sell.

Mr. Foulds: How about this given point in time?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We don't know how much natural gas may be available if we were to embark on a Polar Gas pipeline proposition. There are people who are saying now that in fact the Americans don't need all the natural gas we probably would be selling via northern pipelines. There are all kinds of questions and conjectures and everything else in this field.

Mr. Peterson: Tell us what you do know, Reuben.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can only promise members opposite that the whole area is something we will be actively considering and following as part of our energy policy.

Mr. Warner: We should export you.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary question: Since the minister doesn't know—

An hon. member: Do you?

Mr. Deans: I don't know either; but since the minister doesn't know, and since it is becoming increasingly more apparent that we are not going to have a sufficient amount of oil-based products to meet our needs in the future, doesn't it make sense that wherever possible we should attempt the transition from the oil base to the natural gas base, and that we should attempt to utilize the product that is in fact here in Canada; and that we should stop selling it off until we do know?

Mr. Conway: Aren't you glad you left the CCF, Reuben?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would certainly agree with that observation and I thought I would include the energy of electrical power in that as well, because that is something we can produce at home without having to import it if we use uranium as we are doing. But I think the hon. member opposite also knows that while you can replace some oil with natural gas for certain purposes, you cannot do it for every purpose.

Mr. Deans: That's all I am saying, I didn't say you could.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have not yet invented the automobile that can use natural gas; at least as far as I know.

Mr. Reed: Oh yes we have.

OMA-OHIP FEE SCHEDULES

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Health and deals with the negotiations in the matter of the OHIP-OMA fee relationship. Can the minister assure this House, following upon his answers on Friday, that the result of those negotiations will in no way alter the universality of our Ontario health insurance program and that whatever is decided upon by the government and the Ontario Medical Association will respect that portion of the Medical Care Act of Canada which says that "it must be based on a provision for reasonable compensation for insured services rendered by the medical practitioner and does not impede or preclude, either directly or indirectly, whether by charges made to insured persons or otherwise, reasonable access to insured services by insured persons?"

Can the minister assure this House that that provision of the Medical Care Act Canada will be respected and that the universality of the Ontario health insurance scheme will in no way be altered by the present negotiations?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that question has already been asked and answered.

Mr. Foulds: No, it has not been answered.

Interjections.

Mr. Conway: It was indeed asked by my leader of the Premier, but I think it is sufficiently important that it should be redirected to the Minister of Health since it is a matter of what I determine to be urgent public concern.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier didn't answer the question.

Mr. Nixon: He passed the buck.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I really can't add very much to what the Premier said earlier.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are adding nothing to nothing.

Mr. Nixon: He didn't say anything.

Mr. Conway: Can the Minister of Health assure this House that what the Treasurer stated in his budget of March 7, 1978, where he pointed out, "that we as a government argued eloquently against deterrent fees, quite rightly pointing out that such a policy would deny access to our high quality of health care system—"

Mr. Speaker: That question has also already been asked and answered.

HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM

Ms. Bryden: I have a question of the Minister of Housing. In October, 1976, the Ontario home renewal program was extended to cover rental accommodation for low and middle-income groups and the usual housing-by-headlines press releases were issued extolling this program and promising an expenditure of $2 million in the 1976-77 fiscal year and future payments based on the need established in that first year. I would like to ask the minister how much was actually spent on this program in 1976-77 and whether any expenditures were made in 1977-78 or are contemplated for this year, or is this another housing program which the government is quietly phasing out?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I have not got the exact sum of money that was spent in 1976-77, but I will be pleased to get that for the member. Let me assure her that this program and a great number of others in the field of housing are now being reviewed by the Ministry of Housing for the province of Ontario with the federal government and CMHC. I would hope that some time later this month there will be an announcement relating to national and provincial housing policies for the future.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: I take it if it is being reviewed that it may be being phased out. I would like to ask the minister how can he justify an allocation of only $60,000 from the first year's $2 million to the city of Toronto? That would cover only six units, if the maximum of $10,000 was taken up. There has been no further allocation in the next fiscal year to the city. How can he justify that in the city of Toronto where the housing need is so great?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I think the member should realize that it is upon application, not just the province deciding to hand it out wherever they think it should go. Municipalities apply for it, and the program is in place. As for phasing it out, I would not accept the remark that we are phasing it out this moment except to say that it is being reviewed in relation to other programs that are presently in place in Ontario and federally.

Mr. Warner: You should phase out the ministry.

Mr. Cassidy: Your reviews all mean phasing out.

TEACHERS' STRIKE

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question of the Minister of Education. Could I have his reaction to this headline:

Mr. Foulds: It will be unique.

Mr. Sweeney:—"Will Risk Failing of Pupils to Raise Quality of Education," referring to teachers in the Huron public school board?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't know that it is really proper for me to comment upon what goes through the mind of a headline writer for the Toronto Globe and Mail.

Mr. Wildman: Headline hunter.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't know what they're getting at. I read the story and it comments on the teachers' strike that's presently going on, in Huron county I believe. As my friend knows, the Education Relations Commission and all concerned are working night and day to try and bring a successful conclusion to that very knotty problem.

Mr. Sweeney: Can the minister reconcile the decision by Mr. Owen Shime of the Education Relations Commission that he will not intervene, and the comments of the five secondary school principals who have warned both the teachers and the board that the education of 4,500 students is in jeopardy?

Mr. Ruston: Right; Shime won't do anything.

Hon. Mr. Wells: First let me say that I haven't talked to those principals nor received any communication that I have seen from them. But I would be very surprised if what they had said is exactly as was reported in that story. I think that Owen Shime and the members of the Education Relations Commission are very diligently carrying out their jobs. If they feel that the students' education is in jeopardy and that some action should be taken, they will recommend that action to the government.

UNIVERSITY HIRING PRACTICES

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities: In the material which he submitted to me concerning the hiring of Canadian faculty at our universities, can he indicate if the four universities still well below the 70 per cent in hiring Canadian staff have given him any reason as to why they can't reach the same level as the rest of the universities have in the province?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think in reply, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. member that all of the university presidents are aware of my concern on this item. As a matter of fact, I think I've been quoted rather extensively as being hawkish on this. So to say that they're not aware would be anything but correct—and I'm not suggesting that the member said that. They have come to my office and indicated on a direct basis, one by one, why they were not able in this instance to hire faculty members other than the way they did. I don't think there's any doubt that they have made it their personal concern to look at these hirings and to do the very best they can. Those situations change year to year.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the four in question are still hiring only in the vicinity of 50 per cent new faculty, which is less than the number they already employ, at that rate is the ministry not aware that they'll never reach a 70 per cent level because approximately half their hiring is non-Canadian?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think in that one instance the hon. members refers to this year was particularly low at the same institution—if we're thinking of the same one—and that last year was much better.

The presidents feel that it would be unfair to look at this on a yearly basis, and with that I agree. I think we have to give the policy that we have put in place—and which we have stated rather forcefully on occasions—a little more opportunity to become effective. We're monitoring this yearly and I would think that in the future, particularly given the conditions as they exist today in our faculties, the hon. member will see improvements each and every year. I think, for instance, the president of the University of Windsor has made that very clear and I think he would be the first to admit that was at our insistence.

TRAINING CENTRE STAFF

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services: Did the minister and the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) have any input into assisting people who had been long-time employees of this ministry and the Ministry of Correctional Services in avoiding the moving of them from Glendale to Hillcrest or vice versa? This is causing considerable disruption and in some cases putting people out of work. Did ministry people talk to one another to see if they could assist in order to avoid one or two employees being unemployed after long-time service?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, not only have I had some discussions with the hon. Minister of Correctional Services but there was also a considerable amount of work done at the staff level to attempt to ensure that there would, first of all, be no loss of employment without our at least being able to present to the employees an alternative within either the adult corrections system or the juvenile corrections system.

In some instances, it became impossible, as I understand it, to ensure that it would not be necessary for some people to relocate. Given the fact that the facilities which were involved in the transfer were geographically reasonably close to each other, we had hoped the disruption would be minimized and that in some cases the relocation of an individual or a family would not be necessary, but commuting would be possible.

Mr. Worton: Supplementary: In this case, there was a gentleman in charge of stores at Glendale who is supposed to be taking a position at Hillcrest and then there is a maintenance gentleman at Hillcrest who was supposed to be taken to Glendale. I understand that neither of these was given the opportunity by the ministries to discuss this. Both of them were satisfied where they were but now, through the disruption, one if not both of them are going to be without positions.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I do recall the hon. member bringing to my attention one of those individual cases and my following it up with staff in an effort to try to ensure that the individual would not be without employment as a result of the changes. I was not specifically aware of the other. If the hon. member would bring those two cases to my attention, I would be pleased to see if we could resolve them with the Ministry of Correctional Services.

TEACHERS' STRIKE

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. Because of the concern demonstrated by both parents and students alike with regard to, first, the teachers' withdrawal of certain services in the high schools of Renfrew county and then the lock-out of these teachers by the boards, can the minister advise the House what new developments or what progress has been made by the negotiator from the ERC in the last few days?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, all I can tell my friend is that Tom O'Connor, who I believe is the mediator in that particular situation, is still working on it and is available, and he and the Education Relations Commission are attempting to, as I said earlier, arrive at a satisfactory settlement in the dispute.

Mr. Yakabuski: Supplementary: Does the ministry plan or contemplate any changes or amendments to Bill 100 whereby the kind of work to rule that is carried out in Renfrew county high schools could be better defined? If it had been, it would not have resulted in the lock-out we are faced with now.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, Mr. Speaker.

MOTION

HANSARD COVERAGE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the proceedings of the standing social development committee, when considering the annual report of the Ministry of Health, be recorded, transcribed and printed by Hansard in the format of the daily House Hansard.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

House in committee of supply.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

(Applause.)

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McClellan: Could the minister tell us what he does?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I consider it a great honour today to be chosen for the first estimates to come before this House. As you know, it was 10 weeks ago last Saturday, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when I assumed my responsibilities as Minister of Government Services.

Before proceeding with the discussion, and the various votes and items, I would like to make a few brief remarks concerning the Ministry of Government Services.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The operations of the ministry are grouped into three major programs: service of accommodation; supply and services; and management and information.

1. The accommodation program has the responsibility for the provision and maintenance of accommodation for the ministries and agencies of the government.

2. The supply and services program involves the provisions of a wide variety of centralized services and facilities to achieve efficiency and economy in the supply of purchases, goods and services, as well as certain commonly used government support services.

3. Management and information services is responsible for the provision of information systems design and computer programming and management consulting services.

The report recently tabled in the design and construction program, 1978-79, outlines the accommodation projects completed and those planned for this year. In addition, the ministry's annual report, 1976-77, provides information on the achievement of all ministry programs.

My ministry is very mindful of the importance of ensuring fair competition and economy in the award of government contracts. This is accomplished through publicly advertised tenders and the award of contracts on the basis of the lowest acceptable and responsible tender. Complete information on tenders and contracts awarded are published each year in the ministry's annual report.

I will conclude these brief remarks by saying that the 1978-79 estimates of the Ministry of Government Services are within the target established by the government and in accordance with the government program of expenditure restraint. I will be pleased to answer questions concerning the estimates of my ministry.

Mr. Ruston: I am sure we'd all like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to Government Services, having been in the cabinet for a year or so before that as Minister without Portfolio. We're glad that he has been assigned a particular position, although I'm sure that this minister was always able to find things to do, even if it was opening up new buildings in western Ontario with whomever was building them, or opening up new highways, or whatever there was.

I would suppose, as Minister of Government Services, being the real politician that he is from way back—he's not that old, I don't mean that—

Mr. Foulds: Yes he is.

Mr. Ruston: I guess we call them the pork barrel politicians, Mr. Chairman, where, if the government was building any new buildings or new bridges this minister would be there.

It seems too bad that they're cutting down his total budget from previous years because that isn't going to give him the opportunity that he likes. He does very well, I must say. He attended the opening of a street reconstruction in the town of Essex and presented the mayor and myself with a new tie that day. I think I still have it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Samis: Is he left-handed or right-handed?

Mr. Ruston: However, that is one of the things in politics that people accept to a great extent since they like to have the minister down into their community, but it does bother me somewhat that we are cutting back when we have an unemployment rate of more than seven per cent in the province; and in some areas it is much higher.

At one time the government was supposed to be in the building business when times were kind of tough and we had high unemployment. I can recall the former leader of our party, five or so years ago, saying to the Treasurer and the then Minister of Government Services that when times were booming and there was very low unemployment, the government should not be constructing buildings for the future—any new courthouses and things like that—if they could possibly get along without them, because it's really government's place sometimes to kind of pump-prime, and when we have high unemployment that's when they should build the buildings they will be using for the next 25 or 50 years. So it's of some concern to me that we see the budget cut down at this time.

One of the new methods the government is using for buildings is the lease-back proposition, where the contractor signs a lease with the government for 20 or 25 years, and at the end of that period the government owns the building and the contractor is then out of the picture. This is easy financing, I suppose, and the government doesn't really have to get involved. A contractor can go to a bank or another lending institution and, if he has a 25-year lease on a building, I am sure he can go into the bank and walk out with most of the money to build that building and not have to supply too much of his own, because a guaranteed lease with the government is certainly good collateral.

While that's another system the government has been using over the past few years, I believe I questioned a year or two ago in the estimates—and there is some difference of opinion—as to whether that's the most economical way to provide government buildings. It certainly avoids the government getting into capital debt and having to borrow the money to build, and it leaves the private sector to furnish the money. So it has that advantage. But at the end of the 20 or 25 years most buildings need a certain amount of rebuilding, and of course the government would be involved in that and it could run into a fair expenditure after 25 years. There are, as I say, some different thoughts on that and when we get into each individual vote, I would like to get into a little more detail and see whether the minister and his officials have any figures as to how that does work out as to cost.

One of the other matters I will be bringing up under the proper vote is the matter of the Burwash centre, south of Sudbury. I understand that some of it has been sold to the federal government for about $350,000 but that there is a great land mass there yet that the province still owns. You will recall there was a considerable sum of money spent in 1974 and 1975 to reconstruct that edifice and the surrounding buildings, and then it was closed. We are concerned with what might be done there to make it into some kind of an area where we can get some employment and whether it can be used for some form of an industrial area or whatever. It certainly is something we have to look at, because there is an awful big acreage there and I don't think the province is making enough use of it now, considering the cost of maintaining it. That's something we will be bringing up a little later.

As far as the total estimates are concerned, I don't think it's necessary to engage in diatribe or to make a long speech on the Ministry of Government Services. It's something that's more or less a caretaking job. I guess that's what you would call the minister—a caretaker of the public buildings in the province of Ontario to see that they are maintained properly. We have some things we want to bring up under the proper vote on employment of contract help in maintaining the buildings. Members' services and the members' share of this particular building, I am sure will be brought up under a later vote—probably by the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) and other members of the committee that deals with that. I don't think I will speak any longer on that.

I will be looking forward to getting into some details of the estimates as we go along, and let it go at that now.

Mr. Davidson: I would be remiss if I did not, in my opening remarks, offer congratulations to the member for Lambton on his appointment to the position of Minister of Government Services. I do so not only on behalf of myself but also on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party caucus. I would suggest that in this case the appointment is particularly long overdue, given the minister's true and faithful service to his political party over the years. Be that as it may, we wish him well in his new role, knowing full well the limitations of decision allowed a minister, other than a few, under the present government.

I, too, am new in the role of critic for this ministry, having been the critic for Correctional Services prior to this time. During that period, I also found myself working with a new minister; and although we did not always agree, we found we could work well together. I am confident that this will also be the case with you.

I was a little envious there; the member for Essex North referred to receiving a tie. I've never had that pleasure, but maybe one day the minister can accommodate me with a tie.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We'll see.

Mr. Davidson: It's been some five months now since discussion of the 1977-78 estimates for this ministry took place. At that time our previous critic, the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton), raised a number of important items during the debate. We will, of course, be following these through as we

Of particular interest and concern was the area of capital construction, the tendering processes carried out in that program, and any follow-up the ministry may or may not do regarding construction projects. Through the member for Hamilton Mountain, we specifically raised the problem of the number of suppliers and contractors who were having difficulty with a company called Embassy Management Limited, and the details relating to these matters can be found on pages G-230 to G-232, Volume 1 of the Legislature of Ontario Debates, 1977.

On page G-232, the then minister, the Hon. Mr. McCague, acknowledged that there was a problem. If I may, I would like to quote his statement, in which he said the following: "The problem of Embassy Management Limited is not an easy one. We are aware there have been some doubtful practices. I personally have not signed a contract with Embassy Management since I became minister. I would be very hesitant to do so, in view of what has come to light in the last few weeks. But I really don't know under what authority I could refuse to sign a contract if they were low bidder."

We would like to know if in fact the problems with Embassy Management Limited, or Lamco Services Limited, which is a sister company, have been corrected. Have all of the moneys owed to those people listed by my colleague for Hamilton Mountain been paid in full? We would also like to know if the ministry has applied any pressure on Embassy Management to settle these matters out of court; and if not why not?

It would also be of interest to us to find out whether or not the ministry has had any further dealings with Embassy Management or Lamco Services Company, given the statement of the previous minister. Surely on its record this company does not deserve to be given any government business at all. There are, no doubt, other companies which conduct business in a similar manner, and it is our opinion that any such companies should simply be rejected in any bid or tender.

Another item raised in the last debate was put forward by the member for Grey (Mr. McKessock). It is also an area of interest to us; that is the number of acres of land owned by the government throughout Ontario. This is something which both opposition parties have been attempting to find out for a long period of time. While we recognize the difficulties faced by the ministry in getting this all put on computer, we have been told it can be accomplished in six months. Since, as pointed out previously, the estimates took place some five months ago, and since the original question had been raised quite some time prior to that, can the minister tell us if this program has been completed? If not, why the delay? And if completed, can he provide us with the figures requested?

Another area of concern to those of us in the New Democratic Party is the tardiness with which this government is carrying out the proposal to decentralize services in the province. We, like others, were pleased with the announcement that the Ministry of Revenue would be moving its head office to the Oshawa area, but the program appears to have been stalled there. We have heard nothing further regarding the decision of other ministries moving out of the Toronto area. Yet by their very nature there are those that should not, in fact, be located in Toronto.

Take, for example, the Ministry of Northern Affairs. Here we have a ministry designed specifically to provide much-needed services to the people of northern Ontario, and where do we find it located? Why in Toronto, of course, as far away from the needs of those requiring the service as one can be without swimming across Lake Ontario. It only makes sense, Mr. Minister, that this particular ministry be located somewhere in northern Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Sault Ste. Marie, right on.

Mr. Martel: Come on, John.

Mr. Davidson: —for example Sudbury, where there is a need for employment—for the convenience of the people using the services; perhaps you can tell us if there is any move in that direction.

It is also difficult for us to comprehend the necessity of maintaining the Ministry of Natural Resources in the Toronto area. Here again we have a ministry which by its very nature could be and should be located outside the city of Toronto, and again we request any information you may be able to give us regarding any contemplated move.

There are others, of course, which should be looking outside of Toronto in an effort to provide a better service to the people of Ontario. If you have any information on this subject we would be pleased to be made aware of it. We will also be raising with you questions relating to the future use of property now under control of your ministry. As an example, we will refer to the buildings and property which were once a part of the Grandview School located in Cambridge.

As you are no doubt aware, the Ministry of Correctional Services has used a small portion of this property to create the new region of Waterloo jail. The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) has said on many occasions that he has no further use for any more of that property, or for that matter the buildings remaining on the property. I note, however, that under your design and construction program 1978-79, page 31, you have listed for Cambridge an adult training centre, which of course falls under the Ministry of Correctional Services. Prior to raising any questions regarding this, I should perhaps make you aware of the recent history of the Grandview School.

Back in the 1940s the school was a training school for young men—or boys, as your government saw fit to call them. It served its purpose well in that capacity and the community was aware of its existence. Later it was transformed into a training school for young women and existed as such until 1976, when it was phased out as a school. A portion of the property was maintained by Correctional Services, and the balance of the property turned over to Government Services.

Prior to this taking place, the Ministry of Correctional Services had spent in excess of $100,000 for renovations to buildings on the property. Those renovations included renovating the washroom areas, the showers, the living quarters, the lounges, the entranceways to the property and all that. In addition to this, sometime during the early part of 1972 or 1973 they installed an outdoor swimming pool which cost in excess of $35,000; and they made renovations to the arena, built a lounge area onto the arena, developed soccer fields, softball diamonds, et cetera, which cost an additional amount of over $100,000. Then they turned around and phased out the property.

The reason for doing this was that Grandview was to become a co-educational facility—these are the reasons for the renovations—

Mr. Laughren: It is called Tory mismanagement, that's what it is called, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You don't believe that.

Mr. Davidson: —which would house both young men and women, but as you are aware, your government changed its policy and Grandview now sits empty, unused—other than Churchill House, which is now the jail—and under the control of your ministry. It is my understanding that the estimated value of the remaining buildings and property is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4 million to $5 million, but there it sits, unused and costing the taxpayers of this province, in addition to the renovation costs, a substantial amount of money in maintenance fees.

Though on a smaller scale, it almost reminds one of the situation at Burwash, where the government saw fit to spend countless millions of dollars on a refurbishing project, only to later close down an institution that was functioning and serving its purpose.

I may point out to you that when I say around $4 million, the renovations that took place in Burwash were the building of a gymnasium and the building of single male quarters. Aluminum sidings and windows were put onto the houses. They repaired the interiors of existing homes. There were road improvements, transformer improvements and cell renovations. That total came to somewhere around $4 million.

Here again we have a property of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 35,000 acres, if I am not mistaken, on which many buildings are located, sitting idle because of the policies of this government. While we are aware that the federal government has purchased a small portion of this property for its use, we would like to know what is to happen with the rest of it? During last fall's debates we were told by the then minister (Mr. McCague) that the ministry was looking at the optimum use of the property and that the process was under way at that time. I am also given to understand that you have met with the mayor and a delegation from Cambridge regarding the Grandview property.

We will be questioning you regarding these matters during the appropriate votes. Some of the information we would like to have available would be as follows: How many other properties such as Burwash and Grandview are under the control of your ministry? What, if any, decisions are being made with regard to the two properties mentioned? What is the estimated yearly cost for maintenance of the two properties? And do you not as the new minister and a member of this chamber, have a total disregard for any government which would spend millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money for renovation purposes, only to close down the buildings, render the property useless and allow it to sit there unused for a number of years? Surely this could only happen in the province of Ontario.

In closing, I would like to point out to the minister that the concerns we have raised are not the only ones we intend to deal with. It is our intention to go through these estimates with a fine-tooth comb, we reserve the right to raise many questions under the appropriate vote. These will include questions relating to wages, benefits, working conditions, et cetera, of those persons both within the ministry and those working under contract to your ministry. We will also be discussing the money spent on protocol services, and more important hospitality services provided by your government. We look forward to an interesting discussion during the debate.

Mr. Foulds: A fine opening statement.

Mr. Chairman: Before calling for discussion on item 1, would the minister wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. In reply to the hon. member for Essex North, I would have to say that his remarks are well taken. I have always enjoyed my visits to his area of the province. I like to think it is one of the greatest areas of this province. Just to cross over to my opponent, with your consent, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to give my tie to the hon. member for Cambridge.

Mr. Reed: Has it got any soup on it?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: It has got lunch on it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: But if he would wait, I might have a different one that I can present in the upcoming days.

Burwash will certainly be a subject that will be discussed later. The hon. member for Cambridge mentioned Embassy Management. I have not had the best of relationships with Embassy Management. There has been no contract signed with them since I became minister. I would agree with all of your comments respecting them.

Respecting the buildings and the spare space around and within Cambridge, I met with the mayor and officials, and I believe the city manager. I would only answer you to the effect that when we do have government property such as this as surplus property we do circulate it among all ministries before we do anything further to see if other ministries have a use for the property.

As to your suggestion about decentralization; yes, our government is committed to this. As you know, in the 1976 budget the Treasurer suggested that we were committed to decentralization. You have mentioned the Revenue Ministry going to Oshawa. You didn't mention the OHIP building going to Kingston, and you didn't mention Northern Affairs.

Mr. Samis: He didn't mention that you announced that before the election.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The main point is it is going to proceed, it doesn't matter when the announcement was made.

Mr. Samis: In time for the next election.
[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's a fact that it is going to happen.

Northern Affairs doesn't have an office in Sudbury with an assistant deputy minister. It does have an office in Kenora with an assistant deputy minister. And, of course, I am sure you are all fully aware that the Minister of Northern Affairs does have a private and personal office in the Kenora area. So the ministry is well distributed—

Mr. Foulds: A private and personal office?

Mr. Laughren: Do you call that decentralization, Lorne?

An hon. member: Tokenism, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —and fully represented in the north.

Mr. Laughren: Is that decentralization? Is that your idea of decentralization?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would suggest that the Minister of Northern Affairs has taken himself straight across the northern part of the province and has established offices all across.

Mr. Foulds: Is the head office in the north?

Mr. Laughren: That's Tory decentralization all right.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: With respect to Embassy Management, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed), I believe it was, drew this to my attention a few days ago; he does agree to a certain extent with the minister, although he does have some differences in thought and concern.

Mr. Chairman, I am ready to answer any questions that may be brought forth.

Mr. Chairman: If the committee is agreeable, we will discuss vote 801 item by item.

On vote 801, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, financial services:

Mr. Ruston: I see the staff in the financial services has been increased by five, from 65 to 70. Are they involved in buying and selling, or what are they involved in? I was just wondering if there was any reason for this when we hear the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) say he is keeping our civil service staff to a kind of a steady stream and yet this minister is increasing that staff by five. Can the minister tell me what financial services entail?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, under item 2 there has been an increase of $44,900.

Mr. Ruston: For staff.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's the conversion of unclassified staff to classified staff.

Items 2 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On item 9, ministers without portfolio:

Mr. Chairman: I believe the member for Dovercourt is not in his seat.

Mr. Lupusella: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In relation to item 7, which is described as legal services, can the minister explain to this House—

Mr. Chairman: I believe this was carried.

Mr. Lupusella: I was trying to raise the point, Mr. Chairman, and I hope that I can have your indulgence to raise particular questions in relation to legal services. I am just wondering if the minister can explain to this House what this service is all about and what this money is spent for? Can the minister give us guidelines what this operation of legal services is involving?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Even though the vote is carried, I'll be very glad to speak about this service. I am sure the hon. member understands that all moneys owed to the government come to this ministry for collection.

Mr. Foulds: I thought it went to the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, they come to this ministry for collection.

There are many different real estate transactions that we have to deal with and it is for that reason that; to step up the collection we do require the additional staff.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, if I may reply to the minister's comment. Can the minister outline how many transactions covered by legal services expenses took place in the previous fiscal year—1977-78?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: My answer to that might be a little bit longer, but I would appreciate being able to answer that question fully. The total budget estimate is $436,500. The classified staff is 10 man-years. The complement is not with the Ministry of Government Services but with the Ministry of the Attorney General. The unclassified staff is 10 man-years. At the time of the preparation of this material, unclassified staff has not as yet been converted to the regular staff. The goal is to ensure the legality of the ministry's operation and to provide legal services for its program and activities.

The legal services are provided by the Ministry of the Attorney General and include legal matters related to property acquisition, leases, expropriation, sale of property, contracts, orders in council, collections, drafting of legislation, and appearing before various courts and administrative tribunals. Of the additional funds, a sum of $30,000 is included in the budget estimates to cover salaries and wages for one additional solicitor and one articling student to handle the additional requirements arising from the collection service activities. The number of writs issued in 1977-78 was 95; the expected number in 1978-79 is 125. Judgments signed, 1977-78, were 58; in 1978-79 it will be 125. Collected, other than for collection services, $196,000 in 1977-78; and we expect $250,000 in 1978-79.

Mr. Lupusella: If I understand the statement properly, the minister has just one solicitor working on that particular branch and from time to time he is using the legal services of the Attorney General. Is this the regular procedure which you are using? You have just one solicitor and the clerk, so you get service from the Attorney General's office as well?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the question, we do have four to five solicitors with our department. They're hired through the Attorney General's office but we pay them out of our budget.

Mr. Reed: So actually, as I understand it, according to your explanation Mr. Minister, these lawyers are simply paid by your ministry but they work under the aegis of the Attorney General? Would that also include the Attorney General's full complement of lawyers? Is his full complement paid by your ministry, or what portion?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: These people, whom I referred to as the four or five, actually worked in our ministry. They are not the complete complement of the Attorney General, as I understand it. As I understand it also, the Attorney General does acquire all lawyers needed by all departments and we pay the ones who work in our ministry through our ministry.

Mr. Reed: Do these lawyers go on loan to other agencies of government and other ministries when there are special project cases to be deliberated, or do they work entirely within the framework of the Ministry of Government Services?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I think these particular lawyers work within the framework of Government Services.

Item 9, agreed to.

Vote 801 agreed to.

On vote 802, provision of accommodation program; item 1, program administration:

Mr. Ruston: With regard to your policy on requiring accommodations of less than 5,000 square feet, I understand you do not put those out to tender at this time.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: For less than 5,000 square feet, one of our agents goes out to the area concerned to see what is available in space, if there is any. Once we find there is sufficient space that there can be competition, it is then advertised for public tenders. Does that answer your question?

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, capital construction:

Mr. Charlton: I have a number of questions for the minister under this item. I could start out with the proposed provincial office tower in Hamilton. I understand from statements by the minister that the project is now going to go ahead. Perhaps the minister could tell me have all of the problems that were related to us last fall during the last estimates with the region and the city of Hamilton been straightened out, and do you have the date for start of construction on that project yet?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the hon. member, I am sure that he has read the article in the paper in the last few days. About two weeks ago tomorrow I had a letter hand-delivered to the mayor whereby we rejected the proposal by the city of Hamilton for private enterprise to build the necessary accommodations, including an office tower, hotel and recreational convention centre.

In that same letter, I proposed to the mayor that we would give the city of Hamilton up to one year to accept the original proposal that the province had put forth. Under this original proposal, we agreed as the province to pay $5.1 million towards the cost of a convention centre, which would be two storeys on top of the present parking garage in Hamilton, providing the city picked up the balance of that. There was a slight difference between us and the mayor who was in to see me last week with Mr. Bob Morrow and some of the city officials. We estimate the cost of this convention centre at about $17 million while the city estimates it at slightly less, possibly $16 million. However, our proposal was that we would pay the $5.1 million on whatever the cost was and the city would pick up the difference. Following this, if a satisfactory agreement can be reached the province would continue and build an office tower that would cost a similar amount of money—possibly a little more—on top of the convention centre.

I would only add that I have spoken with his worship the mayor, as I mentioned, and his controller, Mr. Morrow and the city engineer Mr. Phillips. They put forth another proposal to me and I will be taking that to my colleagues in cabinet. I don't have sufficient money in my budget this year to proceed with the whole project but I am convinced that I have sufficient money, if we can work out a satisfactory arrangement, to make a start on this building.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might make a comment?

Mr. Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. Cunningham: I wonder if I may, with the indulgence of the member for Hamilton Mountain, ask a few more questions on this subject. It is of vital concern to all of us in the Hamilton area.

First of all, I'm wondering if either you or your officials could give us some indication as to what the cost has been in terms of the delay associated with this project? It's been talked about for along period of time now and your commitment for $5.1 million means less every day as the rate of inflation continues. I'm also wondering if you've given some consideration to possibly sharing with other members of the Legislature the proposal that has been put forth so that we might offer our suggestions on it. I know we're all vitally concerned, as residents of the Hamilton area, in so far as we do not, in our view, obtain the kind of assistance that some other larger municipalities, like Toronto, have received in the past. Quite often, it's with a great deal of justification that we feel left out.

I don't think the city fathers of Hamilton are out of line in any way in their proposals, especially as their concept relates to private enterprise proceeding with this project. I'd like you, if you would, or maybe your officials, to let us know exactly what your objections are to the private sector taking over this particular project. Possibly you might indicate to us the possibility of amortizing the cost of this over several years of your budget, so that the city of Hamilton won't have to pay the tremendous price that they're going to have to pay; certainly you might reduce the effect of the delay that is associated with this project.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't have any idea of what the cost of this project will be in however many years you are proposing. His worship the mayor made me well aware that the city of Hamilton has been making proposals for a great number of years for this project. He made me aware that at one time it was a 50-50 proposal for the convention centre, but he also agreed that at no time did we ever commit the province to more than $5.1 million.

I would only tell you, that beyond that it's been pointed out to me that the steel for the second project to go on top of the convention centre will possibly add $1.5 million to the cost of the number one project. He felt we should accept the responsibility for that cost and he pointed out other items.

I just received quite a lengthy letter from the mayor. It's a personal letter to me. He has proposed in it that we should maybe accept half the cost of the building. I'm not ready to accept that at this moment. I should have brought a copy of the letter I sent to his worship the mayor, because it's no secret what I said. I pointed out that we had spent some $5 million in the general area of preparing for this project over the last number of years. I pointed out that through Wintario the government had committed itself to about $2 million to the arts centre, and once again we in the government are studying the suggestions of his worship, the mayor, respecting additional funding. He suggested in his telegram to me that a start should be made April 7, which as you know, is less than a week away. I pointed out to him that the negotiations will take several weeks to work out and he was, I believe, quite happy, with the hope that if we can work out an agreement an early fall start will be made on the building.

Mr. Cunningham: For a clarification of part of what the minister said: am I to understand then that until he and the ministry reach an agreement with the city on the convention centre none of the project will go ahead, including the provincial office tower?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, we must reach an agreement before we proceed; that is correct.

Mr. Makarchuk: On the matter of capital construction, as the minister is aware, there is unemployment in the province and in the country, and one of the methods to try to take care of the problem is to proceed or encourage capital construction projects. Saskatchewan is embarking on a major capital construction project that will probably create something like 35,000 jobs in the province. Relatively speaking, if we did something similar, Ontario would create about 100,000 jobs in capital construction. The minister has put out a book showing the various projects he has in the contract phase, on the drawing boards, in the planning phase, et cetera; I wonder if the minister could indicate if he is considering trying to expedite some of those projects at this time in order to help alleviate the unemployment problem? Is he personally of the opinion that perhaps we should expedite construction on these projects because of the unemployment problem? Has he made any representations to cabinet? Also, perhaps he could indicate whether cabinet is interested in listening to him.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The minister is looking at all the projects you mention as listed. I have spoken to my colleagues in cabinet. The Premier (Mr. Davis) himself has suggested that we look at anything that will cause employment and help the present situation. The answer is yes, we are looking at all projects.

Mr. Makarchuk: Can the minister at this time give us some indication as to which of the projects he has listed he intends to expedite? He hasn't listed the year 1978-79 and so on. We are not concerned about the projects in 1979 or 1980, but it would be interesting to know if he has moved some of the 1979 or 1980 projects into 1978 in order to take care of the unemployment problem.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The hon. member realizes this is my 11th week in office. I am sure he also realizes that during that 11 weeks the Sudbury building has got the nod and we are negotiating on the Hamilton building. To help him a little further, the Hamilton building will provide 1,600 man-year jobs. I estimate it will take four years, and that's 400 jobs a year in construction. I don't have the actual estimates on the Sudbury building, but that's two pretty major jobs to get underway in 10 weeks.

Mr. Makarchuk: I will assume of course that you will continue to look outside Sudbury and Hamilton; and that there are other projects that you will be concentrating on and be trying to bring to fruition a lot sooner.

The other item that is of concern under this vote is a matter of supply, acquisitions for construction, et cetera, the supplies particularly. Have you made it a policy within your department to buy Canadian or buy Ontario products? If you have, have you got any indications now as to whether there has been any change in terms of the percentage of spending on the purchase of Canadian products versus what was being spent a year or two ago? I notice that Ontario Hydro just put out a booklet to the members indicating what their spending was and which jurisdiction received the money, et cetera. Are you doing something of that nature in your ministry right now? I realize it is only 11 weeks since you have been in charge and that could be a problem.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is the policy of the department that I am minister of, and of this minister, that we shall give a preference to Canadians of 10 per cent.

Mr. Makarchuk: At this time, Mr. Minister, is there any noticeable change? In other words, is this preference working in terms of change in the purchasing now as compared to about a year ago? Do you have any figures or any indications as to whether there was an increase, on the percentage of your spending that is done on Canadian products versus the percentage spent on Canadian supplies, say a year ago? Do you have any figures at this time to indicate whether it is effective or working?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I can't give you a confirmed figure on that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Again, Mr. Minister, I feel that on the one hand you have your government saying that we are interested in encouraging the economy, we are interested in promoting private enterprise, we are interested in having our industry working; on the other hand, we find out that your approach to these matters is rather haphazard. You said that in certain contracts if there is a 10 per cent differential we'll give it to an Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not in certain contracts, in all contracts. In all contracts we give a preference of 10 per cent to Canadians. We are Canadian-first.

Mr. Makarchuk: Then we will find that in all contracts if there is a 10 per cent difference in price, you will prefer to give it to the Canadian? Have you looked at the possibility that perhaps this is not the only policy that is available to you in order to ensure that there is an opportunity to increase the spending of Canadian dollars in Canada?

It is not something we have to worry about. If you look at the American disincentive programs, their incentive programs, and everything else, they have been doing this and are doing it on a grand scale. I am not necessarily saying that's the best policy to follow in world trade, but in the matter of self-interest and self-defence I think it is necessary for us to embark on some of these types of programs. Have you looked at any programs that may perhaps increase Ontario spending in Ontario—or in Canada preferably?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The minister looks at every contract that is let, every project. If he has any doubts or thoughts that there should be something different considered, the minister intervenes himself.

Mr. Davidson: I notice your funding for this year has gone down some $34 million, I believe, approximately. That, to my mind, would indicate that in all probability there was a capital construction project that had been planned but will not now be completed. Could you tell us if that is the case, and if so, which capital projects that were on the books for this year will not be completed?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the hon. member, yes, there has been a reduction of $34 million, but I would suggest that this has not reduced our overall capital projects. As you know, we went to a lease-back agreement whereby we let the job to an outsider and at the end of a term of years we own it. I note the number of projects we have in the planning stages and I believe we are up to the original intentions, even though we are spending $34 million less this year.

Mr. Davidson: Has anything that was planned to go on board this year been curtailed as a result of the cutbacks?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would have to respond this way: There has been no cutback of any planned projects since I became minister. That's only 10 weeks, I realize, but—

Mr. Warner: The dirty deed was done earlier.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —but I do say to the hon. member that the Sudbury building has been put on stream, and I hope the Hamilton one. So the two of them together is the $35 million.

[4:00]

Mr. Makarchuk: In other words, you wouldn't let the Treasurer intimidate you, would you?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I have great respect for the Treasurer.

Mr. Warner: Providing we get a courthouse in Scarborough.

Mr. Samis: Does he have great respect for you? Look what happened to Margaret.

Mr. Cunningham: While we're on the subject of capital construction, I'd like to ask the minister some questions about the Bronte athletic complex. Possibly you could correct me on this, but I gather this has been either scrapped or has just been put off for a long time. Am I correct in my assumption there?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The Bronte project has been delayed till the ministry has an opportunity to review the needs.

Mr. Cunningham: If I could, I'd like to make a couple of suggestions to the minister. One is that hopefully through the sad experience associated with this particular project, you might develop some better standards with regard to the establishment and study of the needs before you start these projects. This particular project, as you may recall, was talked about immediately prior to the 1971 election. Thereafter they started talking about it at the 1975 election. The minister was backtracking in the 1977 election because I think he realized the tremendous costs associated with the project. Now we find out it's been scrapped.

I'd like to know from you now the extent of the costs associated with the plans, the extent of the costs associated with the delay and just what are your plans to compensate people to whom you had already made a commitment in terms of architectural support and to people who were going to supply tile for the pool and all sorts of things like that. It really is frustrating to see you people track out some great, grandiose plans to bail out a political minister in 1971 and then have the temerity to come on almost eight years later and say that this particular project is not going to take place.

I, for one, accepted in 1971 the idea for this provincial facility. I thought it was a great idea. I thought it was at least an indication to me, an individual who has been interested in amateur sports, that the province was now going to make a very significant commitment, albeit in a Conservative riding, to amateur sport. I looked at it quite objectively in that regard.

I must say my objectivity waned year by year to the point that now that you've cancelled it, I'd like to know exactly how much this fiasco has cost the Ontario taxpayers. I'm talking now about the architect's plans, the commitments that you've made, consultants' reports and the whole shot. Would you not agree that once you've spent all that money that it's not prudent to go ahead with the project?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would have to differ with my hon. friend. This money has not been wasted. This project has gone forward this far. We would not know the cost and we would not know the proposal, if we had not hired an architect and brought in a plan. I don't know of anyone who has not been paid for the work he has done on the project. If the hon. member knows of anyone, he should bring it to the attention of the minister.

The project is delayed, it's being studied. There is no one who has said it's not going to go. I have not said so; I don't know of anyone else that has said so. It is being studied; it's delayed.

Mr. Cunningham: Are you going to build it or are you not?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I think I answered that. It's being studied.

Mr. Cunningham: If I could ask yet another question then, what are the costs? I want to know exactly how much you've spent on this so far, on acquisition of land, legal fees, the architect's work and the consultant's work. I'd like to know that before this particular ministry's budget is passed here in this House.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will get that. I don't have those figures all here. We'll supply them later in the week.

Mr. Charlton: I'd like to go back for a moment, if I could to the Hamilton project. You laid out for us the negotiations that are going on and the proposals that are going back and forth. Some of the details are a bit scanty, but you mentioned you hoped you could come to some kind of an agreement with the city of Hamilton. In the negotiations, as they go on, is this $5.1 million to be a hard figure on the part of the ministry, or is that negotiable as well? Has the minister thought about it? Is he willing to move beyond that $5.1 million to see this project come on stream this year?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I suggested in a letter to his worship two weeks ago tomorrow, to which I referred, that we were ready to put up $5.1 million. His worship did respond immediately with a telegram, accepting the offer and suggesting we should get on as of April 7. If the hon. member will remember, a few minutes ago I suggested that his worship came back and gave me another proposal. He did not turn down the proposal of us paying $5.1 million and the city paying the balance. He asked me to reconsider our position. Firstly, he reminded me that for the office tower that will be going on top of the convention centre the additional cost of steel is about $1.5 million. He went on to say his estimate for the cost of the building is $16.2 million and suggested that we should assume half that, I am taking that back to my cabinet colleagues.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister a few questions concerning the provincial public building that is going to be opened formally within the next two or three weeks.

I am wondering why the whole proposition was downgraded. This has been under discussion in the community since prior to 1959, and when the plans were originally proposed for the project it was going to be substantially higher. If I am not mistaken, it was going to be an 11-storey building to accommodate the many offices in the Windsor and environs area. Now it is ending up by being a six-floor government office building. Why was it downgraded?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, my only response to that question would be that I am not aware that it has been down-sized. It is my understanding that we built for the need, and that is the size of the building.

Mr. B. Newman: I can understand the minister not being aware of it because, after all, he has been in this particular portfolio for only a short period of time. But I would have assumed that members of his staff would have known about the original plans for the building and that practically all of the provincial government offices were going to be centred, concentrated and located right in that building. The location, by the way, is a very fine one, in my estimation. But it was going to contain most or maybe even all of the provincial government offices. Why, all of a sudden—and this was within the last two or three years—were the 11 floors whittled down to what we have there today? And it is a very nice building.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the staff that I have with me today are not aware that the size was reduced. They again confirm that the building was built for the needs of the area.

Mr. B. Newman: When the minister says "for the needs of the area," we have the OHIP building, now that the OHIP offices have moved out of there and are being concentrated in the London area. What is the minister's proposal for that building? The government is going to be renting that facility for other purposes, and apparently we are going to be putting some offices of the OPP and other branches of the Ontario government in that building, whereas the building that has just been completed is all filled up. So there must have been a need for a greater amount of space than actually was constructed. Could I have an answer on that from one of the ministry officials, through the minister?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The hon. member will understand that my officials can't speak within the Legislative Assembly, but they inform me that it is going to be used for other government offices. I don't think the hon. member would want surplus space in Windsor any more than I do, and the OPP and other government agencies will be in the OHIP building. We are going to keep it for a few years for government needs.

Mr. B. Newman: I would think the ministry will be keeping it longer than for a few years because there are enough government offices in the community, in my estimation, to use up completely the space that is in the old OHIP building.

Somehow it strikes me that there was some kind of faulty planning there, Mr. Minister, or some type of intentional downgrading of the size of the facility in the community. When we lose so many government offices and find that we don't get treated in the fashion in which we think we should be treated—and maybe it is the fashion in which we should be treated—people get very sceptical. And it doesn't speak well of government because they immediately say, "Well, don't listen to government, you can't trust them. They will promise you anything at one time and then they will renege on their promises."

I know you can't answer, Mr. Minister, and maybe your officials can't answer, but if you wouldn't mind would you try at some time or other getting the answers to that. Perhaps you can tell me personally, rather than telling me on the floor of the House, if you don't wish to do so.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing I want to hide about this. We built the building to serve the government offices in the area. The OHIP building is going to be used. It's a choice site—I think you would agree both of them are choice sites. I don't think there was any misplanning or anything. It has worked out that we are using both buildings.

Mr. B. Newman: You said there was no misplanning. Then I can assume that the government's intention to close the OHIP offices was a long-planned affair? Otherwise, why would you not have continued with the 11 floors on your provincial government building, the new building, unless you had plans to close up the OHIP offices in Windsor, knowing that instead of making the one building substantially bigger in size you could use the OHIP building?

I don't think for one minute we should have vacant space. I think we should build according to the needs in the community and I think it turned out that way, but I don't think you intended it to be that way. I think it was by some strange quirk, because of what did happen over the last couple of years, that you have the surplus space in the OHIP building.

I don't think for one minute you should not have kept the OHIP offices there; I think you were wrong in moving them out. I think they served a real need. And remember, Mr. Minister, the first prepaid health services scheme in North America was in the city of Windsor and I think that deserves some type of recognition—you should have considered the historical importance of a prepaid medical plan.

Naturally you may say you are going to be wasting funds by maintaining that office and duplicating facilities in the London area. You could have just as easily transferred London to Windsor instead of Windsor to London, because after all I am told that everything goes by telephone. Does it matter where the office is if communication is going by telephone or Telex or some other electronic means? It could be located up in James Bay and you could still process various problems by electronic methods.

We in the community were disappointed when the government closed the OHIP office. I would say now that the plan to close the OHIP office was a long-range plan and that the provincial public building was downgraded because you had intentions of eliminating the OHIP office years ago. I hate to say this, Mr. Minister, because I know you as a very good friend and I don't think you would have acted in that fashion were you the one responsible for Government Services several years ago. You would have built it to the size that was needed for the community and you would have kept the OHIP offices in there.

I have another thing to raise, Mr. Chairman, but I will raise it under another vote rather than under this vote.

Mr. Deans: I won't be very long, but I want to go back to the Hamilton thing again so that I fully understand exactly what's happened.

Am I to understand that you are going to proceed on the basis of the $5.1 million, but that you have made a recommendation—and I want you to listen to me—that you have made a recommendation to Management Board and to cabinet to assume on behalf of the province 50 per cent of the anticipated cost up to half of $16.2 million? Is that correct?

[4:15]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No. The mayor of Hamilton and the deputy mayor presented a plan to me requesting that we assume one-half. I have put a proposal to cabinet, which I hope it will be dealing with over the next three or four weeks, and I have included in that the suggestion of the mayor of Hamilton. I have not necessarily made that my proposal.

Mr. Deans: When you say then that you have not necessarily made it your proposal, what you're telling me in fact is you haven't made it your proposal. You have proposed something somewhat different from the proposal put forward to you by the mayor and the deputy mayor on behalf of the citizens of Hamilton. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, I have made a proposal that would include the building of the building, but I don't believe I will divulge the financial breakdown at this time. I'll be very happy to do so once cabinet has dealt with it, but not at this time. As I suggested, I did include the proposal of the mayor, but I'll leave what my own thoughts were until cabinet makes the decision.

Mr. Deans: Without trying to extract from you anything that you wouldn't want to tell me—which I couldn't do anyway, I know that—I just want to have some sort of an inkling as to what we're talking about. We have $5.1 million which is firm, but that's a figure that was arrived at some years ago, based on construction costs of the day. Construction costs have risen. The mayor of Hamilton, quite rightly, says that the $5.1 million, which may well have been approximately 50 per cent of the original cost, now is about one-third of the actual anticipated cost. I think that's a reasonable way to put it.

What you're telling me is that the $5.1 million is firm. You have made a recommendation to your cabinet colleagues for something other than the $5.1 million. You're not going to tell me whether or not it's $8.1 million; but that doesn't matter, I don't care whether you tell me that or not. You have also put forward the position of the city of Hamilton that it is entitled to 50 per cent. Am I correct in my recollection that the $5.1 million that was originally proposed to be spent was about half of the anticipated cost at the time it was first put forward?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If I might answer the hon. member this way: In 1971 the government committed itself to $3 million for the Hamilton project.

Mr. Cunningham: Was that before or after the election?

Mr. Deans: It was just prior to the election.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In 1975, it committed $4.5 million.

Mr. Warner: It's called an election gimmick.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In 1977 the government committed $5.1 million.

Mr. Martel: That sounds like pork-barrelling.

Mr. Cunningham: You're not planning more elections, are you?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's my understanding, though the mayor would argue—

Mr. Cunningham: Five more elections and we'll be right up to the top.

Mr. Warner: They have no principles left over there.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —that these figures did represent half—

Mr. Deans: About half.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —it's my understanding from my staff that they never did represent quite half. The mayor would put forth the argument that it did. He did put forth that argument to me.

Mr. Deans: Would it then be reasonable to assume that if tomorrow we were to vote no-confidence in the government, we could anticipate an added amount would be offered to the city of Hamilton on the eve of the 1978 election? Would that be a fair assumption?

Mr. Warner: Right; if they have an election, they give out money.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, Mr. Chairman, I would not accept that as feasible at all. Things like that don't happen.

Mr. Warner: Cheap tricks.

Mr. Deans: I want to go back with you, because you missed one part of it. In 1967, in the Scott Park High School, John Robarts stood and offered $2.5 million. That was the first one. That was just before the election. In 1971, you upped it. In 1975, you upped it again; and in 1977 you upped it again. The only thing that was consistent throughout that period of time, with the possible exception of the fact that the dollar amount being offered in each of those years was approximately 50 per cent of the total costs, was that in each of those years we had an election.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: And we lost seats.

Mr. Martel: And they lost seats.

Mr. Deans: If you would come up with $12 million you might win a seat. We could maybe guarantee you Eric Cunningham's seat; or maybe we could do something for you with Stuart Smith's seat if you would make it $12 million.

Mr. Cunningham: We were thinking of Hamilton Centre.

Mr. Deans: You can see the degree of co-operation you will get from me in this regard and you can understand how eager I am to help you.

If you would just raise it to an amount that would save the taxpayers of Hamilton this onerous burden they are going to have to carry as a result of the Treasurer having reduced the amounts of the grants currently available to offset municipal taxes, if you would increase the amount on this building, then I am sure the people of Hamilton would look very favourably upon that. If you could get Maurice Carter to come out of retirement, and if you could get him to run against Stuart Smith, we would all go down and canvass for him and the end result would be Utopia. How about that? That's better than the mayor's proposal.

Mr. Cunningham: Stuart Smith will win again.

Mr. Martel: I have a number of points I want to raise, Mr. Chairman. Would you like to call the quorum now or should I wait?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I recognize the member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: I'll give them to the minister in order and I will take them one at a time.

I want to talk about Burwash and some expenditure there; I want to talk about the land registry office in Sudbury; I want to talk about the courthouse in Sudbury; I want to talk about the provincial building that you promised in Sudbury; and then I want to talk about the Legislative Assembly if it is under this vote as well.

Mr. Chairman: Can I ask the member for Sudbury East to only deal with matters of construction under this vote.

Mr. Martel: It's all construction, Mr. Chairman; all are construction, all are on the planning board and all have been there for quite some time. The Burwash project goes back to 1974. The province closed it down after the estimates of the Ministry of Correctional Services were completed. This was about three days later so you couldn't talk about it. I visited it a few times—I had difficulty staying away from the place.

We spent $4 million remodelling it only to shut it down. Then a previous minister, the Hon. Margaret Scrivener, about a year ago announced—by the way they had a big celebration over at Government Services when they moved her out of the portfolio, they threw a party over there.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: That's not nice.

Mr. Martel: But it's true though.

Anyway, the minister announced she was going to sell Burwash. Do you recall that? We came to meet the Premier, and Mr. Thatcher was there, and the Premier said, "No, we won't put it up for tender." You got, in fact, one offer; a $1 million offer for the whole thing. Ultimately, by hanging onto it, we sold Camp Bison to the federal government, for over $4 million I guess. This left the whole of Burwash still intact, to be used hopefully in a multi-use scheme.

I understand that went to Dillon recently for a land use study for the ultimate function of that facility. It has now sat idle for the better part of four years and has cost the province, I suspect, over $1 million in that time just having security people there and keeping the place heated.

You wiped out the fourth-largest employer in the Sudbury basin overnight on that move by the way; and you have a facility there that has cost us $1 million, at least, to look after in the past four years; and we have now, I think, reached the drawing board stage of some type of multi-use concept, which I have been advocating now for four years, from almost the day it closed. We have a situation now where you could take those facilities and offer services to the Sudbury basin via the government of Ontario which don't now exist.

I can give you a whole series of illustrations if you want. You've got the single quarters, which is comparable to any motel in the province and which, in fact, would be a great place to train civil servants in northern Ontario rather than bring them down to Kempenfelt Bay at Barrie. That's been in the wind for a long time.

That building sits and deteriorates. I don't think it's been lived in for more than six or eight months. It's an absolutely beautiful building. If we put a kitchen in it we could then, in fact, offer food and train the civil servants in northern Ontario.

The government of Ontario is presently going to build a facility near Toronto for the mentally retarded. I've been trying to get this government to take 15 of the homes in Burwash and make them into group homes so that we could bring the young people from Smiths Falls back to Burwash and then back into the community of Sudbury itself. In fact, we would do what we haven't been able to do in two years, and that's to successfully get a group home for the mentally retarded in Sudbury. In fact, you've got some 60 kids sitting on the fourth floor of the Sudbury Nursing Home. I would hope that the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) would support those ideas and kick this government along so that we could utilize those facilities.

I understand the Ministry of Agriculture and Food want partial use and so does the Ministry of Natural Resources. In fact, it might make a good headquarters if you were to move the whole Ministry of Natural Resources to—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Sault Ste. Marie?

Mr. Martel: No, not Sault Ste. Marie. What would you offer them there, John? You could offer them access to the American border, but besides that?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Compared to what?

Mr. Martel: Compared to the facility that we've already got built and which is empty. It wouldn't cost you any money.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Oh, I see; the community is bargaining for representation.

Mr. Martel: They've got that in the Sudbury basin; you'll notice how intelligently those people vote.

It's on the drawing board. I want to ask the minister, how much longer he intends to keep Burwash on the drawing board? How long before he adapts that facility and brings it into some type of use, particularly in view of, (a) the unemployment problem in the Sudbury basin as a result of the massive layoffs by Inco; (b) because he, in fact, wiped out the fourth-largest employer; (c) because he has got a facility that's costing from $350,000 to $500,000 a year to look after and which sits there vacant; and (d) because there are so many services which aren't available to the people—and not only in the Sudbury basin, as my friend from Manitoulin Island would agree I'm sure.

If you build a road through Manitoulin across to Killarney then you would have easy access to a variety of government services which could well be offered at Burwash and which don't exist in northern Ontario. He agrees with me. I know he does, because he and I have had some discussion on the utilization of Burwash and the road into Killarney park over to the island. We've had a number of people who have taken shots, particularly at my friend; but we've indicated that we have supported his move to try to get a road built for people to travel from Killarney to Espanola to school, which is much shorter than driving them all the way to Sudbury.

You could combine all of those things. The facilities are there. All it really takes—and I say this to a minister with a little bit of clout in the cabinet—is a minister who has a little clout, who can use his influence to put that facility to use, to provide the services which are lacking now, which would create employment; and the cost wouldn't be all that great because the facilities are there.

I speak of a gym that has, I guess, four basketball courts in it. I speak of new single-male quarters, which could easily be adapted for female and male; it's so well laid out there's no problem at all. It cost $300,000 or $400,000 and it's deteriorating. You've got the 85 or 90 homes which have all been repaired, with new windows and aluminum siding. In fact, the day the government was closing it, the contractor was in there re-modelling the insides of the homes. To let that lie there, when there are so many services and so much unemployment in the basin, is really a disgrace!

I would ask this minister if he's got—and it has happened every time we have spoken to a Minister of Government Services; each year there has been a new minister, and there has been no continuity. I don't know if it's a hot seat, but I want to tell the minister that every time we hope there will be some continuity, we can extract an answer from a minister; and a year later, when we come back and ask, "Aha, now what have you done?"—they play musical chairs. We can't even get continuity in the ministry long enough from one year to the next to get a follow-up answer. Maybe this minister can tell me about Burwash.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure most hon. members are aware that Burwash is located on Highway 69, approximately 25 miles—not kilometres; miles—south of the riding represented by the hon. member.

Mr. Martel: It's right in my riding.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Oh, it's right in the hon. member's riding—not south of his riding? It includes some 35,000 acres—

Mr. Worton: Now we know.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: How in the world do we get any voters there if there are 35,000 acres for that one institution and there's no one there?

Mr. Martel: All the civil servants you put in those facilities.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Of the 35,000 acres, there is 32,000 of rough outer terrain, 2,700 acres of choice agricultural land, and 300 acres in two camps, the main camp and Spruce camp. The camps are serviced with water, sewage disposal, roads and electrical power by Ontario Hydro.

The Ministry of Government Services was given the responsibility for this property on January 15, 1975. It includes 54 single-family dwellings, eight semi-detached dwellings, nine four-unit apartment dwellings. Those totals add up to 106, up 20 from what the hon. member suggested.

Mr. Martel: Yes, I said 85.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Martel: You tore down some. I wasn't sure how many.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Well, there are 106 now.

Mr. Martel: That makes it a bigger disgrace.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Bigger and better, we say. There are 34 rooms in the single staff quarters, four self-contained and 30 with shared washrooms.

I could go on at some length and make further statements respecting this particular piece of property. We consider it's a valuable asset that could be used for many things. I would simply respond by saying that when a previous Minister of Government Services (Mrs. Scrivener) suggested that we should sell this property, there was great pressure from the other side of the House to appoint somebody to find out what we could do with it.

The government has done this. It has appointed M. M. Dillon, who, we hope, will come up with some company or form of organization that will create employment in that area. I do hope to have the report by the year's end, but I won't make that a promise; that's our hope. I would suggest that M. M. Dillon was appointed because the hon. members suggested that to the former minister. I do have that recollection.

Mr. Martel: I am glad the government is looking at it, but it seems a long time. Dillon has had it some time.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not too long, I think.

Mr. Martel: A substantial time; the Premier indicated to me some time ago that it was six to nine months. I hope it's not until the year's end. I would hope that the Premier, come Friday—you know, he's speaking at a clambake in Sudbury on Friday called "2001," at which he's going to talk about jobs for the Sudbury basin. I suggested to the Premier he bring his satchel with a bundle of—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Are you going?

Mr. Martel: Yes, I am. I am on one of the panels and I hope to contribute in some way. But I would hope the Premier might make an announcement that we are moving ahead and going to open up 15 of the homes as group homes for the children. We could bring back from Smiths Falls or any other institution—in fact, to me, the biggest black eye in the city of Sudbury right now is about 65 or 70 kids who are on the fourth floor of the Sudbury Nursing Home. They have no yard in which to play and they are kept like sheep. The staff looks after them well, but I want to tell you the yard those 65 or 70 kids have is as big as the size of this chamber. It is an absolute disgrace.

What is more frustrating than anything, I say to the minister, was a promise by his colleague that the only children who ever would get into that facility would be those who were bedridden. And I want to tell you, none of them are, none of them. They all get around fairly well. They should be taken out of that cruddy place and put in a place like Burwash, where you could make 15 group homes and bring them into the Jarrett Centre to work and get their education.

To put 65 or 70 kids in a place like that is an absolute disgrace. I can think of no other term for it. I have opposed it bitterly. I had the words of the previous Minister of Community and Social Services that the children in the home would all be bedridden, and not one is bedridden. It is a disgrace to put kids in that type of environment.

I hope the minister will be in that position long enough to table the report in the very near future. He says the end of the year; I hope it doesn't take quite that long. Hopefully, the Premier might have something to say about it when he is in Sudbury on Friday or Saturday, on whichever day he speaks.

I want to turn to the land registry office. This is capital, Mr. Chairman, so I don't want you to get too excited. I see you moving in to look at it.

Mr. Chairman: I was just leaning forward.

Mr. Martel: It is a capital expenditure, because the province is in the process of building a new building in Sudbury, a provincial building, which I know is going to house the land registry office. I would like to combine my remarks with respect to two facilities that are vitally necessary, not two and a half years down the road, but now.

I understand from correspondence with this minister, with the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman), who is responsible for the land registry office, and the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry), as it now exists in Sudbury the land registry office is so small they virtually stand on each other's shoulders to do work. It is that bad. The province is well aware of it and was prepared to, in fact, move into rented premises on March 31 or April 1, but the costs were going to be something like $80,000 to renovate, plus the lease. So that, together with the announcement of the new provincial building with which the province was moving ahead as a result of the layoffs in Sudbury, we are not going to move the land registry office.

I really don't know how the Hon. Mr. Crossman keeps people in that land registry office. It too is something to behold. I mean, you have to sidle along just to get from one set of files to another, it's so small.

Mr. G. Taylor: Only lawyers would work in there, Elie.

Mr. Martel: You'll have to speak from your own place, George, and you don't happen to be in yours.

You have to sidle along to get to the various files and so on, it's that bad. But what even compounds it, I was in Sudbury just the other day and I was at the President Hotel—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Is that unusual?

Mr. Martel: Well, it's not unusual. I was at the President Hotel, and that's not unusual, but I was there to appear before the Workmen's Compensation Board which was holding hearings in the hotel. I went to leave through the basement and there was the coroner holding a coroner's inquest in the basement of the hotel. If you wanted the family court, you went over to yet another building. You don't have to be surprised to see that lawyers in Sudbury can't get into the library in the courthouse to get at the books because they are holding court in the legal library. In fact, there are no facilities for the 13 different courtrooms that one would need, or some combination of them. It is actually impossible for the judges to operate.

If we had moved the land registry office out of its present location you could make at least two more courtroom facilities in the land registry office, which is adjacent to the present courthouse. In fact, they could become permanent courtrooms, I suspect, if you don't have the money to build a new courthouse—which has long been promised, although I understand you just finished a new one in Peel. Everything goes to Peel. I I can never understand it. I'm told there's been an addition within the last year or year and a half in Peel. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Very smart people live in Peel.

Mr. Martel: Yes, right. I heard my friend, the Health critic, telling me today they are one of the two areas that are getting new hospital beds this year, an addition for Peel; is that by coincidence?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: He was wrong on the two areas, there was only one.

Mr. Martel: All right, the one I'm making reference to, Peel, also got the new courtroom facility, as I understand. Is there something magical about Peel? Does it go based on need—

Mr. Johnson: Yes.

Mr. Martel: —or is there something else there that's the drawing card?

Mr. Warner: That's how you get stuff.

Mr. G. Taylor: Barrie got one.

Mr. Martel: Did Barrie get one? How many years was it in the making?

Mr. G. Taylor: For years.

Mr. Martel: Hundreds? Well, there you go.

Mr. Warner: The county courthouse goes into the riding of the member for Scarborough East (Mrs. Birch).

Mr. Martel: You can't tell me that the administration of justice can be administered properly in Sudbury when all of the WCB hearings are in one building, in a hotel; the coroner's inquests are held in a hotel and family court is held in an old building adjacent to the Holiday Inn.

You have to use the library facilities, so the lawyers have to get out. The librarian sits in there while court is being heard. How do the lawyers check references? What do they do? They carry a whole case full of books with them because they can't go into the library on a given day to get some of the books they need as they look up certain things in the law. They can't do it because court's going on. What in the hell kind of way is that to run a ship anyway? All we get is the nonsense we're going to save $80,000 because of the renovation.

Have you ever thought of what it would mean in terms of the employees who work in the land registry office to have an adequate facility to do their work in? I've visited it and it is a disgrace; but going to the courthouse is even worse. It is really something to have to hold a coroner's inquest in the basement of a local den of iniquity. That's where we hold it.

Surely to God we're not that poverty stricken that we couldn't proceed with that, even if it meant $80,000 until the provincial building is completed in 1980 or 1981. Surely it's time that the people in the land registry office worked in proper facilities so that the people of Sudbury could go in and have this work done for them on their behalf in a proper environment.

Certainly in terms of the administration of justice there is absolutely no reason why court should be held in the library or in the local hotel. Surely it's time you parted with the $80,000, renovated the building as you were going to do and used it for the next couple or three years. You're talking about two or three years, providing everything goes well, and if it doesn't then we're a little longer down the road. Then you could use the land registry office for a couple of courtrooms so that you might not have to build a new court facility in the meantime.

You just can't have it all ways and simply say we've got a provincial building that's coming sometime in the 1980s, and expect that both in terms of justice being meted out properly and in terms of people getting services adequately from the land registry office that that hodgepodge can prevail. The only thing that's holding it up, I suspect, is the $80,000 or $90,000 that you might spend, in view of the fact that in 1980 you're going to have a facility which you could utilize.

It's just an untenable situation. I'd ask the minister is there no way he can proceed with the agreement and then make the two moves that I recommend? Move over to the old Loblaw building and put the land registry office there for the next two-and-a-half years, and then renovate the land registry office to make two more courtrooms available so that we can have the administration of justice meted out properly in the Sudbury area.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I can agree half-way with the hon. member. Once we get the new building that we propose to start construction on later this year, we will put the registry office in that building. Then, as to your suggestion to renovate the registry office for additional court facilities; yes, we'll do that, but the actual new registry office is some years away.

Mr. Martel: I realize it is an $80,000 expenditure to lease and renovate the facility you were prepared to go into—at least the Hon. Larry Grossman tells me you were prepared to go to—up until two months ago. You had entered into an agreement and then got out of the agreement. If it was the $80,000 that was the deterrent, don't you think it would be advisable to proceed to put the land registry office in a proper facility for the next two or two-and-a-half years, and utilize the land registry office for a proper purpose?

Every time you hold a Workmen's Compensation Board hearing in the President Hotel surely that is costing some ministry a vast amount of money in the form of rental; if you have got to have a coroner's inquest that runs a week downstairs in the Mayfair Room at the President Hotel, that has got to cost a fair bundle. If you have to rent accommodation at the President every month for the Workmen's Compensation Board, because there isn't even a small room that you can hold it in at the courthouse, don't you think these things over a period of two-and-a-half to three years are going to cost the province a considerable amount of money? Is there not a trade-off whereby we could bring those facilities into line, make proper accommodation and save money in one place, while it might cost you somewhere else, but provide the proper facilities.

I am not sure if you have ever looked at the number of facilities that various government agencies have to rent daily or weekly in the Sudbury area. It seems to me that rather than have to hear court or a coroner's inquest at the President, you might be better off taking the money and entering into the agreement for the facility you were going to renovate and rent for two or two-and-a-half years. Calculate how much money you would save the other way; you might find it is not really that much. And it would be a lot more convenient for the people who are working to have adequate facilities in which court could be heard.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The hon. member puts up a very good argument. The ministry has decided the route it will take. Naturally, we are always open for reconsideration, but I do believe that to this point you have not presented sufficient argument to change our minds. So I would ask you to continue presenting your arguments as to why we should make this move.

Mr. Worton: Try another argument.

Mr. Martel: Might I ask if in fact the ministry has asked the various agencies of government what facilities they rent on an ad hoc basis, to determine what we are laying out in terms of rental facilities for the Workmen's Compensation Board when it comes to Sudbury every month, or what it is costing to rent for inquests? Have you looked at that sort of calculation to determine if—I am not saying save money because if you are going to rent somewhere else it is going to cost money; I wouldn't be saying you are going to save money—for what it costs somewhere else, you could not obtain better facilities and a more permanent facility by going another route? Have you, at least, looked at it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The only comment I could make is that the Workmen's Compensation Board is one body that does supply its own room. Personally, I don't know the amount of money they pay in rent. But I think we looked at the overall situation when we agreed on the size of our new proposed building.

Mr. Martel: The new proposed building, yes.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't know the amount of money the Workmen's Compensation Board pays. You would have to take that up with the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) during her estimates.

Mr. Martel: I suspect it also includes people like the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr) who would be involved. If you are going to hold a coroner's inquest you have to rent accommodation, I would suppose that one could ask Government Services to find out what it is costing monthly. While I recognize the Workmen's Compensation Board has its own funds, ultimately it is the same people that pay in this province. All I'm looking for is to see if it is worthwhile to transfer the land registry office and maybe make sure of the facilities that are there, and the former land registry office. Then you might not have to rent all this accommodation on an ad hoc basis and you would have something in place, for the next couple of years, at roughly the same cost. I am not suggesting you are going to save money but it might provide better and more suitable facilities, and I would ask the minister if he would consider that.

The provincial building, has that gone to tender yet?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, the provincial building has been tendered; tenders are in. The contract has not been announced yet.

Mr. Martel: I might ask for some guidance, then, on the last item, the Legislative Assembly. Is that to be discussed under this vote or some other vote? I want to talk about the recommendations of the select committee and the suggestion about a $20 million expenditure that was calculated roughly as the cost of bringing this building up to standard. I am not sure where you want to discuss it. I would ask the Chairman where the minister is prepared to discuss this particular item.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If you are speaking of this building here it should really come under legislative services, vote 804, item 8.

Mr. Worton: Last October, Mr. Minister, the former Minister of Government Services (Mr. McCague) indicated that tenders would be advertised and they were—and I think they were closed December 19—for new provincial court facilities. When do you expect to make an announcement as to whether this is going to be built or whether you are going to lease or what? Could you bring me up to date?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Where?

Mr. Worton: In Guelph. I've spoken to you about this before.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I know you've spoken to me before on one or two occasions. I now believe that the police building is crowded and we do need additional courtroom space in Guelph. In a moment we hope to have the answer here for you.

Mr. Chairman, at this moment we haven't got the answers the hon. member wanted. Could we go on with another area and once we get the answer—

Mr. Warner: I just wanted to know at what stage the Scarborough courthouse was. I understand it was shelved earlier. Are there any plans as to when we can see that come back? The one that is not in my riding?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, we do have plans for a courthouse there and I would suggest that you take this up with the Attorney General during his estimates. The Attorney General sets the priorities. We have the plans and everything ready to proceed once we receive the word from the Attorney General that it is on the priority list.

Mr. Warner: You are not given the priority of that until somewhere along the line?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It has no priority to be built at the moment. Its priority will be arrived at through the Attorney General.

Mr. Warner: But it was earlier on the priority list—is that not so?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not during my term.

Mr. Warner: No, I realize that, but I'm speaking of last year.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It was never on the A list—never on the list for active construction. It was never on the priority list.

Mr. Warner: If I could—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, let me clarify that. We do have a plan of a building, the architect's drawings, but it never was on the list to go to tender.

Mr. Warner: It really raises a point of curiosity with me then. What is the purpose of making an announcement of some significance to the local area, if it is in fact not on a priority list and it's just an idea? I assume that you've got lots of ideas over there, not all of them good, but you've got lots of ideas. What's the point of announcing it if it's not on a priority list?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to the hon. member's question, we do have other projects in a similar stage. It's not imagination or anything. We do get the architect's drawings and once the department concerned puts it on a priority then we are ready to proceed. So we, Government Services, can be ready to proceed almost immediately.

I think the Sudbury building is an excellent example. We were ready to proceed with it once the crisis came about, once the need for the employment and everything within the area became known—I know we could say that employment is needed all over Ontario, but the Attorney General has not at this moment placed it on the class A list.

Mr. Warner: I can appreciate that, Mr. Chairman, and the minister certainly is not responsible for the Attorney General. I will raise the matter with him at the appropriate time. But it just seems to be inappropriate to make a first-class announcement about the project unless in fact it has been placed on the priority list and you know that it's going to be dealt with within a particular period of time.

The courthouse is needed. It's got a good location that's been selected. It is, I would think, an overall part of that civic centre area complex. But quite frankly it just seems to me that it's nothing more than a political game to make an announcement when you don't have any priority and you have no immediate plans for actually constructing the thing.

So with some sense of futility, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and raise the matter with the Attorney General when his estimates come along.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the hon. member, we have in our program three ratings. Priority A is under construction, going—either advertised or in this current year; we have B which is under active consideration by our department, waiting for the final word from the ministry concerned; and then we have C projects that we visualize for some time in the future. The Scarborough one is in the B category.

Mr. Young: I see North York is in the C category.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York Centre.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'd just like to respond to the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton).

We have obtained tenders for the leased space. We have re-erected a building and we are drawing up plans for alternative sites. So the tenders that were advertised were not acceptable. We are drawing plans to make proposed changes to an existing building; once we get those plans ready, we will be ready to make some announcement.

[5:00]

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask questions of the minister with respect to the courthouse complex in the Newmarket area. I would like to know whether that complex is going ahead as originally planned and scheduled or whether the original plans have been scaled down. I would like to know whether the entire concept will be built and whether the project is meeting with the plans and the timetable. As the minister is no doubt aware, there is a tremendous need for courthouse space in that area.

Perhaps in the same answer the minister could direct his mind to whether the provincial courthouse in Richmond Hill is to be used for criminal trials or whether it will be used for highway traffic matters, with the transfer of all criminal matters to Newmarket. I understand the ministry is currently seeking space for highway traffic trials in that area, and I wonder what provisions the minister is making to accommodate the police forces and the trials under the Highway Traffic Act and other provincial statutes.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to question number one, the original plans are proceeding. There is no reduction in size. The estimated time of completion is March 1980.

Regarding the hon. member's next question, about Richmond Hill, we don't have answers on that. We will have to get some priorities from the Attorney General and the Solicitor General.

Mr. Stong: I understand the ministry is currently seeking accommodation for provincial statute matters such as Liquor Control Act and Highway Traffic Act trials, which are already being heard in Richmond Hill provincial court.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Our ministry is not aware of those requests at this time. I would suggest that the hon. member follow it up under the estimates of the Solicitor General and the—did he say the liquor laws as well?

Mr. Stong: As I understand it, the provincial statute offences that are being heard in Richmond Hill now are to be moved out, or there is some movement afoot to have them moved out. I am just wondering what the timetable is and what accommodations the ministry is making for those matters.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We here are not aware of that request. If we find out we are, we will bring back the information later. But at the moment we are not aware of any request by that ministry.

Mr. Stong: I wonder if I could also make an inquiry with respect to the Willowdale courthouse, where there has been a move from the present courthouse on Yonge Street to new or other facilities. I am wondering if there is a policy in the ministry with respect to finding this type of accommodation. In view of declining enrolment and available classrooms, and the movement of students from one school to another to try to satisfy the presence of those classrooms, I wonder whether there is a policy to look at schools that may no longer be in use, or parts thereof, for purposes of courtrooms and housing trials—provincial traffic offences, for example. Is there a policy in the ministry to consider that type of consideration when looking for accommodations for courthouse facilities?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. Every time a vacant school room is brought to our attention, it is looked at and studied; and I am sure the hon. member knows that a family court in Etobicoke has been placed in a school.

Mr. Stong: I understand there were schools or classrooms available in the Willowdale area, and a factory has been taken over. I am just wondering how much emphasis has been put on the use of those vacant classrooms.

Mr. Chairman: I'd like to say to the hon. member that he's probably straying a bit from capital construction.

Mr. Stong: I'm concerned about the use of already existing facilities, which would save costs.

Mr. Chairman: That might come under accommodation alterations, or some other vote.

Mr. Stong: I'm sorry, I don't want to get off the track on this but I thought we were talking about capital expenditures and perhaps my other observation on the use of facilities that are already in existence to cut down on the acquisition of new property is in order. For instance, is there any consideration by the ministry to make better use of existing facilities?

We all know that judges can only put up with between four and five hours of listening to evidence per day. That day is stretched from 10 a.m. until 4:30 in the afternoon, with perhaps a two-hour split at noon with very adequate breaks during the day. Would the minister not consider that perhaps better use can be made of our facilities, to cut down on the acquisition of further courtroom area and also to cut down on the long waiting list, by perhaps considering that the courts begin at 8 o'clock in the morning and go through until 12 noon, which is a four-hour stint, and then that another shift begins at 1 and proceeds to 5 o'clock?

It seems to me that the public would be better accommodated and better served in terms of having earlier trials—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I think the member is straying considerably from capital construction.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I'm just trying to get some kind of a commitment from the ministry about saving capital cost by better use of existing facilities. It seems to me that if I'm in the wrong vote I would be glad to withhold my observations until a different time. It seems to me that these things should be considered, but I'm in the hands of the Chairman as to when this should be discussed.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member puts up a very good argument. I would suggest the appropriate time would be under the Attorney General's estimates.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton Mountain.

Oh, sorry, did you have another question? The member for York Centre.

Mr. Stong: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It concerns Pine Ridge Hospital in Aurora, which is just on the boundary of my riding. I'm given to understand that that hospital, which is a converted school, houses the mildly mentally retarded. It is located on something between 98 and 110 acres of land, as I understand it, which is under the control of the Ministry of Government Services.

I'm wondering if any consideration has been made to utilize that 108 or 92.8 acres—I'm not sure just what the figure is; I've had both figures given to me—to better purposes. It is vacant land under the control of your ministry. With the emphasis in the ministry on the assimilation of the mildly mentally retarded into our communities by virtue of work projects and even living accommodation, which I think is a very commendable policy, would it not be worthwhile exploring the use of that land—to put it in the hands of a developer, for instance, to build homes that would be considered low-cost homes, and which would also have a designation for the mildly mentally retarded, to have them incorporated into our society and into our communities and fulfil a useful life, rather than be housed in that jail that is called Pine Ridge?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, this is under another ministry. For our ministry to take such action under present policy a ministry must declare the land surplus before we become involved, and at that time we circulate it to all other ministries to see if they are interested in it before we take any action. At this moment, the ministry concerned has not declared it as surplus.

Mr. Stong: Does your ministry not have control over the acreage and is your ministry not responsible for the upkeep and the buildings at Pine Ridge? I don't understand the policy as between these two ministries. They seem to be operating in a vacuum and there is no communication between the two. Perhaps that's one of the faults of the government.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Our ministry takes care of the general maintenance. The management of the building, of the space within it and of the use of the grounds, is up to the occupying ministry.

Mr. Stong: Does your ministry have any say in the use of that vacant land since you are responsible for the upkeep of it? Do you have no say at all in the use of the vacant land and the usage to which it could be put?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, we do not have any involvement until it's declared a surplus by the occupying ministry.

Mr. Charlton: I would like to raise with the minister some questions under contract tendering. My colleague from Cambridge mentioned in his opening remarks the Embassy Management situation that I raised last year in the estimates. I don't want to go through that whole story of Embassy again, but there were a number of things in terms of policy that emanate from that kind of a case, things which I raised last fall as questions of policy. I am just wondering if in some of these areas the ministry has done anything to try to deal with some of these situations.

One of the first questions I raised was the question of the advisability, the necessity and the cost involved of awarding contracts under the tendering process on small projects of less than $50,000 to companies that essentially were management firms, that did none of the construction work themselves and subcontracted all of the work, in many cases to one single subcontractor. I am just wondering if the ministry has had a look at this situation at all since I raised it last fall.

The second thing I would like to raise is the whole question of how the ministry deals with complaints from subcontractors when they don't consider they are being fairly dealt with by the contractor or the management firm, or whatever, that is operating under a contract from this ministry.

I am just wondering if the minister and the ministry have considered any actions or any procedures by which they can control this kind of problem.

I will give you one example. There was a case with the federal government with the same company we talked about last fall, Embassy, where the federal ministry responsible for the contract in question got the same kinds of complaints that have come into this ministry about that kind of a situation of the subcontractors not being paid. The federal government's approach to the problem was to demand of the management firm, Embassy, a statement on whom they had subcontracted to, how much work they had done and how much Embassy felt they owed those subcontractors.

The subcontractors did not totally agree with the statement which Embassy submitted to the federal government, but the federal government took the position of paying Embassy for the amount of work done to date, based on their statement, in cheques that were made out to Embassy and the subcontractor, instead of solely to Embassy, in order to ensure that at least some moneys were going to the subcontractors. I am just wondering again if the ministry has had a look at that problem and at some method of dealing with those kinds of complaints now and in the future.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the hon. member's question, for tenders of under $100,000 we don't require that they put up the necessary bond. We believe it is important to let the small contractor in on our work; we think it is very important to give anyone an opportunity.

Regarding Embassy or similar companies being as you suggest, really management companies which sublet the work, there are many companies going this route. Many tenders come in where we know full well that it will be done that way. We don't get involved with the subcontractor, except that there is a lien placed against the building. As the contract progresses, we pay the contractor the amounts of the award less 15 per cent. Before the final payments are made, we get an itemized statement from the contractor as to whom he is paying and what he is paid, and the assurance that everybody is paid up—except the time limit has gone by. So we do follow a plan similar to that of the federal government—maybe it is slightly different, but overall I would suggest it has the same end result.

Mr. Charlton: That is essentially the same procedure the ministry had when I raised the questions last year, and it is the same procedure which allowed a situation where subcontractors were having to go to court. I don't like to make a judgement on those court cases as to who was right and who was wrong, but it left open the situation where all of these outstanding legal actions were necessary in order for these subcontractors to get what they felt was their due. That says to me that your procedure wasn't ensuring that people were being paid for their work, and that the ministry should be having a look at some way of safeguarding against that kind of mishap.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I think the hon. member put out his own suggestions and his own answer. He suggests that he would not want to make that decision, that he would not want to take the place of the court and decide who should be paid and who shouldn't. Does he suggest that the ministry should?

Mr. Charlton: I am not suggesting that the ministry should decide. What I am suggesting is that the ministry may consider setting up some procedures which would discourage this kind of practice in the first place. I am not suggesting that once it has happened you as a ministry should be deciding who is right and who is wrong. What you should be doing is setting up a procedure in your payments structure, and so on, that will discourage this kind of practice happening in the first place, so that you don't have to make the decision.

The suggestion I made, for example, was where the federal government demanded a statement, earlier on in the game than the last and final payment, of whom the contractor owed what, and issued the cheques jointly in the names of the contractor and the subcontractor. That's not necessarily the only procedure that could be used, but I am suggesting that some procedure be followed to discourage this kind of thing from going on. Perhaps even just the threat of no more government contracts would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If the general contractor and the subcontractor make an arrangement of this nature, we would not kick about it. If that would be the wish of the general contractor and the sub-contractor to come in with a signed agreement that the cheques be issued jointly to the two, we would not object. We would accept that arrangement. Otherwise, it's a free-enterprise world we're living in and they're free to negotiate between the general and the subcontractor. I would hope that it always remained that way.

Mr. B. Newman: I want to raise the issue of the county courthouse in the city of Windsor, which is having an addition put onto it, directly across from the provincial public building. Is it your plan, Mr. Minister, to complete it this year or in November 1979? In case you don't complete it for another year and a half, will you have the work proceed in such a fashion so that at least parts of that building could be put to use as quickly as possible after they are completed?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Present plans are for partial use, June 1978; completion, August 1978.

Mr. B. Newman: What you're saying, Mr. Minister, is that as you complete part of that building, it is going to be occupied, and then you'll continue construction up until the time the whole project is completed and then the whole building is put to use?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: What I am saying is that we expect the building to be far enough advanced by June this year, with completion in August. But I also understand that the citizens are living better in the Windsor area, and that we don't need these buildings.

Mr. Haggerty: Well, it's because of the representation they have at Queen's Park.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's the representation they have here which is causing that.

Mr. B. Newman: I was going to ask if you are planning to purchase the building at the corner, behind the provincial public building. It was formerly a grocery store, and purchasing that would finish off the block very nicely so that the parking could be at the rear end of the provincial public building in the Windsor Avenue area all parking could be taken out and a mini-park might be established there.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would have to report—that is not part of our plan at this moment.

Mr. B. Newman: Would you look into it for some future date then, because I think you need the parking in the area? You would also be accommodating the city because, you know, the city market is almost directly across from the provincial public building and on certain days of the week there just isn't enough parking in the area. I know you may say it's not your responsibility, but I think you also have a responsibility when you finish the building to make it really presentable to the public.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Maybe I have not got the total picture. Are you talking of the little fruit market or the building?

Mr. B. Newman: It's the Berkowitz property that is directly to the east of the provincial public building. It had been used as the supermarket for years and years and now it's been abandoned for approximately a year—maybe a year and a half. It's up for sale.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: My original answer then was correct.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Minister, in your booklet, Design and Construction Program, 1978-79, you have listed an adult training centre for the city of Cambridge. Am I correct in assuming that that adult training centre was the one that was on the board to be built on the remaining structures that exist at Grandview School and that it is no longer to be put into effect?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There was no previous location established for it. It is a brand new location.

Mr. Davidson: So you are telling me, in effect, that when the Ministry of Correctional Services deemed that Churchill House would become a jail and remaining facilities would become an adult training centre, we are now talking about a different location under the C listing in the 1978-79 program?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Davidson: So there are still plans on the drawing board to build an adult training centre in Cambridge?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Davidson: If I may, I would like to follow up a little more on the Grandview School. I believe I understood the minister correctly to say, when he was answering one of my questions, that the Grandview property is in the hands of the Ministry of Government Services, including the buildings.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is not in the hands of the Ministry of Government Services. It is still with the Ministry of Correctional Services.

Mr. Davidson: The entire property?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Davidson: Thank you.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I want to direct my questions to the minister concerning recent meetings involving the minister, the mayor of Fort Erie, Mayor Girve Fretz, and a couple of the private developers in the area, where they were discussing the new tourist centre at Fort Erie. In the ministry's Design and Construction Program, 1978-79, I do not see that listed as a project that is going to get off the ground this year; and yet, as I recall our meetings with the minister, I understood that proposals would be made this year.

Mr. Ruston: It has been approved for design.

Mr. Haggerty: I see now on page 33 that it has been approved for design; it's the Fort Erie travel information centre, and it relates to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. Could the minister tell me when he expects construction to start on this particular building?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We have taken the necessary steps to acquire the property from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. I would have to tell the hon. member that this is one of the C list projects. As regards the actual date of starting, the C list means the starting date has not been established.

Mr. Haggerty: Perhaps I could bring to the minister's attention the fact that this proposal for a tourist information centre has been on the government drawing boards for some 15 years—maybe longer than that. Fort Erie is perhaps the largest port of entry in Canada, and at present the tourist information centre is accommodated in a small trailer at the entrance of the Peace Bridge. I am a little bit shocked that we won't have the foundation being laid at least this year and perhaps construction later, in the fall. I had high hopes of sending an invitation to the minister to come down for the sod-turning this spring.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I certainly look forward to the opportunity of being there for the sod-turning. But before we can make such arrangements the hon. member will remember that I requested of that delegation, including the mayor of that great area, that they give us any proposals as to what we should incorporate in that particular project. To the best of my knowledge, we don't have any proposals in addition to what was proposed on the day of the meeting. So we are really waiting for proposals from the town.

Mr. Haggerty: What the minister is telling me is that we are not just going to be building the tourist centre, which would cover perhaps one floor; that the proposals, put forward by the developers, might add three or four floors to this building, perhaps to house some federal government agencies around the Peace Bridge. It could involve part of the Customs and Immigration offices, or a number of private businessmen in the area who might want to locate in this particular building. I don't know. The letter I have here from them says the minister has suggested this to them; but that was when a private developer wanted to purchase the land and to have a lease with the Ministry of Industry and Tourism to rent perhaps one section of the building.

[5:30]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: My recollection of that meeting—and I don't have my letter here—was that the mayor was to present us with proposals of those he felt would be good tenants for this particular spot. It might well be the government of Canada as tenants. I believe you proposed that maybe we should consider the OPP. We are ready for those proposals and we really haven't received them as yet. Until we either receive the proposals or get a clearance from them that they don't have proposals, we are sitting in limbo.

Mr. Haggerty: The only thing I can report on that is that I have a copy of a letter sent to the Hon. John Rhodes from Mr. Herbert C. Clayton. He says the proposed complex is to house the tourist information centre in the town of Fort Erie. They were not too happy with the recent government changes through the different ministries suggesting they are no longer interested in the private sector building the centre there. They have a letter from the Ministry of Industry and Tourism that is addressed to Mayor Girve Fretz. I perhaps should read it into the record. It says: "In a letter to the former mayor of Fort Erie, Mr. John M. Teal, of October 21, 1976, I proposed that our ministry would rent"—and the Minister of Industry and Tourism is writing this letter—"space in the building to be erected by your municipality or agent. This was under the provision that the architecture, site location, layout of this accommodation, parking facilities and rental costs were agreeable to us.

"From the plans, the leasing proposals you have provided to our ministry, we are pleased to advise you of our approval to proceed with the details of the leasing agreement. We will look forward to seeing the completion of this new modern building in the town of Fort Erie.

"Sincerely, Claude Bennett."

Apparently, it is the policy of the Ministry of Government Services to have the private sector build it, lease the land from the ministry and turn around and give it back to the province or to the ministry, say, in 25 years. I don't think this is acceptable to the developers in the area. They have an agreement with the minister, a letter from him stating he approves of the tourist centre, and would like to proceed on that.

In fact, they have written a further letter to the present Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) and I will tell you they are not too happy with the government's handling of this. They have included a bill for $9,000. The letter goes on to refer to the preparation of three design concepts of the office complex, the Ministry of Industry and Tourism approval, consultation with the town of Fort Erie and council and staff, negotiations with the Ministry of Industry and Tourism personnel, both from the St. Catharines and the Toronto office. There are about six or seven different items there and the total disbursement is $9,000. They feel that they have been led down the garden pathway by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Ruston: Oh, terrible.

Mr. Haggerty: They were going to proceed with the construction of this building in Fort Erie. I ask the minister to reconsider his position on this particular site and let the private sector buy the land or let the municipality buy the land and lease it to the private sector and let them construct the building.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I believe we had quite a bit of dialogue respecting this proposal and I pointed quite clearly at that time that it was the responsibility of our ministry to provide any office space for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. I suggested that if a wrongdoing had taken place that a second wrongdoing would not correct the situation. Maybe some of those present disagree, but outwardly they agreed that two wrongdoings don't correct one.

Under proposals our department carries out—which I suggested to those people that morning they may be interested in—we, the province of Ontario, have the land, we appoint an architect and come in with the necessary drawings to accommodate the area that needs covering. At that time we advertise for tenders for a builder who will come in and build the building and will lease it back to us for a 25-year period, on more or less an option whereby at the end of 25 years we're the sole owner of the building. I am convinced that this is good for the people of Ontario and it does give the private citizens of that area the opportunity to build on it.

If this group of individuals who were putting the proposals to Industry and Tourism can come together with other tenants who are ready to perform a public service, we will certainly look at it. But the commitments that were proposed in the letters you have referred to are not acceptable to our ministry.

Mr. Haggerty: But can you assure me and perhaps the town of Fort Erie that if this proposal between the private sector and your ministry isn't agreeable you will get on with the construction of the tourist centre in Fort Erie? Can we expect some real initiative this year?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: As I suggested earlier, before I take another step as to their proposals of what should be included in this building, I am waiting for a response from the town and from those individuals.

Mr. Haggerty: In other words, you have no funds allocated for this type of construction in Fort Erie? That's what you're telling me. Not this year, is that it? Do you have, say, $200,000 set in a nice little nest egg?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't remember making any statements either way. I was waiting until we got the proposal to see what might be needed.

Item 2 agreed to.

On item 3, leasing:

Mr. Davidson: Under the leasing program, I notice that there is a reduction of probably $2 million. One of the answers I was given when I raised the reduction in capital construction was that they've gone partially to the leasing program and partially—I understood it this way—and partially to the lease-purchase program. Are we in fact not leasing as much property as we have been in the past in direct leasing?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The reduction in this amount is recoveries from other ministries.

Mr. Davidson: Can the minister or his staff advise us as to how much waste space, I guess it would be, we are leasing? In other words, how much empty space do we have available in properties leased by the government?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In response to the hon. member, the present figure is that 2.97 per cent of office space is vacant. We don't think this is too bad a figure. If we can stay in that area, with movements from one office to the other, and with changes—new buildings, new offices, coming on stream—we think that the figure of under three per cent is very close.

Mr. Davidson: Do we have that in square feet, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In Metropolitan Toronto, there is 99,949 square feet. Elsewhere in the province of Ontario, 78,642 square feet.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, would this vote here also come under leasing? And then buying back ownership of it at a later date, is that included in that estimate?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That would come under item 6.

Item 3 agreed to.

On item 4, real property acquisition:

Mr. Ruston: In real property acquisition, could the minister tell me whether his people are involved in the acquisition of property at any stage when Ontario Hydro is acquiring any property?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The only property we have purchased for Ontario Hydro is in the parkway belt around Metro. Elsewhere, no.

Mr. Ruston: The old Hydro building is still in the ownership of Ontario Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Minister, correct me if I am wrong but would your ministry acquire property on behalf of other ministries—for example, the Ministry of Housing?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. Reed: I would like to ask the minister some questions about the acquisition procedures that are used in the parkway belt. I think it is one of the great misnomers of the 1970s, calling that utility easement a parkway belt. But some of the basic method that is being used to acquire property is open to some question, I think.

I would put the scenario to you like this, Mr. Minister: The parkway belt is, in effect, not legislation at this time but rather a second statement of draft plans. The first draft plan was originally conceived, I believe, in 1973, and the second one—with certain territorial exemptions—came out last year. The value base that is being used by your ministry for establishing the price to be paid for expropriated land goes back to the time of the original statement of the parkway belt—that is back to 1973.

What this means, is that farmers and landowners in that area of the parkway belt who are presently faced with acquisition by expropriation are being offered prices and evaluations based on a bureaucratic creation which has been imposed upon them. They are there by an accident of geography. The property to the east of them is selling as raw land for much greater amounts. To the west of them much of the property was acquired by the government for future urban development. It was said to be one of the great wise moves of the early 70s—or I suppose it seemed like a good idea at the time.

I would ask you seriously, is it not fundamentally wrong in principle that a bureaucrat imposes a particular set of impositions on the expectations to be derived from a piece of property and then to have the government come in and expropriate that property on the basis of that bureaucratic imposition?

We designate property all the time. We do it in towns with bylaws; we classify certain areas as being commercial and certain areas as residential; and it does affect the value of that property. However, I would submit to you, Mr. Minister, that in those cases the people making those bylaws are elected people. They're elected by the people in the town and their decision is either accepted or rejected by those electors when they go to the polls.

This is not the case with the parkway belt; nor is it, if you like, with the Niagara Escarpment draft plan; nor is it with the conservation authorities' draft plan. But in those cases, up until now I know of no expropriation taking place in those areas. There are some acquisitions or purchases, but I really don't know if they have proceeded to the point of expropriation or whether they yet deem themselves to have the power to expropriate.

In this case we have a draft plan and that's all it is. And it's subject to change without notice, as you know. It could change in another six months. As a matter of fact, it is presented as a draft plan for purposes of input and making changes as the months go by before the final entity comes forth. Yet your ministry now evaluates that property on the basis of that non-existent imposition in terms of legislation.

I submit to you that the parkway belt is simply a bureaucrat's dream and that's as far as it goes. How, in the name of conscience—and you may be able to tell me in a few minutes that you're legally right in doing it—can you tell me that government is morally right in using this kind of method for acquiring property?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The price paid for property in the parkway belt is the higher of either the price of this property June 3, 1973, or the current market value, according to other property selling in the area.

Mr. Reid: Just as a point of clarification, are you saying that it is the higher of the 1973 value compared to other properties in the parkway belt, or other property? Because if you're saying other property—if you go one concession, one road width east of the ninth line, south of Derry Road—you will find that raw land is trading, in the Erin Mills development, for many times more than the price being offered by your ministry for a railway access to a hydro switching station or connecting station, or whatever it happens to be.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I said within the designated or the defined area.

Mr. Reid: That being the case, then the proposition I put to this House is that if not illegal, there is in principle something fundamentally wrong in making this kind of designation and saying: "Okay, Charlie, here's your property. We're going to declare it to be so and so," and then come in a couple of years later and say: Now, we're going to expropriate." It's wrong.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The only property we've expropriated was for Ontario Hydro and not for the parkway belt as such.

Mr. Reid: I understand that, and I understand that the expropriation was made for Ontario Hydro, but it was made, Mr. Minister, with the parkway belt's imposition as part of the evaluation process.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That's correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Minister, under real property acquisition, there are in Cambridge, north of Highway 401, some 3,000 to 4,000 acres that were purchased for development by the Ontario Housing Corporation. Could I ask you if that land has been in fact declared surplus and has been turned back to the Ministry of Government Services, or is it still in the hands of Ontario Housing?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The Ministry of Government Services is responsible for managing it and I am sure the hon. member knows that it's in production as farm land.

Mr. Davidson: You are still in control of it? My understanding is that the Ontario Housing people are not going to use it for the purpose for which it was purchased. Say the people farming that land wanted to repurchase the property; who would they deal through? Would they deal through your ministry or would they have to deal through the Ministry of Housing?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We are the ministry which has the land, but to my knowledge, Housing has never said that it is surplus to them. We are managing the land and it may have been said out there that Housing don't want it, but officially I am not aware of that.

Mr. Davidson: If I may I would advise you that when the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes) was Minister of Housing he made it quite emphatic in the K-W Record that the Housing people no longer required that land—the ministry would not be using it. I just wanted to find out for the people living in that area that if there was an opportunity to buy back, would they do it through your ministry or the Ministry of Housing?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: They would do it through our ministry, but I just don't want to leave the impression that it is for sale because as far as we are concerned the Ministry of Housing does want it.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to the parkway belt situation that the member for Halton-Burlington brought up and that is with respect to the purchase and acquisition of property within that belt. Are you indicating to this House that those sales, particularly in the Langstaff area, were willing sales and that the people who sold had the opportunity to sell as if they were selling on the marketplace?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If there was an expropriation, it would be for Hydro. We have not expropriated as far as the parkway goes.

You know I don't live in the immediate area. Where is Langstaff? It would help me if I knew that.

Mr. Stong: Langstaff is in that part of the parkway belt in the town of Markham on the south side of Highway 7; it runs between Yonge Street and Bayview Avenue. There was a move by the Treasurer to have a hydro line put through that area. When the people objected and the hearing officer heard their objections, recommendations were made to remove the hydro line.

However, there have been sales of that property there that have not reflected the true market value—as if they had been sold on an open market with willing sale. I am wondering if your ministry, when these facts and figures can be substantiated, is prepared to make up the difference to those people who have already sold under a situation that was not a willing sale.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to give any such guarantee. The only statement I can give you is that any land that has been expropriated—I am just restating what I said—was expropriated because of Ontario Hydro. In that particular area there is a hydro line going through; it is being planned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Henderson, the committee rose and reported progress.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Henderson, the House adjourned at 5:55 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST MEMBER

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege.

On March 16, 1978, while this assembly was in session, Messrs. MacLean and Chercover, barristers and solicitors, 85 Richmond Street West, Toronto, caused to be served upon me, through my secretary, without my knowledge or permission, at my office, Room 121, North Wing, Main Parliament Buildings, a notice of action pursuant to the Libel and Slander Act.

The solicitors were apparently acting on the directions of the following persons and organizations who were shown in the notice as plaintiffs: Robert White, L. Seymour, Lorna J. Moses and Frances Piercey, on their own behalf; as officers and members of the International Union of United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America and Local 1620 thereof, and on behalf of all members of the International Union of the UAW in Canada and its Local 1620 in Ontario.

After receipt of such notice, I forthwith instructed my solicitor who, on my behalf, on March 20, 1978, replied to such notice. I am advised by my solicitor that in such notice he rendered his opinion to Messrs. MacLean and Chercover that the notice of intended action contravened section 38 of the Legislative Assembly Act.

In addition, on March 20, 1978, I received by mail at my assembly office from the registrar of the Ontario Labour Relations Board a notice of application for consent to institute prosecution by the UAW against myself and others. I instructed my solicitor in connection with such notice and he advises me that he has replied to such notice as required by the Labour Relations Act.

My solicitor informs me that he has advised the Labour Relations Board that the filing of such application in his opinion is probably a contravention of section 38 of the Legislative Assembly Act. My solicitor further informs me that the validity or otherwise of the commencement of those proceedings against me is not a matter for decision by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Notwithstanding the reply of my solicitor to the notice of intended action, the solicitors for the intended plaintiffs whom I have named, on March 30, 1978, directed an additional communication at my assembly office pursuant to the notice of action originally served upon me.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to defend these actions on the basis of the merits and the facts. As I have mentioned, I have instructed counsel so to do and such is being done. However, the continued direction of litigious material to me is, in my opinion, a molestation of my parliamentary function, rights, duties and privileges. I believe there is a clear breach of my privilege, and I would ask you, sir, to consider this matter and to take whatever action you deem appropriate and necessary in the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: I will consider the point of privilege raised by the hon. member and report to him at a later date.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

HARTT INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, just over eight months ago, the government established the royal commission on the northern environment with broad terms of reference concerning the economic, social and cultural future of northern Ontario, north of the 50th parallel. Since then, Commissioner Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt has travelled the vast areas of the north of the province and, largely through public meetings, the concerns and opinions of the people have been presented to the commission.

I am tabling today a copy of an interim report and covering letter from the commission and wish to add some general remarks in response.

First, I think it is fair to say that the report and the recommendations it contains serve to re-emphasize the vast distances, relatively small population and climatic conditions that contribute to and underscore the issues that face the people of the north. Evidence of the differing opinions among the population as to appropriate actions is also more than apparent.

If a single direction or purpose can be taken from this preliminary review, however, it is the call for continuing co-operative and consultative processes among all the parties involved, namely governments at all levels and the people, both native and non-native, of northern Ontario.

The government welcomes this general approach and I would only reaffirm here that it is a direction to which we are fully committed. The government views this report as a constructive outline for future consultation. It will be given detailed consideration by the appropriate ministers. I fully intend to talk at greater length with Mr. Justice Hartt to obtain from him more sharply defined terms of reference for the specific structures proposed, so that we may avoid unnecessary overlapping, duplication or misunderstanding.

As well, it is my intention to discuss with Mr. Justice Hartt his particular role in these future developments and I am delighted that he has indicated his dedication to continue to serve in the interest of assisting all of us in dealing with the many problems of the north.

In this vein also, I wish to inform the House that I have received from the Association of Treaty No. 9 Chiefs the concerns of their grand council with regard to the future role of the royal commission itself. And I would just interject here, Mr. Speaker, that the chief of Treaty No. 9, Mr. Andrew Rickard, is in your gallery. This and other responses will be referred to Mr. Justice Hartt for consideration and future discussions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may turn briefly to the specific recommendations of the commission's interim report arising from matters viewed by the commission as needing urgent attention at this time:

Perhaps the most significant proposal is for the establishment of a permanent tripartite committee, representative of the federal and Ontario governments at the ministerial level, and of the Indian people. The report states: "The committee would attempt to resolve, through negotiation, issues raised by its members, and in particular would address questions of devolution of authority to govern local affairs and access to resources for the Indian people. A small secretariat, acceptable to all parties, should be established to support the committee."

In addition, it is proposed that the problems related to the Whitedog and Grassy Narrows Indian communities be the first priority item to be addressed by the committee.

Mr. Martel: Further delay.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The government of Ontario endorses the idea of such a tripartite committee. This principle is already an initiative of the government, in that proposals for such a committee have been discussed both with the federal government and with the chiefs of Ontario. This formal structure is seen as a necessary base for future decision-making on various issues of mutual concern. It is also planned that operational support will be provided by a joint tripartite steering committee at the staff level.

We would also endorse the notion that the circumstances affecting the communities at Whitedog and Grassy Narrows should be a first item of business for such a committee, although we are cognizant of the fact that similar types of social problems affect other Indian communities as well. Further, there may be reason to question whether a time limit of 90 days is sufficient to deal with a matter of this complexity.

It is our intention, as I have noted, to pursue these recommendations further with Mr. Justice Hartt by seeking from him detailed proposals on the creation, structure and function of this committee. All our work to date will be made available to him.

A task force of northern residents as a liaison between government and the people is also recommended. As I have mentioned before, increased public participation has been one of the major objectives of the government in establishing the commission.

At the same time, I need hardly remind the House that it has been but a year since the government created a Ministry of Northern Affairs to meet the type of need described in this recommendation. In addition, and indeed more important, there are some 15 members of this Legislature, from all parties, who represent the interests of northern communities and their citizens.

We should, therefore, perhaps look at the various roles that already exist before committing ourselves to the notion of the task force recommended in the report.

The government supports the recommendation concerning a review by the commission of the West Patricia planning process and sees this as fully within the authority and sanction granted to the commission. I might add that the recommendation is in keeping with the approach suggested by the Ministry of Natural Resources to ensure necessary public participation in the West Patricia land-use plan as the focal point for overall government planning in the area. The involvement of the commission would be most beneficial.

As to the question of the Onakawana lignite development project, the government has long since stated that the procedure will be followed under the Environmental Assessment Act. Public consultations between the Ministry of Natural Resources and local residents have been proceeding for some time. In fact, prior to any decision to issue a mining lease to Onakawana Development Limited, a series of open sessions was held with local residents.

In the supporting text of the report, the suggestion is made that the commission play an "observing and counselling role" in these proceedings. The government feels that the proposal should put the commission in a position to make constructive recommendations on the adequacy of the environmental assessment process as it might be applied to various types of future potential development in the north. In addition, it will enable the commission to provide skills in resolving possible difficulties which may arise.

The commission's last recommendation proposes that no government licences for wild rice harvesting be issued to non-natives for a period of five years.

It should be noted that policy proposals for promoting a viable wild rice industry among the native people are included in the mandate of the proposed new tripartite committee. The government has encouraged the growth of this industry among the native people and it is important to ensure an opportunity for the natives to develop this industry on a competitive basis. The Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) will pursue this matter with Mr. Hartt to ensure in the development of this important resource a future course of action that is consistent with the objectives of involving the native peoples.

Finally, the focus on economic development in the north must not be overlooked. I would cite here the commissioner's explicit statement of the benefits to be derived from planned resource development and his recognition of the fact that: "A general moratorium on development, even for a two- or three-year period, could needlessly cause hardship, increase unemployment and delay benefits to people which can flow from well-planned ventures."

In summary then, the government feels that this interim report lays the ground for a thorough and systematic review over the next two years or so, which will, at the same time, enable and indeed ensure that legitimate development is not thwarted or frustrated in the process.

ORAL QUESTIONS

OMA-OHIP FEE SCHEDULES

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Health. In view of the minister's various statements that Anti-Inflation Board controls apply to the OHIP schedule of benefit payments to be made this calendar year to most doctors and other practitioners, may we take it that the government will limit any increase in its proposed schedule of benefit payments to what is permissible under the Anti-Inflation Board policy? If so, what does the minister understand the Anti-Inflation Board policy to be, both with respect to those doctors who receive only the schedule of benefit payments from OHIP and those doctors who bill on their own?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The AIB limits are on the physicians, which, therefore, dictate the amount by which the schedule will increase. I don't recall the figures off-hand and I wouldn't want to try to recall them from memory, lest I get them wrong. Let's put it this way: Our negotiations are very much constrained by the realities of the anti-inflation program for the balance of 1978.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, can the minister tell us what he understands the Anti-Inflation Board restraints to be, particularly with respect to the fee schedule as opposed to the $2,400 limit on individual doctors, and has he told the Ontario Medical Association that any increase in that schedule will have to conform with AIB policy this year?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is acknowledged by both sides in the negotiations that we are constrained by the anti-inflation program and the limits which are placed on individual practitioners.

[2:15]

Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister be prepared to explain—and I don't think this question has been asked of him up until now—why it is that when it comes to these negotiations he talks about being constrained by the anti-inflation program, but when it came to imposing premiums on the people of the province of Ontario he imposed an increase of 37½ per cent and completely disregarded that program which he had endorsed?

Mr. Warner: He uses the guidelines when he feels like it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the hon. member knows, in preparing the anti-inflation program, when it came to questions of price increases or fee increases it was written right into the program that, in fact, increases would be relative to cost increases, and as he very well knows the costs of providing health care have gone up by as much or more—in fact it is much more—in the last few years than the increases in the premium revenue.

Mr. S. Smith: That is not a fact.

Mr. Conway: In the preparation and tabling of his estimates for the year 1978-79, has the minister taken into consideration and allowed for the maximum increase permissible under AIB as he understands AIB to be?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Maybe this question would be more appropriate at estimates I suppose, but yes, we have calculated both the effect of the AIB on the increases in income as well as factoring in anticipated increases in utilization.

Mr. Cassidy: Given the fact that the incomes of individual premium payers have been held down by the AIB over the course of the past year and in future, can the minister comment on the possibility that significant numbers of Ontario residents will allow their OHIP coverage to actually lapse because of the very heavy premium increase in relation to their increase in incomes?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That has not been the experience in the past and I certainly don't anticipate it to be the experience at the present.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the minister have any evidence for that last reply, given the fact that the only material we have had put forward up until now, when reviewed by the Provincial Auditor, indicated that there were 12 million people in this province covered by OHIP and that, therefore, those statistics are quite meaningless?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the hon. member would read, if there is one, a Hansard of the public accounts committee, or at least talk to members who sit there, the problem which resulted in that anomaly is totally different from that which was the substance of his earlier question, but I am sure that when we get into the standing committee on social development some of the members of his party may want to pursue that and I will be sure that we have the officials available to give the specific figures at that time.

Mr. Martel: Our figures aren't reliable.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary—

Mr. Kerrio: You just had it.

Mr. S. Smith: He had it, as I recall. Mind you, he does us a lot of good with these supplementaries. You might want to give him a few more, Mr. Speaker.

USE OF SEWAGE SLUDGE

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. His predecessor in that office (Mr. Kerr) was able to answer almost a year ago, on April 22, 1977, regarding my question about the use of sewage sludge on agricultural land, I quote: "In the meantime, the guidelines are being applied in the province to those areas where there is sludge removal. The guidelines are being used now," and then, in response to my question, and I quote: "Is the minister saying all sewage sludge in Ontario now being applied to agricultural land falls within the guidelines of that report?" his answer is: "That is what we are implementing right now, yes." That is a direct quote.

Can the minister explain to me how his predecessor could have said those things in the House and yet a year later we still read that an internal report indicates that only 40 per cent of the sludge being utilized in Ontario meets the guidelines?

Mr. Warner: Inconsistency.

Hon. Mr. McCague: No, I really can't explain the hon. Leader of the Opposition's question.

Mr. S. Smith: I can appreciate the minister's answer, inasmuch as I had a little trouble understanding all the incorrect answers I had from that particular minister when he was in that position. I would ask the minister, by way of supplementary—and I look forward to his response afterwards—can the Minister of the Environment explain to me why it has taken over a year to implement a report which even a year ago had been in the hands of the ministry for some considerable time, when in point of fact a possible serious health hazard is involved in the usage of sludge with heavy metals, possibly even PCBs, on agricultural land which grows crops for human consumption? Why the delay?

Mr. McClellan: He can't cope.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I can't give an explanation to the hon. member. All I can tell him is that the matter is proceeding. We intend to have final drafts in about a week's time and to meet at that time with senior management in Agriculture and Food. I think we will be in a position to have them for him shortly.

Mr. Mancini: Who is in charge over there?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Welland-Thorold have a supplementary?

Mr. Swart: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of the Environment if it's not true that only 14 per cent of the sludge which has been applied on farm land has been safe for application? Secondly, is it not true also that the only regulations which they've had up to this time have been regulations relative to the handling of the sludge and the sites, and not with regard to the quality of the sludge whatsoever?

Hon. W. Newman: Oh, it's all fine quality.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It helps grow things down there.

Mr. Martel: A farm boy would know that, Bill. In other words, it's manure.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I don't have a figure for that here. I think probably what the member is missing is that we're also talking about treated sludge.

Mr. Kerrio: As a supplementary question to my leader's question of April 22, 1977, I asked the then Minister of the Environment if he was aware that in jurisdictions where sludge is used on agricultural land, mainly in the state of Wisconsin, there were significant signs of polychlorinated biphenyls in the milk from dairy herds grazing on that land. The answer at that time was: "I know that PCBs have been a part of the problem as far as sludge disposal is concerned and that's one of the reasons we're applying the guidelines."

I would ask the present minister, in view of the kind of experiments that have been carried out and the studies in other jurisdictions, when he will put to this Legislature the safeguard of the users of agricultural products in this province?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think I did say in answer to the opposition leader's question, "shortly."

Mr. Kerrio: The minister said that a year ago.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I didn't say that a year ago.

Mr. Conway: Don't be so loquacious.

Mr. Swart: May I ask the minister if it's true that the sludge which has been used may not only be injurious to health but it may permanently damage the land?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I believe that is a possibility and we're looking into that.

Mr. McClellan: Tell the Minister of Agriculture and Food that.

Hon. W. Newman: Why doesn't the hon. member ask me the question? It will make his moustache grow bigger.

HARTT INQUIRY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier in relation to his statement about the interim report of the Hartt commission. There are two or three inter-related questions. I want to express some concern on our part at the diffusion that may result from this report because of the splitting up of the responsibilities of the Hartt commission into two, three or even more separate areas.

Perhaps I could begin by asking the Premier this question: Can he explain why, in response to the only single, concrete recommendation for action now in this interim report—namely, that no new licences for wild rice harvesting be issued to non-natives over a period of five years—that the government has surrounded that recommendation with cotton wool and has not come out with a firm, clear answer that would enable Indians to develop a strong economic position in the wild rice industry?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the leader of the New Democratic Party doesn't treat, in a constructive way, the interim report of Mr. Justice Hartt. I should point out the report has, I think, resulted from discussions with the native people and I think it has their support. I'm disappointed that he himself doesn't sense the complexity of this and the validity of the recommendations.

Mr. McClellan: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, the member prefaced his question with an observation that he didn't like the report.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member doesn't know what it is all about.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it's quite proper for me to express my regret that the leader of the New Democratic Party doesn't have the wisdom to see the positive aspects of this report. I think that's quite appropriate.

Mr. McClellan: We've already had enough cotton wool.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the member wants to ask me a question I'll give an answer. If he wants to make a speech I feel provoked to reply.

Mr. Martel: You are prepared to make a speech too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The answer to the question about wild rice is very simple. This government has been committed and is committed to a policy to see that the native people are assisted in developing a viable wild rice industry in that part of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: Tell the Minister of Northern Affairs that. Are you listening, Leo?

Mr. Cassidy: If I can ask a general question, can the Premier say what role Mr. Justice Hartt will be asked to play in the future series of related inquiries which will go on? In particular, is the government prepared to ensure that there is one central focus for the issues that were originally grouped under the Hartt inquiry; that is, that Mr. Justice Hartt will continue to look at the overall questions about how northerners can be involved effectively in the development of government policy and the questions related to the native peoples which are now being split into three areas?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Justice Hartt has made his personal views known to me as to where he thinks his contribution would be the most appropriate. As I said in my statement, it is my intention to discuss this with Mr. Justice Hartt because, in order to avoid the possibility of duplication, I think there should be more definitive terms of reference for the two or three structures that are suggested in the report.

I think it is fair to say that Mr. Justice Hartt has made it known to me, and perhaps it is referred to in general terms in his letter, that he indicates that, if asked, he will pursue an involvement in this matter. I am very encouraged by that. It is my intention, after a discussion with him, to encourage him to accept a further responsibility. I think it would be wise for all members of the House to have this further definition as to the actual function of the structures that have been suggested, and that would be a more appropriate time to get into this sort of question and answer or even perhaps a period for some discussion here in the House.

Mr. S. Smith: This is supplementary to the aspect of the other leader's first question on wild rice: Could the Premier please clarify a word on page nine of his statement where he appears to have rejected the recommendation of Mr. Justice Hartt? Mr. Justice Hartt's recommendation has been to have no non-native licences issued in the wild rice matter for five years—

Mr. Foulds: That was the question that was asked.

Mr. Cassidy: Where were you a minute ago?

Mr. S. Smith:—and the Premier has said "it is important to ensure an opportunity to develop the industry on a competitive basis." Competitive with whom? Surely what the Premier means there is with non-native licensees.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not the intention. It is not non-native licensees. It is with wild rice from other sources.

Mr. S. Smith: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We don't have a monopoly on wild rice.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: I wonder if the Premier could give the House any information about the time he expects to have a definition for the House in terms of Mr. Hartt's role and in terms of definition of the structure that Mr. Hartt has set out.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Because of the priority the government has given this and because of the support in a general sense by most members in this House, I would hope to have this available within a couple of weeks. I don't want to be pinned down to an exact date but it will not be a prolonged period of time.

Mr. Foulds: Make it 10 days.

Mr. Cassidy: Final supplementary: I appreciate that the Premier will do this quickly rather than at length, but can he give some indication to the House now how the conflicts between the different bodies that are being established or proposed for the north will be resolved?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You don't even know where the north is. Tell me where it starts.

Mr. Cassidy: I have in mind that the tripartite group negotiating with the native peoples will have as an early priority the question of Onakawana, which will also be the subject of an environmental assessment. I have in mind that some of the findings of the West Patricia study, being carried out by the son of the commission, will also affect native peoples and the question of access by northerners to government decision-making. I have in mind the fact that the area of access by northerners to government decision-making is apparently being left completely, rather than being referred back to the main commission, by what the Premier said.

How will all that be co-ordinated and brought together? Can the Premier give us a statement?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have a feeling that some members of the hon. member's caucus would object if I gave a statement. I will try to reply to the observation and statement that the hon. member made.

Mr. Cassidy: Is that a reply?

Mr. Martel: Why don't you just give us a straight answer then?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It wasn't a straight question. I have come to the conclusion that the hon. member's leader has a lot on his mind. There are some days when we would debate how much he has on his mind; but obviously this afternoon he has a lot on his mind.

[2:30]

It is for the very reasons that the leader of the New Democratic Party has pointed out some of the areas of possible duplication that I said earlier that I would be discussing with Mr. Justice Hartt a clear definition. What we have in this report, really, is in some respects conceptual in terms of how he sees us operating, and I think it needs further definition. When I have that for the members of this House, with a proposal in terms of membership, et cetera, I shall be delighted to share it with the leader of the New Democratic Party and be quite prepared to discuss it at that time.

DECLINING ENROLMENT

Mr. Cassidy: A question for the Minister of Education: Can the minister tell us when he intends to release the interim report of the commission on declining enrolment, which was first expected at the end of February this year, then at the end of March, and which, as I understand it now, is either at the printers or in fact is somewhere on the minister's desk?

Hon. Mr. Wells: My friend is correct; it is at the printers. I inquired today and was told it would be two weeks before the printing is completed. As soon as it is finished being printed, he will have a copy as quickly as that.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the report will therefore be two months behind the original deadline, can the minister say what plans the government has to assist boards—especially low-assessment boards with scattered school populations, such as Timiskaming and other boards in northern Ontario—to overcome the financial pressures resulting from declining enrolment? We were in Timiskaming a week ago and found that that problem is particularly acute there because of the low assessment base and the very sharp decline in enrolment. Is the government prepared to come up with plans for this fall so that those boards do not have to wait a further year until action is taken?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Is that the royal "we" or the plural?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I believe there was no intention that there would be any particular plans introduced before the next fiscal year. The grant regulations for this year have been printed and have been distributed and presented. There has been no indication that there would be any changes. Anything that is done of a nature that would assist the Timiskaming board in a major way would be in the 1979 grant regulations, when we will have the full benefit of commissioner Jackson's report and any suggestions that he might make, plus any others. I would just suggest to my friend that if the Timiskaming board has any problems, we would be most happy to discuss them with it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the Timiskaming board or some of its people brought its problems to us, in view of the difficulties it has been having with the ministry—

Some hon. members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: —may I just ask the minister, surely the minister is aware that fixed costs do not decline at anywhere near the rate at which enrolment is dropping in some boards like Timiskaming, and that those boards have got particularly acute problems because their mill rate, their assessment base, is so low they cannot easily go back to the taxpayers for costs they cannot get fairly and squarely shared from Queen's Park?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, the minister is very much aware of all those things, as are, I am sure, the boards and the commission. I might point out to my friend that there are no particular recommendations to alleviate the problems that my friend is suggesting in the interim report of the committee on declining enrolment. The interim report is more a series of background papers and studies that will be useful as we work up to the final recommendations which will come in the summer.

POLICE BRUTALITY

Mr. Stong: I have a question for the Solicitor General. Would the Solicitor General advise the House at this time what conclusions his ministry has drawn and what course of action he intends to pursue as a result of the investigation into two separate and distinct incidents of alleged assaults by police officers? One involved the York Regional Police on January 15, 1978, wherein it is reported that a man arrested for impaired driving was handcuffed, placed in the back seat of a cruiser and then beaten, all in front of witnesses in his neighbourhood. The other involves members of the Durham Regional Police and the Metropolitan Toronto Police on July 21, 1976, wherein one Robert McCee is reported to have been beaten on the back with axe handles and had battery acid poured over his penis.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am not aware of the information the hon. member has given me regarding the incident he is talking about of last January. I am not aware of that, and of course I will look into it.

As far as the second incident is concerned, involving one Robert McGee, we are aware of the allegations by McGee. He wrote to the criminal compensation board last December regarding an incident that took place at the time of his arrest in July, 1976. This involves both the Durham force and the Metro force. We are waiting for a report. I have one report from the Durham force. I'm not satisfied with it, so I would assume that the commission will be looking into this.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary: Has the minister been assisted by the findings of the trial judge at McGee's trial wherein he disallowed a statement of the accused, based on the allegations and evidence pertaining to the activities of the police department? I understand, as well, with respect to the York Regional Police that representations were made to the ministry on that issue in January, over a month ago.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's right, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is referring to the voir dire. It is part of our investigation.

HARTT INQUIRY

Ms. Bryden: I have a further question to the Premier with regard to his statement on Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt's interim report. With regard to Mr. Hartt's recommendation about Onakawana Development Limited to the effect that the Minister of the Environment should discuss with the local communities and affected groups how they can participate more effectively in the environmental assessment for this project, would the government be prepared to provide public funding to these groups to enable them to participate on a more equal footing with the company in these hearings?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The recommendations in the report, as I mentioned in my statement, are being assessed by the ministry. I would point out to the hon. member that in terms of the presentations made to the interim report by Mr. Justice Hartt certain government funding was made available. It is not possible for me to give a commitment in advance of whatever structures are proposed or hearings held. I would just point out that we did, in terms of this interim report, provide funding to those groups who wished to make representation before Mr. Hartt's commission.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Does the Premier not think that a precedent has now been established and that if we don't want a David and Goliath situation in the hearings on the Onakawana project that we should continue this precedent and make funds available to the interested groups?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Actually, the precedent had been established prior to this, but I won't go back into history. I can only say that we are as anxious that there be a proper hearing, that there be proper public participation. It's always one of those matters that as a government we're prepared to look at, but we don't make commitments in advance, not until we are sure of just what is involved.

NOISE LEVELS

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would like to respond to a question posed by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) on March 7 regarding noise levels at A. G. Simpson Company Limited plant in Scarborough. At that time the hon. member alleged that the company had failed to provide casual employees with adequate hearing protection as required by section 111 of the regulations of the Industrial Safety Act, 1971.

I'm advised by the company that it instituted a hearing protection program on June 29, 1973, which consists of the following: 1. The identification of areas in which noise levels exceed 90 decibels; 2. The posting of signs indicating that protective equipment should be worn in high noise areas. 3. The provision of ear muffs and ear plugs; and 4. The audiometric testing of workers in high noise areas.

Turning to the hon. member's specific question, an official of the ministry's industrial health and safety branch visited that plant on March 9, 1978, and found that all employees, both full-time and casual, had in fact been provided with protective equipment and had been instructed in the proper fitting and use thereof. Despite the company's hearing protection program, the ministry official found at that time that only 50 per cent of the workers were actually wearing the hearing protection which had been provided. Therefore, the officer held a meeting with company management, representatives of the employees' association and the company nurse to discuss ways to increase the using of hearing protection. Following that meeting, management of the company agreed strictly to enforce the wearing of protective equipment.

An officer of the industrial health and safety branch will revisit the plant very soon to ensure that all workers, both full-time and casual, are wearing hearing protective equipment.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Did the inspector when checking on the plant identify the 50 per cent who were not wearing the equipment, that is, which ones were permanent employees and which were casual employees?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The numbers included both permanent employees and casual employees.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. O'Neil: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of the decision made by the Workmen's Compensation Board to advance to May 20 the date that all employer payments for the year 1978 are due, when payments in previous years may not have been due until July and August? Does she not feel that this decision, made without prior notice, places an unexpected cash flow burden on employers, particularly those assessed at higher rates and on smaller employers in general?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It was my understanding that in addition to advancing the date there had been a modification to the payment program in which it could be paid in instalments rather than all at once. If that is a mistake, I shall be very pleased to correct that statement in the House but that was my understanding.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: In spite of the considerable increase in rate schedules this year, was this decision made because the WCB is short of funds and needs additional cash flow at the present time?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No. It was my understanding that it was done in order to facilitate payments on an instalment basis, if you like, rather than asking for the entire payment at one specific date.

Mr. O'Neil: I have a further supplementary. Has there not been a review of the WCB under way for some considerable time with respect to both financing methods and benefit levels? Has the minister not had at least an interim report on financing, undertaken by the Wyatt Company, in her hand since November or December 1976, and did she not promise my colleague from Erie (Mr. Haggerty) during the recent estimates on the WCB that the entire report would be available to the members of this House by the end of March?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, yes, yes and yes. Unfortunately, I have at this time only a preliminary report of the final report. I anticipate that by April 15, hopefully, we shall have the entire report for perusal.

The interim report was a report of the financial position, the investment program and some other actuarial studies related to the Workmen's Compensation Board. The comprehensive report includes a number of other issues which were requested at one point by one of the members of the official opposition during our discussions of the Workmen's Compensation Board in committee. That study had been already directed by the ministry, but we were pleased to have the hon. member for Erie support the concept that we needed to look at the funding, the financial structure of the board and the relationship of the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Board to other income protection and income supplement programs within this country.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Since the Wyatt report was the excuse for failure to raise the rates, may I ask the minister now how much longer she is going to stall around, and when does she intend to raise the rates?

Hon. B. Stephenson: There has never been any excuse for rates or anything else.

Mr. Laughren: You are absolutely right.

Mr. Warner: Where is it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The Wyatt report is a study of factual information which we believe is necessary in order to make responsible decisions.

Mr. Warner: Jelly beans roll uphill faster than that.

Hon. B. Stephenson: As soon as that report is available to me and I have had a chance to peruse it, we shall be making recommendations to the House.

ROBARTS REPORT

Mr. Warner: My question is to the Treasurer. Since the Treasurer realizes that many months of advance planning are needed when basic changes are made to the municipal government structure of Metro Toronto, is he trying to avoid electoral reform, or is there some other reason for the undue delay in introducing legislation related to the Robarts report?

Mr. Conway: He is working on Chatham.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I expect to be bringing those matters before the House in the fullness of time.

Mr. Conway: He is too busy with Chatham.

They are getting regional government in Chatham.

Mr. Warner: In the fullness of time, what a gem! Is the Treasurer now informing this House that this year's municipal elections in Metro Toronto will be on the basis of a two-year term, the retention of the board of control and no direct election to Metro?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be very unwise for the member to come to those conclusions.

NATIVE STUDIES

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education. Does the requirement of HS1 and the Intermediate History Guideline 1977 that "contemporary, Canadian and world concerns" must be given, preclude a board from offering a native studies course for students of native ancestry?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think my friend is referring to a request from the London Board of Education which they have written us about and which we are looking into, and about which we are attempting to work out some agreeable solution with them that would allow them to offer this course. I am not sure we have worked out the answer yet on that.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Surely the minister is not suggesting that this possibility come to the board as an integrated part of a program rather than as a separate entity; that is, a separate native studies course.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No. All I'm suggesting is that the London board has put before us a proposition and asked for an answer. We will give it an answer and we will work out with it how this can be used.

Mrs. Campbell: In the fullness of time.

Hon. Mr. Wells: As a matter of fact, I believe I sent it a letter two or three weeks ago on that matter, of which I will be glad to send a copy to my friend.

Mr. Van Horne: Further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the suggestion was that they be integrated and I am suggesting to the minister that that isn't satisfactory to the board nor for that matter to the native citizens of our province of Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: Would you not agree?

Mr. Van Horne: Do you not agree?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will take that under advisement.

ENVIRONMENTAL REPORTS

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment about the Environment Ontario reports with regard to the Red Rock mill and the other studies that have been recently done and released. I wonder if the minister could indicate why during the course of the testing—and if the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) would oblige; can the Minister of the Environment hear all right?—why insufficient samples were taken during the course of the testing last summer with regard to suspended particulate matter, with regard to the dust. Secondly, could the minister indicate whether recommendation 2-1 that two monitoring stations be put into place for continuous monitoring of hydrogen sulphide and total suspended particulate matter would be established at the Village Inn and at the Bell telephone company switching locations?

Mr. Speaker: Will hon. members please keep their conversations down, please?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer the first part of the question as to why more samples were not taken, but I will get that answer for the member. As far as the monitors are concerned, we have recommended them and I understand that they will be in place.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister give us an indication at this time when the report on Marathon, Terrace Bay and Thunder Bay would be available? There are three more reports—the reports on Marathon, Terrace Bay and Thunder Bay. I wonder if he could give us an indication when they might be available?

Mr. Wildman: Are you ever sure of anything?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of his seat.

PRODUCT LABELLING

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. If he does not feel it is specifically within his jurisdiction he might redirect it to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's his.

Mr. Bradley: You're sure it's his? The question deals with generic labelling. My understanding is that at present on food products sold in the major food chains and other stores, the weight, the name of the packager or retailer, the ingredients and the grading must be listed but there is no requirement to list the country of origin of the product inside—for instance, the can of tomatoes or the can of apple juice. Is that correct; and if so, is the minister prepared to take action which would require them to indicate the country of origin?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Can I refer it to the Minister of Agriculture and Food?

Mrs. Campbell: Both of you answer it.

Mr. Peterson: Let Frank Drea answer.

Hon. W. Newman: Just relax. Mr. Speaker, this is a great concern that we have because when the housewife does go shopping it is confusing.

Mr. S. Smith: Some men shop too, you know.

Mr. Breough: You sexist.

Mr. Conway: Some have no choice.

Hon. W. Newman: In my busy political life I don't have much time, I gather you do; that's all right.

Mr. Makarchuk: Get out there and look at the prices, and you might be more responsive.

Hon. W. Newman: In all seriousness, it is a concern of ours because when people go shopping—let me put it that way—when people go shopping—

Mr. Makarchuk: They buy something, don't they?

Hon. W. Newman: —it is very hard for them to differentiate, sometimes, between Canadian produce or Ontario produce, whatever the case may be, and imported produce. It's different for different labels. For fresh fruit in cans it can be different than it can for fresh vegetables in plastic bags, or tomatoes or whatever it may be.

Mr. Breough: Why is that, Bill?

Hon. W. Newman: What we are trying to do—and the Leader of the Opposition might be very helpful on this—we would like to have goods produced in Canada clearly and distinctly marked on the cans or the labels. Any imported products that are coming into Canada or into Ontario would be clearly marked so the people in this province and in this country will know what they're buying.

Mr. S. Smith: What stops you?

Mr. Breithaupt: Are you going to do it?

Mr. Bradley: As a supplementary, is this action that is contemplated by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food; and is the minister looking for the support of the opposition in that regard?

Hon. W. Newman: We're looking for the support of all parties to talk to Ottawa to clinch this situation. That should have been done long ago.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you saying the Liberals don't believe in it?

Mr. Ruston: No, Joe objected to that.

Hon. W. Newman: We're asking Ottawa.

Interjections.

Mr. Swart: In view of the fact that many of the Ontario farm products, perhaps the majority, do not have the logo displayed on them or above them, would it not be reasonable to have the canning companies and the other packaging companies display the logo right on the package or the can itself?

Hon. W. Newman: Quite obviously the member doesn't understand that it does take time to change. Their labels are printed long in advance. We've just been into this program for about seven months. We are having discussions now with the processors and many are talking about putting the logos on their cans for sale in this province and elsewhere.

Mr. Breough: What about putting a logo on your can?

An hon. member: It would have to be a big one.

Hon. W. Newman: We are working towards that. It's not that easy.

Mr. Makarchuk: Friend Bill.

Hon. W. Newman: If products are processed here and in the other provinces, it may give them some problem. But we are having ongoing discussions with them on this matter right now.

Mr. Peterson: What are you doing for Ontario oranges?

Mr. Eakins: When are you going to support Ontario wine, Bill?

E. C. ROW EXPRESSWAY

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Is the minister aware of the latest problem that has developed in the construction of the E. C. Row Expressway in Windsor whereby the path of the expressway goes directly through native burial grounds? If the minister is aware of the problem, what action does he plan to take to make sure that the rights of the native people are protected?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation that has arisen there. It's quite a long and detailed matter. It was first brought to the ministry's attention, I believe sometime in 1975, that there was a possibility of a burial ground in that area. It has been investigated. We have had archeologists from the Ministry of Culture and Recreation—and I believe a professor from the University of Windsor—working with the other ministries and being very careful in dealing with this situation. As the hon. member knows, the ministry is in partnership with the city of Windsor in the construction of the E. C. Row and, of course, we're working with our municipal partners as well. I think that's about all the information I have at this moment.

A few months ago—I believe it was in the fall—a Bell Canada telephone line was installed and no traces were found that would indicate that the burial ground was there, and when this work was going on we had representatives of the ministry and the professor from the university actually on the site to observe. We are trying to handle it in the best way possible until we find out really whether there is a burial ground there or not.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: Given the fact that there were 16 skeletons found in this area 40 years ago and another found in 1967, why did the people planning this expressway—and, in particular, people from the ministry—not discuss this problem with native leaders in the area before? Now it is only one month before the construction of that part of the expressway is supposed to start. Why did we wait till the last minute?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I won't argue with the information the hon. member has stated. It is news to me; to my knowledge according to my files, the first indication that the ministry had that there may have been a burial ground there was in 1975.

Mr. Bounsall: As there now appears to be a delay in the further development of that site—and it may be quite an extensive delay, should further findings turn up the fact that it is, as suspected, a burial ground that dates from the years 900 to 1100, and therefore is fairly significant—would the minister use the intervening time that he is likely to have in ensuring that his officials shift the location of that highway, also consider in the placement of the highway, which may now be a problem, that it be consolidated to a design with a safety division down the middle of four lanes rather than the wide median strip as at present? This would also cut down the cost of construction on that particular portion of it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think it would be premature to say that at this moment we would redesign that highway. The statement that the hon. member makes with regard to costs, comparing a median barrier with a median strip, is not necessarily so in most cases; it may be in some, but this matter has just come to my attention over the weekend. The contract for the actual road—the E. C. Row—is not imminent. There is an imminent contract for some of the service road work in preparation for the main contract, but the main E. C. Rowe contract under way at the present time is not in this location.

INCREASE IN OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. Conway: My question is of the Minister of Health. In this House on March 10, in an exchange with my colleague the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neill), in the matter of the Treasurer's OHIP increase in the budget of March 7, 1978, the minister indicated that in contemplation of the shift away from premiums to perhaps an alternate scheme this kind of adjustment would be difficult. To use his words, it is because: "We would have to dismiss 625 staff from OHIP."

Could the minister explain, and perhaps amplify on that statement, with specific reference to the 625 staff in OHIP that he identified?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think the hon. member is both getting into estimates and into what will be before the standing committee, but suffice it to say that I would have to say now that figure is perhaps a little over-estimated, although there is a very large number of staff employed by OHIP whose positions will become redundant if there were not a premium system.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: In that same exchange the minister indicated, and I quote: "We have been working in my ministry for nine months, looking at various alternatives to a premium system, which we will be more than happy to share with the social development committee." In a letter dated March 31, to the chairman of the social development committee, the minister appends not any internal documentation to support that intra-ministerial discussion which he alleged he would be very happy to share, but a rather pointless bibliography of known published material. Is the minister saying that he will not share with the social development committee any of the intra-ministerial reports and studies that relate to his very intensive discussion and analysis of alternatives to the premium system?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I understand the intention of the hon. member and his colleagues in referring the annual report to the standing committee and on looking at the press release which he issued at that time, it is their intention to present alternatives and, quoting from their press release, "to look for a cheaper alternative to the premium system." We will be glad to respond to their recommendations at the committee level and share with them the problems that we see.

Mr. Conway: May I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Grey-Bruce have a supplementary?

Mr. Sargent: No, I have a new question.

Mr. Conway: Do I understand, then, that as far as the social development committee is concerned, all we can expect from the Ministry of Health is this well-worn, well-known bibliography of published materials and that we are not going to get, as was indicated in his exchange on March 10, any of the alleged voluminous materials by way of studies and analyses of alternatives to the premium system?

Mr. S. Smith: They don't exist. There are no such studies.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, it is the party opposite which has been saying it has the alternatives. We'll be glad to answer any questions and we'll be glad to share any figures to respond to the proposals which are going to be put forward by that party.

Mr. Sweeney: You've had nine months of study.

USE OF SEWAGE SLUDGE

Mr. Swart: My question is of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Pursuant to the questions this morning to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) on the use of sewage sludge on farm land, and the report in this morning's paper by Messrs. Seto and De Angelis that a large volume of sewage sludge is being spread on agricultural land, which does not meet the safe metal and chemical levels, I wonder if the minister could tell the House what regulations his ministry has instituted to protect the farmer and the consumers of Ontario food? Has he stopped even once the use of sewage sludge on agricultural land because it did not meet the safe level criteria?

Hon. W. Newman: I think most of those questions have been answered by the Minister of the Environment. But answering the member's last question first, I can't tell him whether one load has been dumped in the wrong spot or not. I'm not exactly sure. I would point out to him that properly-treated sewage sludge is an excellent source of nitrogen for growing plants.

Mr. S. Smith: We know that.

Hon. W. Newman: I'm glad you know that. There is monitoring constantly going on, both by the federal Minister of the Environment and the provincial Ministry of the Environment. The pesticide lab at Guelph is working on a regular basis to make sure that the products which are being grown on these lands where the sewage sludge is going on are safe for human consumption. I have quite a lengthy report here, which I will be glad to show the member, which I picked up this morning. It points out that they are constantly monitoring to make sure they are safe for human consumption.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree, after the report which was submitted by Messrs. Seto and De Angelis, that the monitoring and the regulations have not been adequate when far more sewage is being used than is safe? Will the ministry now run tests on the soil, and on all sludge, and discontinue the use of any sludge which does not meet the safe level?

Hon. W. Newman: As I said, properly treated sludge is quite satisfactory on the land.

Mr. Makarchuk: The minister doesn't answer the question.

Hon. W. Newman: Does the member know what his problem is? He wants to save it but he doesn't want to grow things on it. In the Niagara Peninsula he wants to save all the land, but he doesn't want to grow anything on it. He wants to stop all of that. I can assure him that we are going to continue using sludge as a good source of growing Ontario food, and don't forget it.

Mr. Swart: But grow it safely.

Mr. Kerrio: All you do is shovel it.

Interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: Is the minister aware of the fact that in this article it suggests that research showed that unless vegetables were scrubbed and washed carefully there was some danger to the people who ingest them? Is he satisfied that those crops grown on this land are safe, and should he be giving notice that care should be taken by people who are going to eat the vegetables from those lands?

Hon. W. Newman: I think that question could be directed to the Minister of the Environment, but I would point out to the hon. member that monitoring is going on—

Mr. Kerrio: I get pages and pages of that stuff from the ministry.

Hon. W. Newman:—at this time by the various levels of government and the various departments of government.

Mr. Kerrio: Is the minister going to tell us about it or not? He spreads it around.

Hon. W. Newman: The member can spread it too. Let me tell him we are constantly monitoring to make sure there are no human health problems.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. I haven't had a chance to frame it properly, but I want to ask if he is aware of what is going on in all the Escarpment areas where we are having 1,000 people crowding into halls, 500 people standing in the cold for hours, and 99 per cent of them are opposed to the NEC? In view of the fact that the whole Niagara Escarpment area in the Grey-Bruce area is in complete limbo and we cannot develop—our economy is the worst in the province of Ontario—would he please either come to a meeting to find out what's going on or call off and cancel the whole Escarpment, abolish the whole thing and give us a chance to run our affairs and get back in the ball game in our part of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that the hon. member is speaking for his party when he suggests that we abandon the Niagara Escarpment plan, including the Peninsula, including the town of Caledon, and including those many historic areas of the province of Ontario which the Escarpment planning area is attempting to preserve in the interests of the general public, and I am delighted to know that it is now Liberal policy—

An hon. member: In the interests of self-preservation of all the committees.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—that we will have no preservation of this kind, no planning of this kind and the Niagara Escarpment—

An hon. member: What about the sunset law?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—will be abandoned to development, pits, quarries and all of those things. Is that the policy? In answer to the hon. member's question, I understand there is a problem, yes.

Mr. Breithaupt: That doesn't answer the question.

Mr. S. Smith: We certainly want to save the Escarpment.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: The facts are that 75 per cent of the Escarpment area, $1.3 billion of land involved, is in the Grey-Bruce area and we are hurting very badly. We cannot do anything. We can't expand. We can't even make a subdivision or anything. There are areas where we haven't had a subdivision since 1963 and we have to have some action. Please abolish this commission.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will not minimize the problems the member senses exist. I understand them.

An hon. member: What are you going to do about them?

An hon. member: We have them in Caledon too.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: Has the Premier come to any conclusions with regard to the cost of acquiring the lands that are presently under the control orders in the Niagara Escarpment Commission, and at what price and what level the private land owners will be compensated?

An hon. member: Now they want to nationalize the land.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not really sure that there has been any determination made on that particular matter. I understand it is perhaps Liberal Party policy to buy everything in sight.

Mr. Kerrio: Oh, come on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Our commitment is to acquire those areas that will be in the public interest and, of course, any time government acquires lands in the public interest, government pays the market value.

An hon. member: Get Alan Eagleson to buy some and he will free it up.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for St. George permit the hon. member for Grey to ask a question?

Mr. McKessock: Supplementary: Will the Premier take a close look at the fact that the Niagara Escarpment Commission stepped outside the intent of the Act when it developed the planning area in the Niagara Escarpment area, and take a close look at turning some of this planning area back to the municipalities involved?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, having formerly represented a part of the Niagara Escarpment Commission area I know of the problem being mentioned by the hon. members. I question whether the commission has extended beyond its legislative authority. If the hon. member is suggesting it has, certainly I would be prepared to take a look at that.

As for the possibility of returning some of the land that is within the planning area to the local municipalities, I can't give any commitment on that. I guess if one could assume that the local municipalities would in turn zone those lands consistent with the Niagara Escarpment Commission plan, that might be a possibility, but I question whether the hon. member would be in a position to give that commitment on behalf of those municipalities.

MacLAREN HOUSE NURSING HOME

Ms. Gigantes: A question of the Minister of Health: In answer to questions I asked him in July 1977 concerning MacLaren House Nursing Home, the Minister of Health wrote to me in late August and assured me that "a condition of the sale of MacLaren House to Mr. Bordo was that Mr. Bordo would take steps to ensure that the physical plan of MacLaren House Nursing Home was in total compliance with the Nursing Home Act, 1972, within 12 months of the date of the purchase"—

Mr. Yakabuski: Question.

Ms. Gigantes: He went on to describe how Mr. Bordo was then planning to fulfill his commitment. I wonder if the minister is now prepared, one year after the purchase, to provide a full account of what firm proposals Mr. Bordo has filed with the nursing home branch; and has Mr. Bordo received ministry approval for these proposals?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Obviously I don't carry all those figures and facts with me. I'll take that question as notice and give the member a complete answer.

Mr. Warner: Why not? You should.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You're going to get another award, Warner. Just keep it up.

"THE THREE FACES OF JESUS"

Mr. Breithaupt: A question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Following the comments made in the House of Commons with respect to a film, apparently entitled "The Three Faces of Jesus," I was wondering if the minister has requested a report on that film from his theatres branch and when he receives that report will he be able to advise the House as to whether it is the intention to have this film shown publicly in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answers are not yet, and yes.

Mr. Haggerty: Did you get your award, Larry?

DESERTING FATHERS

Mr. Blundy: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. In view of the fact that it was reported in the press last week that the Minister of Community and Social Services was disturbed at the cost to his ministry of the increasing numbers of deserting fathers, what plans does the minister have to seek out and find these people and to recoup these funds?

Hon. Mr. Norton: My remarks on that occasion went beyond purely the economic costs; I was also commenting upon the social costs to our communities and societies across this province of the apparent breakdown of the family unit in our society. But certainly, with respect to the part to which the hon. member has directed his attention, it is my intention to have discussions with my colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) to see if we might take steps to improve even further the enforcement of orders, where orders do exist.

I would be hopeful, of course, with the new family law reform provisions, that perhaps there would be more voluntary agreements and involvement on the part of spouses to provide for the care of the children prior to the disintegration of the family unit where that should occur, and that there would be fewer situations—that may be unduly optimistic—but I would hope there would be fewer situations in which the families of deserting spouses would be dependent upon the other citizens of the province.

PETITION

INCREASE IN OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition with 2,194 signatures. The petition is as follows:

"To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario: We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"That the recent proposed increase in OHIP premiums is unconscionable and should not proceed, and a less regressive method of paying for Ontario's health services be instituted."

That was signed by 2,194 people in the Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario area.

MINISTRY INFORMATION

Mr. Conway: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I would like to beg your indulgence, sir, in respect of material that I consider to be very important for the deliberations of the social development committee, which begins hearings tomorrow.

[3:15]

At my request, the chairman of the committee wrote to the Minister of Health some days ago asking for material which we believed to be important in the discussion of what the ministry and the government had considered as alternatives to the premium mechanism in so far as the financing of Ontario's health care system is concerned. In this House on March 10, the minister clearly indicated they had been working for nine months and one got the distinct impression that there were at least a number of studies that had been commissioned, either by the Ministry of Health or by the Treasury, or perhaps by both ministries in conjunction.

Today we have before us, supplied from the office of the chairman of that committee, a response from the Ministry of Health which is clearly indicative that there will be no such ministerial material coming forward for members of that committee who begin very important deliberations, I think, tomorrow. I wonder, can we accept this letter dated March 31 to the chairman of that committee from the Minister of Health as an admission that in fact the nine months of studies and analyses, and whatever, produced nothing more than this bibliography of known publications, and that because we have nothing more than this bibliography there is in fact nothing more within the government—either in his ministry or that of the Treasurer—to supply to the members of that committee for those deliberations?

The point of privilege is simply this: We were led to believe by the Minister of Health that there had been a very serious nine-month discussion and analysis period within the government in looking at alternatives. I expected to be in receipt today, or at the latest tonight, of those ministerial or inter-governmental reports, analyses or whatever. Twenty-four hours or 22 hours before the committee meets, I have, courtesy of the chairman of that committee, nothing more than a bibliography which I dare say even I could have put together.

Mr. Speaker, I want to know, through you, if there will be no further material coming in addition to that bibliography; and if not, does that indicate that in fact the government, through the Minister of Health and/or the Treasurer, is not willing to share with members of that committee any other material? Is this an admission that while there may have been a nine-month discussion period within the ministry, there is nothing concrete, there are no studies and there are no analyses of the alternatives which the government, through the Minister of Health, can provide members of the social development committee for their very important deliberations beginning tomorrow?

Mr. Martel: You should do better than that, fellas.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, in considering the point of privilege raised by the hon. member, I ask you to consider several things. First of all, in the letter dated March 16, 1978, from the chairman of the committee to me, the way I interpreted it, I believe the letter of March 31, 1978, was in fact answering that which had been requested by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt).

Second, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to consider the petition of the members of the official opposition and the press release which accompanied—or at least announced that petition to the public. It was clear from that, and the pronouncements of the members of that party since, that they intend to put forward certain alternatives and to argue for them.

Mr. S. Smith: You don't have any studies, admit it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Third, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to consider that during question period today I did make it clear that we would be glad to answer any questions and to provide any numbers or any facts with respect to any of those alternatives which the official opposition are going to advance. They will have our complete co-operation.

Mr. Conway: To that point, Mr. Speaker, if I might, I can well appreciate the points which the Minister of Health on behalf of the government adds to your deliberation of this point before us now. I just want to have you also consider the remarks made by the Minister of Health, remarks which we, or I at least, considered—rightly or wrongly—when he said on March 10 that “we have been working in my ministry for nine months looking at various alternatives to a premium system and we will be more than happy to share these with the social development committee.”

Mr. McClellan: This is out of order. Let's get on with the debate.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I beg you to consider when you are making this ruling, or giving the advice that is being sought, to indicate whether or not—

Mr. McClellan: Abuse of privilege.

Mr. Conway: —this very minor bibliography is in fact a substantial enough response to what we were led to believe by the ministry was a substantial amount of material—

Ms. Gigantes: What is going on? Sit down.

Mr. Conway: —in so far as alternatives and their discussion were concerned.

Mr. Cassidy: Boy, you are really floundering.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On the point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for Renfrew North arose on a point of privilege and I gave the hon. minister an opportunity to respond. I was in error in allowing the hon. member for Renfrew North to speak again to his same point of privilege, and of course I'm not going to perpetuate the felony by allowing a dialogue across the House.

All members of the House know that if you have what you consider to be a point of privilege inasmuch as something is not going to be provided in a committee of this House, it is the responsibility of that committee to take whatever action it deems necessary, and if they can't settle it to bring it back to the House for some action by the House as a result of a concerted effort by that committee; and that is where it rests at the present time.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

PREDATOR CONTROL ACT

Mr. Riddell moved first reading of Bill 54, an Act respecting Predator Control in Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to authorize the establishment of local predator control committees throughout Ontario to develop methods and procedures to protect livestock and poultry from destruction by predators. A committee is established for each predator control area designated by the minister, and the committee within one year of its establishment must prepare a predator control plan for approval by the minister. The bill requires every predator control committee to regularly review the predator control plan, and to report to the minister on an annual basis concerning whether the plan has been effective in reducing the level of predator activity.

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Dukszta moved first reading of Bill 55, an Act to amend the Education Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Dukszta: The purpose of the bill is to provide for heritage language instruction in Ontario. The bill sets forth the procedure for the establishment of heritage language programs in order that the heritage language may be taught as a subject of instruction or as a language of instruction. When a school board decides to institute a heritage language program the bill requires that a local heritage language advisory committee be established to provide continuing advice to the boards concerning the nature and content of the heritage language program. In the case of a dispute between the board and the advisory committee, the bill provides that the matter in dispute may be referred to the minister for determination.

HARTT INQUIRY

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, a point of order—just a point of clarification: The Premier in his statement on the Hartt royal commission indicated he was tabling the report. I did not notice during reports that it was tabled. Could you inform me if he tabled it during the course of making the statement?

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that under the new provisional orders they are just sent to the table.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INCREASE IN OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. Cassidy moved resolution 5:

That this House condemns the government's outrageous decision to raise Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums to the highest level in Canada; deplors the regressive impact of this arbitrary tax increase on wage earners in general, on farmers and small business, and in particular, on people of modest income; and condemns the government's affront to the fundamental parliamentary principle of no taxation without legislation. For all these reasons this House no longer has confidence in the government.

Mr. Cassidy: I will not be speaking on this until later in the debate.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party has placed this motion of no-confidence in the government because of the Treasurer's (Mr. McKeough) budget proposals to increase OHIP fees as a means of increasing government revenues.

We are opposed to this kind of fiscal gerrymandering because it violates a number of specific principles which we believe to be crucial in an equitable society.

The imposition of medicare premiums is in itself fundamentally wrong. The imposition of premiums of this level, $528 a year, is simply grotesque and cannot be justified. This party stands firm in its opposition to this increase. We had hoped—and still do as a matter of fact—that the Liberal Party would support us in this motion. If, in the first instance, the Liberals had indicated their support for our motion there is little doubt but that the government would have withdrawn the OHIP increase.

The regressive reality of OHIP premiums is not something that can be eliminated with premium assistance any more than property tax credits can make property taxes progressive or any more than sales tax credits can make the sales tax a progressive form of taxation.

The examination of just a few statistics is sufficient to demonstrate why we simply cannot accept this increase in premiums and why the government should withdraw the increase. We are not rejecting this increase, nor have we moved no-confidence in this government, simply because we are in opposition. We have done so because it is possible to generate revenues more equitably if the Treasurer is determined to raise an additional $271 million. If the Treasurer were to insist on increasing that amount of money he could do it through personal provincial income taxes and corporation taxes in the same proportion as the present tax system, 75 per cent personal and 25 per cent corporate taxes. We can show that most families will be better off if this were the system, and it would be less regressive than it is at the present time.

We know that to raise this amount of income would require a 2.78 per cent increase in personal income tax rates. The provincial rate now rests at 44 per cent of the federal tax payable, and the increase would raise it to 46.78 per cent.

This would represent a 7.4 per cent increase in the level of provincial income tax paid by Ontario residents. If this was done, sufficient revenues would be generated to negate the necessity of this $271 million tax increase that is suggested by the Treasurer.

Corporation taxes would need to rise less than one point to raise their share of about $68 million. If this was done, all families with incomes below $28,000 would be better off than they are at the present time, or would be with this increase. Individuals with incomes below $16,000 a year would be better off than with the projected increases as suggested by the Treasurer along with the OHIP premiums.

As a matter of fact, all OHIP premiums could be eliminated with an 11.5 per cent increase in the tax rate from 44 to 55.5 per cent. Even with that substantial increase in the personal income tax rate at the provincial level, families with incomes below $26,000 would be better off, and in fact would pay less taxes than they do now with the combination of personal taxes and OHIP premiums. Individuals with incomes below $15,000 would pay less as well under that system.

We find it strange indeed that the Treasurer boasts of Ontario's personal income tax level of 44 per cent as being the second lowest in all of Canada while at the same time he increases a more regressive tax to a level more than twice as high as any other province in this country. As a matter of fact, Ontario's OHIP premiums, combined with its income tax rate, gives Ontario residents by far the highest level of personal taxes in all of Canada.

[3:30]

There is a danger that in the heat of this battle over OHIP premiums we may overlook what is just as important as the regressive nature of the tax increase. We may lose sight of the original goals of a universal health care system for our people. We must fight very hard to ensure that these goals are not forgotten.

The founding convention of this party back in 1933 adopted a policy of a socialized health delivery system. As a matter of fact, at that convention the policy drew a parallel between health care and education, which I think is appropriate. Surely we in this chamber would agree that just as for 13 years of elementary and secondary school education there is no premium, or deterrent or tuition fee at all, the same principle should apply to health care as is applicable in our educational system.

There is no question in our minds that the premium of $528 a year will cause some families simply not to pay the premium, for economic reasons they'll take their chances on remaining healthy. I suspect this will be particularly so with young people, who are by nature healthy anyway, and they will quite successfully refrain from paying premiums and from contributing to the plan. That's a problem because we know that, as in any insurance program, it requires that the people who will never draw from it contribute so that those people who will draw from it most heavily will be able to receive the benefits to which they're entitled.

The provision of health care to people is a noble undertaking. It provides both economic and social benefits to our province and its people. The federal royal commission on health services back in 1964 put it most eloquently, and I'd like to quote from that report:

"We have spoken of the opportunity society, where good health is the key to the benefits available in our increasingly wealthy country. These opportunities depend on the acquisition of education and skills as well as health, but if these are available to the individual Canadian, whether or not he has the income to purchase them, then he can make his contribution to the growth of output and income, which will benefit not only himself, but through his taxes, others in the community. Canadians with sufficiently high incomes have pointed the way by spending an increasing share of their income on health services. Low incomes and poor health have been too closely associated for us to ignore the adverse effects on income distribution of chronic illness and disability. Expenditures on good health may well be as efficient a device for equalizing the distribution of income as any subsidy can possibly be."

That's a comment that the Treasurer should read sometime. In this province we now have a Treasurer and a Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) who are willing to undermine the principles of universal coverage and accessibility. The Treasurer does it by punitive premiums and our Minister of Health by carrying on negotiations with Ontario's medical profession and illegitimate concessions he has already telegraphed to the Ontario Medical Association.

Of course, the principle of no taxation without legislation is yet another principle that the Treasurer has violated. My colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere has documented eloquently and exhaustively the precedent for regarding these premiums as taxation. From the Magna Carta to the BNA Act, for 700 years, people have fought against arbitrary assessments such as this, and yet this government has acquiesced while the Treasurer, as a result of the fiscal myopia with which he is afflicted, pursues his single-minded goal of a balanced budget by 1981.

We in this party are proud of the role we have played in the development of universal health care coverage in Canada and in Ontario. The former Premier of Saskatchewan and federal leader, T. C. Douglas, pioneered in providing medicare. In Ontario, our party in 1969 voted against the medicare bill, and our first two reasons in that amendment were, and I quote:

"1. It fails to guarantee an immediate reduction of premiums, thereby continuing a regressive form of payment at unnecessarily high levels without meaningful regard for the patient's ability to pay;

"2. It fails to prohibit extra billing by participating doctors, thereby supporting a deterrent to use which runs contrary to the principle of equal access to medical care services for everyone in Ontario."

Here we are nine years later, standing as we did then against those who talk of equity but practise regressivity. They failed to raise revenues through the most equitable form of taxation available to them—progressive income and corporation taxes. How can we as legislators justify a system of medicare that increases premiums by 37.5 per cent and then, if the OMA gets its way, will allow doctors to increase their schedule of fees, with OHIP paying a smaller percentage of the OMA fee schedule?

While this debate is centred on the OHIP increases, our motion of no-confidence takes on an even greater significance with the current negotiations between the Ministry of Health and the province's doctors. I am appalled and disheartened that we have not been joined by the Liberal Party in this fight. Together we could have had the increase in premiums withdrawn. Sending this matter to a standing committee may result in a compromise but it most certainly will not cause the increase to be rescinded, and that is our goal.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario health care system is the only universal service provided by the province to all of its citizens throughout their lives. This is a responsibility of extraordinary proportions. Of course, no individual or group, or even one government, can claim total credit for the health care system now in place. It is the result of the dedicated work of many people over a long period of time. I caution the hon. members in opposition that today they can do this service, and the people who rely on it, irreparable harm.

If I may, I would like to put a human dimension on the health care system as we have it today in this province. In just one generation we have seen the transition of health care from that of a solely individual responsibility, with the accompanying spectre of financial disaster or inadequate treatment, to that of a wider social responsibility accepted by the government.

High-quality health care services have come to be considered a fundamental right of all citizens—a right predicated on medical necessity regardless of personal financial circumstances.

Ms. Gigantes: You have to pay your premiums, though, don't you?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We, in this government, wholeheartedly support that right and have worked with all the resources at our disposal to develop and refine the health care system.

We sometimes forget, or take for granted, the developments in health care that have taken place in the past 20 years. Let me briefly refresh the members' memories, for the government's record in this area is one of consistent progress.

In 1959, insured benefits covered only full in-patient hospital services, emergency out-patient services within 24 hours of an accident and some out-of-province benefits. But through the years this government has steadily increased the number of insured services.

By 1964, emergency out-patient services had been expanded to include treatment such as radio-therapy and occupational and speech therapy.

In 1966, health insurance was expanded from a hospital-based service to include all physician services; and in 1969, universal medicare, through the OHSIP plan, was introduced.

In 1972, both plans were fully integrated into a single plan, the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. At that time the premiums were reduced from what they had been under the two separate plans.

At this time, benefits were extended under the extended care programs to include patient residents in nursing homes and homes for the aged who were in need of at least one and a half hours of nursing or personal care per day. And in 1974 the drug benefit program was introduced to provide quality prescription drugs to eligible Ontario residents.

These are simply some of the highlights of the health care system as we know it today. As I look back on these accomplishments, I believe none of the members opposite can question the accessibility or the quality of health care in this province. I believe the hon. members must acknowledge that the Ontario health care system is indeed among the finest systems of its kind in North America.

But today we face new challenges in health care. We are engaged in the process of reshaping the system to ensure that it continues to meet the needs of the people of Ontario. We are placing increasing emphasis on developments which will ensure that even better ways of delivering care are available to all citizens; that the system remains responsive to all citizens; that it continues to foster scientific and technological progress; and, finally, that it is managed and operated in the most effective manner so the cost of health care can be contained.

In reviewing the motion of the NDP, it must become apparent that their concern is with the short-term financing of health care. We, as the government, have a broader responsibility than that and cannot afford the luxury of a short-term partisan outlook.

Mr. Martel: Look at the 1969 debate. We said the same thing then.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The NDP has conveniently ignored the greater ongoing challenge of how the people of this province—and I do mean all the people—are to be served with accessible, efficient and high-quality health care within the responsible economic and financial parameters to which this government is committed.

This is not a problem faced by Ontario alone. The cost of health care has been rising dramatically throughout the western world. In the past two decades, both in terms of total annual health expenditures and per capita annual health costs, the rate of increase has exceeded the rate of growth of the gross national product—no matter how fast the GNP itself has risen.

In fact, a recent international comparison has shown that in most similar jurisdictions, no matter how fast the economy has grown, health care costs have increased even faster.

In Ontario, as might be expected, we have had our share of cost increases. Overall, the Ministry of Health budget between 1968-69 and 1978-79 has grown by over 345 per cent, despite some transfer of certain services out of our ministry to other ministries. Much of this increase, however, is accounted for by additional services provided, such as medical and other practitioner services of the OHIP program, the extended care program and the drug benefit program, which I've already mentioned.

Today, out of every dollar which the government spends in the province, 28 cents is committed to the provision of health services. We see throughout the western world, the pattern of rising expectations and rising costs of health care, a pattern that often exceeds the growth of the economy. Yet our performance in this regard in Ontario can be a matter of pride.

Between 1970 and 1975, the growth in health-care costs exceeded the growth in the gross provincial product by 11 percentage points, but between 1975 and 1977, the GNP has increased by 29 per cent while health-care costs have increased by only 27 per cent. This is a positive result of the full acceptance of our financial responsibility for the development, the direction and the administration of these services.

I would like to remind this House that it is in the context that the NDP has introduced its motion—a motion, as I have pointed out, that is concerned only with the short-term and which ignores the realities under which we must live today.

There are those who will ask the question as to whether health care has assumed unwarranted proportions as a priority for provincial spending, considering the other demands on the provincial budget. To them, I would reply "No." I believe that the vast majority of the people of Ontario would agree with me. There is no question in my mind that health care is one of the most, if not the most, valued of all provincial services.

We must recognize that to maintain the health care system which the people of Ontario expect and deserve, we must deal rationally with the question of costs. Even in the area of simply stabilizing costs, there are those who hold the view that this will inevitably lead to the lowering of health care standards. In this respect, the Ontario Economic Council, in its report Issues and Alternatives published in 1976, cautions that this is an area that must be carefully studied because no easy assumptions can be made. Our experience leads us to agree with this proposition.

When we consider the necessary services the system requires, and the people's demand for high quality for health care, we find it undesirable to cut back arbitrarily on either the health care services or their quality. We are, however, committed to the containment of costs without jeopardizing the system, and this commitment has engaged much of my time since I became Minister of Health.

Our philosophy in this regard is to seek a balanced system of health care and our focus is on those institutions in which efficiencies and dollar savings can be realized while still having due regard with human and humane factors of the health care system. We are using many methods, including making more efficient use of our resources, amalgamating services, changing staffing patterns and introducing other cost-saving measures such as increased emphasis on day surgery.

If I may, I will elaborate on only a few of these.

We are continuing to work with hospitals to find acceptable ways of reducing the average length of stay of their patients. In fact, the average length of stay in an active-treatment bed has fallen from 10.3 days in 1969 to 8.1 days in 1976. The significance of this becomes apparent when we realize that the average cost of a standard ward hospital bed in 1976 was $129 per day, while the per diem cost for nursing-home accommodation was $21 and the per diem cost for home care was only $11. These figures serve to illustrate the importance of the thrust in the health care system towards de-institutionalization.

This approach has been particularly successful in the psychiatric hospital area where, in the past 10 years, the number of hospital patients has been reduced from about 10,000 in 1967 to 4,300 in 1977, as care has been shifted to the community level. This has been achieved through such initiatives as the homes for special care program and increased emphasis on the community mental health program. These programs have provided benefits, not only in terms of the economy, but also in terms of the patient's well-being.

I believe it is also appropriate to point out in this context of financial restraint, that while the cost of health services has more than doubled in the past five years, the ministry has accomplished its tasks with a staff reduction of 1,600 in the past four years. As well, administrative costs of the OHIP program are now about five per cent against a claim factor of almost $1 billion. This is significantly lower than the American average of 6.75 per cent. A further comparison is with the administrative costs of the Blue Cross program in New York State, which has a claim factor roughly equivalent to that of our province. Their costs average 7.5 per cent. [3:45]

It may be worthwhile, however, to refresh the hon. members' memories as to just how large this OHIP operation really is. Virtually all of the 8.4 million Ontario residents are insured under OHIP. Last year 53 million claims were processed, which represents an increase of 60 per cent over five years ago. This represents 250,000 claims every working day, an average of over six claims per person per year as compared to four per person per year in 1972.

Under these circumstances, we believe we are doing a remarkably good job of holding our administrative costs under control—the result, I suggest, of effective management practices based on sound business principles, principles and practices which I have no doubt are foreign to certain opposition members.

I would like to turn for a few minutes to the premium structure for OHIP. With the introduction of the Ontario Health Services Insurance Plan in 1969, it was the established philosophy of this government that premiums would cover a certain percentage of the cost of this service and that this ratio of premiums to cost would be maintained. The general expectation was that this percentage would be about 33 per cent.

Some hon. members will remember that at about the same time the federal government indicated that it would reimburse the provinces for an average of 50 per cent of the program costs. It was stipulated that the provincial plan must meet five main requirements, namely, that coverage must be universal; it must provide accessibility of services; it must be portable between the provinces, it must be administered by a public authority; and it must insure all medically required services rendered by a physician.

Even though the Ontario plan met all of these criteria, under the federal equalization formula of calculating provincial payments to a national average, this province was never to receive the full 50 per cent reimbursement. There has always been a shortfall in that area.

Throughout this period, this government has kept premiums down. By 1977-78, premium revenue represented only 22 per cent of the total cost of health services.

Mr. Cassidy: They rose by 45 per cent two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In the budget for fiscal 1978-79, the increase in premiums brought the revenue figure up to 28.4 per cent of the total cost of health services, still below the originally expected 33 per cent. I might digress here to explain that the figures I am using, 28.4 per cent, refer to the premium revenue in relation to the total budget of the Ministry of Health. A figure of 34 per cent has been set out in the new budget statement, but it excludes several significant health care costs, such as those for psychiatric hospitals, the drug benefit program and public health.

Despite the motion of the NDP, the point is that whatever perspective one puts on the matter, premiums still cover only 28.4 per cent of the total ministry budget. It is imperative that these costs be financed responsibly. The government has studied the alternatives through a number of advisory committees that have reported their conclusions on the increasing costs of health care. These include the special program review report, better known as the Henderson report, and that of the joint advisory committee, the Taylor report, released earlier this year.

Mr. Laughren: We know. Self-serving documents.

Mr. Cassidy: It is the gospel for the Tories.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The consensus was that to finance the growing cost of health care, a premium increase was the most sensible and responsible way. The joint committee's first recommendation was this: "The amount of revenue generated by premiums has declined from 32 per cent of total health care expenditures in 1971-72 to 22 per cent in 1977-78, with the last premium increase in 1976. The committee felt that since premium increases generate considerable additional revenue while not increasing administrative costs, coupled with the awareness of the cost of health care that is generated by this kind of personal system involvement, that this is a useful way of containing public health care expenditures."

To carry on with a further quote: "Although most provinces have waived the premiums entirely, the committee felt that in line with its commitment through some direct fiscal involvement by the user in health care costs, premiums should not only be retained but should reflect overall health care costs. The committee also noted that although 75 per cent of total premium revenue is paid by employers, the employer contribution is negotiated with the employee and is an expense for taxation purposes, while the employee pays income tax on this taxable benefit."

Mr. Laughren: It is a taxation and the minister knows it. It is plain and simple Tory taxation.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The exact recommendation of the joint committee is as follows: "That OHIP premium amounts be reviewed on an annual basis in order to maintain the revenue accruing from total premiums that would approximate 33 per cent of total insured health services costs."

The Henderson report commented as follows: "Few users of Ontario health services realize that if all costs were paid directly out of pocket, the annual rate premium required from current contributors to finance the province's expenditures in 1975-76 would be $1,300 per family and $660 per single person." I point out that under similar circumstances, the premiums required for 1978-79 would be $1,834 per family and $917 per single person.

In addition to these reports, we have studied other methods of curtailment costs—some very drastic—including specific service reductions; deferring expansion of chronic care programs; elimination of some research components; the elimination of elective out-of-Canada benefits; and, as members are well aware, the closing of some hospitals or whole wings of hospitals.

Mr. Cassidy: So people are paying more money for less health.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I emphasize considered—I did not say accepted. As well there were other considerations, such as a deterrent fee related to OHIP and the introduction of a co-payment within the drug benefit program, to mention just a few.

All of these alternatives were rejected as inappropriate at this time.

Even though we have undertaken a very responsible approach to financing the OHIP program, we do not find satisfaction in making changes to the basic premium. However, it should be restated, for it obviously is lost on some, that when all is said and done there is no such thing as free health services, just as there is no free ride for anything else undertaken by the public sector.

Mr. Laughren: What a silly statement to make. Put up a straw man and then knock him down. A really good debating point, Dennis.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If we were to live in a world of fantasy, I suppose we could dream about never increasing premiums despite ever-increasing costs; but as a responsible government, we do not have an opportunity to live in such an Alice-in-Wonderland atmosphere. The real world offers no such escape.

Mr. Cassidy: Somewhere back with Adam Smith. There is an escape for your gang, and it is at the ballot box.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: While there has been an increase in premiums we should also keep in mind that provision has been made to increase the income ceilings for those whose income makes them eligible for full or partial premium assistance.

Mr. Laughren: Any more straw men, Dennis?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This seems to have been overlooked—or ignored—in the general debate over the basic increase. As an example, under the enriched premium subsidy program free coverage will now be available to single people with a taxable income of $2,500 or less—an upward change of 49 per cent. For families, the upward change is 50 per cent, to $3,000 or less. Subsidies of 50 per cent will be available for single people with taxable incomes between $2,500 and $3,000; and families with taxable incomes between $3,000 and $4,000. The subsidies currently apply to single people with taxable incomes between $1,680 and $2,000 and to families between $2,000 and $3,000.

Therefore, while we have made an adjustment in premiums, we have also tempered the effect of this adjustment on a large proportion of the population. All told, about 1.9 million people, or almost one out of every four Ontarians, including those 65 years of age and over and those receiving social assistance, now receive full or partial subsidization.

I ask whether these 1.9 million Ontario citizens believe, and I quote from the motion before this House, "that this government's action is an outrageous decision that should be condemned." I think the answer to that is obviously "No."

Another question which I believe the opposition parties, especially the NDP, will have to answer is this: Instead of the premium increase health costs being funded out of general revenue, how do they propose raising the additional $271 million required? By enlarging the provincial debt? By borrowing more and further mortgaging the future, or what? The public will want to know this, and they deserve to be told.

In fact, we are still waiting to be told how the opposition parties would pay for some of the recent proposals they have made regarding the provision of expanded services. If these proposals to expand OHIP to include dental coverage, to include the provision of prosthetic and orthodontic devices, and to expand chronic home care immediately throughout the province were implemented, our estimate is that they would cost at least an additional $390 million per year.

It appears abundantly obvious that it is very easy to make proposals without having to accept the responsibility of making them work.

Mr. Cassidy: Who writes these speeches for you? Tell him to retire.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have one of the most comprehensive health care systems on this continent at a direct cost to about three-quarters of the population of an individual annual rate of $264 and a family rate of $528.

Mr. Cassidy: It is the highest in Canada.

Mr. Makarchuk: The most expensive in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In only a few short years, we have initiated dramatic changes in the duties of government in the health care area to its citizens. These changes have developed an increased and still-increasing expectation of a very highly sophisticated health service.

Mr. Laughren: You're the oldest Tory over there.

Mr. Cassidy: The youngest reactionary.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We are taking new initiatives in the areas of operating efficiencies, cost control and manpower control. We are implementing our commitment to de-institutionalization and to community involvement in both health care and decision-making. We are dealing with the problem of over-utilization of the system. At the same time, we are evaluating the need for new and expanded programs. There is much to be done because we direct and operate a health care system in a state of constant transition. Change and improvement are not only possible but necessary.

In two respects alone—those of lower infant mortality and increasing life expectancy—we may expect increasing demands on the health care system. This, coupled with the fact that we face a declining birth rate and an aging population, will change the emphasis of our health care needs in the future. Our response to these and other changes, such as the inevitable ones in technology, must be planned and in place.

The second factor under which we must operate is the changed economic climate, as well as the program of restraint on all expenditures in the public sector. We will have to continue to watch our expenditure patterns even if the economy should move out of its present difficulties—

Mr. Laughren: You've ruined the economy, now clobber the public sector. You're pretty good at setting up straw men.

Mr. Cassidy: How many people have you put out of work this week?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —because costs are unlikely to decrease and demands on services are likely to increase. In this respect, one of our initiatives is to persuade the public to accept more responsibility for the maintenance of their own health, and for controlling their use and their demands on the health care system.

Earlier I spoke of the increased emphasis on ambulatory and community-based health care.

Mr. Laughren: Why did you let the Treasurer do this to you? Why do you let the Treasurer run roughshod over you?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In the future I see this process continuing not only as an important area in which to control costs—

Mr. Laughren: It's the truth, isn't it Darcy?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —but as a practical and desirable way of bringing health care even closer to the people.

Mr. Laughren: Why does the Treasurer always get his way?

Mr. Makarchuk: That was the laying on of hands, no doubt.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We may anticipate that the process of transition will continue, but none of this can be accomplished by an instant clean-sweep approach or simply by ad hoc change. We deal, in this process of transition, with the human element, both in suppliers and users of the system, and the impact of ill-considered or ill-timed change can have far-reaching consequences.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right—like premium increases. Your premium increases are ill-timed. That was ill-considered.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Changes in this context will require a great deal of sensitivity and, perhaps most of all, of common sense—a commodity which we have traditionally found sadly lacking among so many members opposite.

Speaking of common sense, I would like to suggest that the hon. members set aside the extravagant rhetoric of the NDP motion before the House and consider soberly the brief review which I have given of the services and responsibilities and value to the people of Ontario—

Mr. Laughren: You're the one who's dogmatic and doctrinaire.

Mr. Warner: Next time you stick your head in the sand you should open your mouth.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —of the health care system as it exists and as it functions today. We, as a responsible government, have considered many alternatives, both in operation and funding. We are dedicated to ensuring that all participants of the system—patients, taxpayers, and health practitioners—are contributing and receiving fairly. We will continue to give the people of this province the best possible health care program that available resources permit, a system that will provide both quality and accessibility to all citizens of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I say with the utmost of conviction that it would be both prudent and sensible for this Legislature to reject the motion before it. I add only that I am looking forward to the upcoming meetings of the standing committee on social development. It is high time that the people of this province received an opportunity to scrutinize fully the bombastic propositions of the opposition. It is high time that people received an opportunity to analyze the sound and the fury which has been emanating from the members opposite. It is time to see if there is substance behind their rhetoric or if it is, as I suspect—

Mr. Warner: We should have had time to debate the tax.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —mere posturing, void of any practical policy suggestion.

Mr. Warner: Nonsense.

An hon. member: You'll see, you pompous jerk.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North.

Mr. Warner: Here comes the apology.

Mr. Conway: I am pleased to participate in the debate this afternoon, having had somewhat of an opportunity last Thursday night to join with my colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere in a related debate. I took time this afternoon to read very carefully what it was we were here to debate and I want to say at the outset that the hon. member for Ottawa Centre has before us a resolution which has a certain measure of appeal.

Mr. Cassidy: But.

Mr. Laughren: Here comes the apology.

Mr. Warner: The government apology.

Mr. Conway: We'll leave the "buts" till a little later, because there are certain political problems I would invite the hon. member for Ottawa Centre to consider a little later on.

Mr. Lawlor: Like requiring the government to withdraw them.

Mr. Warner: This is Darcy's brother.

Mr. Conway: Although not wanting to be too mean and nasty, because in a sense what we're here to discuss is something that just might give us an election, I know the Treasurer will share with me—

Mr. Laughren: Withdraw the increase.

[4:00]

Mr. Conway: —a certain sardonic interest in a column that appeared today in the Toronto Sun, which in part relates to an item which gave us the last election, specifically the item of rent control, and how the columnist for the Toronto Sun came upon a certain internal memo that was in part authored by the member for Ottawa Centre indicating just how it was that that party might posture, if I could be allowed to use so bold a term, to perhaps produce an election.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't lecture us about posturing.

Mr. Conway: I have to say, in all fairness, that for all my political sins I don't think I have ever circularized my caucus with the kind of cynical posturing that is reported on behalf of the member for Ottawa Centre with respect to the item which gave us the last election.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Go get 'em.

Mr. Conway: For those who would have the world believe that they are truly holier than the rest, coming from the Ottawa Valley, I have watched with great interest the performance of my friend from Ottawa Centre. I have to think that what is reported in the column this morning by Claire Hoy in the Toronto Sun, which among other things alleges—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Let's hear it. Put it on the record.

Mr. Conway: —for the interest of the member for Kenora, in a debate that gave us the last election, which there is no mistaking is what we are talking about here today, in the matter of rent control that hon. member who today moves this motion of no confidence, just speaking about the politics of it all and nothing about the substantive issue, to which I will quickly get—

Mr. Laughren: You are being sanctimonious; don't be sanctimonious.

Mr. Conway: —he is alleged to have said in that memo about rent control: "If the Tories eventually agree, as is likely, we then still"—the NDP—"win credit. If the Tories don't agree, then we stand alone as the party which works for tenants. If we can make the Liberals make a clear anti-tenant vote along the way, so much the better."

Mr. Cassidy: That is where your instincts are. You are pulling the province out of rent review.

Mr. Conway: I didn't see the memo and happily I didn't author the memo. But I think in its own quiet little way it speaks to the posturing capacity, not only of the NDP but of its lately arrived leader. Maybe, just maybe, it is a footnote worth considering in so far as supporting this call for an election is concerned.

Mr. Warner: He doesn't know who the enemy is.

Mr. Conway: I may as well say now for the benefit of the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, let's suppose I was convinced by the power of his oratory and the force of his logic to join with him in this—

Mr. Laughren: They would withdraw the increase and the member knows it.

Mr. Conway: I don't profess to be a Senator Forsey but I want to speak for a moment, for the member for Nickel Belt's consideration, just to the politics of it. I don't profess to know much about the politics of it but I was wondering what the import of voting with the member for Ottawa Centre and his happy band in this respect would give us.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They are not very happy.

Mr. Cassidy: It is a very happy band.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They are the sourest bunch you have ever seen.

Mr. Conway: That is a very well-made point because it leads to what I want to say.

Mr. Laughren: Who is the enemy?

Mr. Conway: I have no assurance that Her Honour would necessarily dissolve the 31st Parliament of Ontario without taking into consideration two constitutional precedents which I would have some knowledge of.

Mr. Laughren: They would withdraw the increase.

Mr. Conway: These might suggest that we in the opposition—no doubt the official opposition—might be called upon to form a ministry. But, as the Treasurer knows, that might be difficult without the accommodation of my friend from Ottawa Centre.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe next week.

Mr. Conway: I must as a private member say that while I do agree with the hon. member for Ottawa Centre's assertions that while this policy of OHIP premium increases is an outrageous act by an outrageous ministry and is repugnant to me—

Mr. Warner: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Conway: —there is on the horizon only one other thing that is for me more repugnant. It is the thought, however remote and however theoretical—

Mr. Cooke: Of your leader being the Premier.

Mr. Conway: —of being forced into some kind of short-term government with the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Laughren: It would be long-term.

Mr. Conway: I have to say that that is no more attractive and certainly much less attractive than the very serious matter which is before us here today.

Mr. Laughren: Who does the Liberal Party regard as the enemy in this place?

Mr. Conway: I realize that there is a certain hypothetical quality to that. Her Honour might very properly decide that there was an inherent impossibility about the union of the virtue of the Grits with the posturing insignificance of the socialists, thereby rendering impossible any such ministerial accommodation, but I do not know what Her Honour might consider if, on this day in early April, 10 months into this Parliament or following upon the last election, she necessarily felt that way.

I must say at the outset that I simply cannot support at this time a consideration that would bring about the potential dissolution of this Parliament.

Mr. Nixon: The colour is returning to the cheeks of the Treasurer.

Mr. Warner: You won't vote against the OHIP premiums!

Mr. Conway: There is nothing which frustrates my ambition—and it's a very moderate ambition—for the general health and welfare of this Ontario community—

Mr. Warner: You haven't the strength of a jelly bean.

Mr. Conway: —more than the thought of being forced to sit for however brief a period of time on the Treasury benches with my colleague from Ottawa Centre, who is alleged in this morning's press to be capable of what I think to be the rankest of rank cynicism.

Now to the matter at hand in so far as the policy is concerned.

Mr. Warner: I knew you would get around to that sooner or later.

Mr. Breaugh: It's about time.

Mr. Conway: I am happy to see the Treasurer is here, particularly—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Policy? Did you say policy?

Mr. Conway: The member for Kenora, who is the Minister of Northern Affairs, says—and I don't fault him at all, knowing his expertness in the political strategies afoot—

Mr. Nixon: He's got a Moosonee tan.

Mr. Conway: Yes, it certainly is that.

The member for Kenora says that he, like the Minister of Health and, no doubt, the Treasurer, is here to find out what the responsible opposition has to say and to offer. I will say, for the edification of the Minister of Northern Affairs and other members of the government who might have an interest in this, that we in the responsible opposition, facing the responsible challenge of this very serious matter of health care financing and health care policy, are not prepared to send this matter to the electorate for the third election in as many years without a full and responsible discussion of the matter.

Mr. Breaugh: I can understand that.

Mr. Conway: It is interesting to me, as a relatively new member in this august assembly—

Mr. Breaugh: Unfortunately.

Mr. Conway: —to note with considerable interest the fact that the government has carefully managed the affairs of this House and its various committees in such a way as to assiduously avoid any involvement in a real way in health care policy discussion. Of course, we have had the 20 hours of consideration of the Ministry of Health estimates, and all of us who worship at the shrine of the British parliamentary system know just how relevant that is to the politics of the matter.

We have had committees, extraordinary committees of a select nature, that have travelled this province, spending considerable of the taxpayers' dollars—

Mr. Breaugh: Some even went outside of the province.

Mr. Conway: Some even went outside of the province. Well—

Mr. Breaugh: Some even had their picture taken outside of the province.

Mr. Conway: That's right.

Mr. Nixon: Some even went out without being on a committee.

Mr. Conway: That's right. I am happy to see the NDP member for Oshawa recently arrived back from his sojourn to the mother of Parliaments—

Mr. Nixon: He has a golf-club tan.

Mr. Conway: —where, presumably, that reporter from the Globe and Mail was not lurking in the darkness of a corner.

Mr. Breaugh: They never lurk when I'm out there.

Mr. Conway: I'm sure they don't.

Mr. Nixon: They're not interested.

Mr. Conway: We all watched that convention in early February, and there was no lurking, I must say.

But this government has studied, in select committee format, for example, all the important issues of the day. We have, very properly, spent considerable time and revenues, as the member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil) knows better perhaps than any here. The hon. member for Elgin knows the importance of a select committee examination of tile drainage and what it means to the farmers of Chatham-Kent. And I think that is an important matter that should be looked at.

Mr. Nixon: And Brant.

Mr. Conway: Similarly, we have had select committees which have taken as their task a full and purposeful examination of the important, burning issue of the after-hours use of school rooms. Even the Treasurer sits as he does in his high chair of judgement knowing that many years ago in his tender youth he was seconded to a select committee to discuss the importance of youth in this province. People such as myself profited immensely by that deliberation. I have looked across the horizon of parliamentary investigation and I have seen all these testaments to what this government considers important in so far as public policy is concerned.

But you look at all of these, and one area of increasing public expenditure, for some reason, does not appear anywhere on the horizon—and that's the matter of health. I believe the member for Don Mills—the poor, beleaguered, defeated Minister of Health—is the Treasurer's fall guy. You know, it has to be the most pitiful, the most unenviable, the most tragic of hopeless circumstances for any aspiring Tory over there. And I say this if for no other person's interest than that of my good friend from Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey) who, I am sure, looks enviously upon the front benches. If I can warn him of one area where he would not wish to exercise his cabinet ambitions it would be in the area of Health.

He only has to look around to see whither they have gone. The poor present minister—I can't call him Dennis so I'll call him the hon. minister—only has to look across the political battlefield and ask, "Where have all those flowers gone?" Where is Matt Dymond? Where did Tom Wells end up? And what about Mr. Bert Lawrence and Dr. Potter and the hon. present member for Muskoka (F. S. Miller)? Not a particularly strong indication of the staying power of the Ministers of Health, particularly under the Davis-McKeough hegemony over there.

So I'm sure the member for Don Mills is very nervous when he is forced, kicking and squealing, to the order-in-council office upstairs, delivering the Treasurer's dictum about where it is the tax dollars and the increases are going to be extracted from. I want to say at the outset that my sympathies are with the fall guy, the Minister of Health. It's certainly, I think, a very sorrowful day when the very important area of health care planning is left to the vagaries and the vicissitudes of the Treasurer's 19th century economic viewpoint.

I suggested last year in estimates that the time had come for a full legislative inquiry into the matters pertaining to OHIP, since at that time we were beginning to assemble the data from the substantial 45 per cent increase in premiums, as of the 1976 McKeough budget, and the Minister of Health dismissed at that time the requirements for any such matter, feeling secure, no doubt, to depend continually upon the advice of the Henderson special program review and the Premier's task force headed by what I notice one of the press reports indicate as "a London financier, Mr. Allyn Taylor." I guess that's just about where this government wants to take its advice in the matters of social import like health care planning. They are really not too interested in involving the Legislature. They would rather return to the bailiwick of their London financial base for long-term planning in the areas of health care.

Mr. Nixon: They couldn't get Marvin Shore.

Mr. Conway: Well, poor Marvin is like some of the Ministers of Health. Quo vadis is the question, I suppose.

The matter now before us is that of supporting the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party's resolution which would presumably bring about an end to this Legislature. I think that what the New Democratic Party, outside of its posturing potential, is trying to effect in this regard cannot be accepted by me, as one member of the responsible opposition on this side of the House, because we have taken an action which has brought about the hearings of this OHIP premium matter and the general health care financing system beginning tomorrow in the social development committee.

I would be the first to admit that that committee may not produce all of the answers. I know the member for Parkdale (Mr. Dukszta), as he sits quietly agreeing with me, will share that basic position, that we will not likely solve all the problems. I want to say at the outset that as one member who expects to be involved in the committee's deliberations—and so that I can allay any of the fantasies which the Treasurer and his fall guy the Minister of Health may be developing in as much as what they expect my party to do tomorrow or in the deliberations of the committee in the next two weeks.

[4:15]

I want it clearly understood—at least I hope it is understood by the Treasurer and the Minister of Health—that they will appear before that committee as witnesses. They are going to be called by members of that committee to explain their actions in as much as they continue to rely upon the premium mechanism for a substantial portion of the funding for our health care system. As I see it, there will be a presentation made in explanation of an ongoing government commitment to the premium system by the Treasurer and the Minister of Health. They will be cross-examined for all of the studies which they have at their disposal indicating why they have continued in their wise way.

At the end of those deliberations, having perhaps invited others from the tax field, perhaps another individual from another jurisdiction since, as one of the socialists pointed out, we do seem to be elite in as much as we are now the only jurisdiction in the dominion of Canada which relies to such a considerable degree on the premium mechanism. Maybe, just maybe, some of the other jurisdictions are not so completely misguided in their mechanism for funding similar programs.

At the end of those deliberations, I fully expect to be able, as a member of that committee, to consider and to put forward responsible aspects of an interim and perhaps a final report. As the Speaker knows from his intimate knowledge of parliamentary procedures, I do not expect to engage in any kind of dialogue with the witnesses outside of the questions which the committee as a whole would be expected to put.

I must say, parenthetically, that it does little for the happiness of my heart to receive from my colleague, the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), who is the chairman of the social development committee, a response from the Minister of Health which indicates some rather predictable things. The member for Huron-Bruce, in his capacity as chairman of that committee, wrote to the Minister of Health on March 16 requesting all such material as would be pertinent to a full and complete examination of the premium mechanism and on the alternatives which have been considered, as was indicated on a number of occasions by both the Treasurer and the Minister of Health.

The Minister of Health, in response to my colleague from Quinte, unequivocally said, on March 10: "We have been looking at this for nine months and let me tell you gentlemen and ladies in the opposition that we have looked at all the alternatives; and we, with our wealth of bureaucratic support—" and even the member for York North (Mr. Hodgson) appreciates the fact that the poor beleaguered opposition does not have such facilities in any way, shape or form, given the view the government has taken of what the opposition research capacity should be—but the government has through the full-blown support of the bureaucracy, as the Minister of Health indicated, a veritable panoply of alternatives to bring to the committee.

Certainly that was said on March 10. But what do we get today? We get a pitiful example of something significant, namely this government's attitude towards freedom of information. It simply reinforces what we all know to be the Treasurer's point of view, that as long as the Tories rule in this province there will be nothing but the most weak-kneed, lily-livered commitment to freedom of information. In fact, those requirements will be met by providing members of the committee not with any of the material which we had expected—

Mr. Mackenzie: I thought we were talking about OHIP.

Mr. Breaugh: Look who you are in bed with now.

Mr. Conway: I am getting to the point. I'm slow, I realize that, but I—

Mr. Nixon: He's doing very well.

Mr. Conway: I want to very ponderously go through what I think is very important. We, in a responsible opposition, want to see this matter responsibly deliberated in a committee framework first.

Mr. Mackenzie: You mean supportive opposition, don't you?

Mr. Conway: Because we have neither time nor inclination for this kind of specious posturing. We have no time for that kind of socialist Valhalla.

Mr. Warner: The Speaker is over there; speak to the Chair!

Mr. Conway: You know, Mr. Speaker, without wanting to involve you in any way in this kind of partisan discussion, I know how happy you must be to sit where you sit. No movement was ever more noticeably happier than that which took you from the uncomfortable irresponsibility of that diminishing band of insignificant Fabian Marxists, or whatever, to the respectable position which we all knew your moderate temperament entitled you to, well in advance of your appointment some months ago.

Mr. Warner: Keep this up and you'll be moved to the Senate.

Mr. Conway: Because we in the responsible opposition wanted to see this before a committee, so we could look at what it is the government has examined by way of alternatives, we are now forced to comment upon this particular want of confidence which, if we support it today, would bring about the dissolution—or at least would likely bring about the dissolution of this Parliament.

Mr. Laughren: Make up your mind.

Mr. Cassidy: If the Liberals had supported them yesterday, we could have rolled back those premium increases. The government would have had to back down.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, they are asking me to support their resolution and dissolve this House, most likely, because—

Mr. Cassidy: You had three weeks to consider this.

Mr. Conway: —as I said earlier, one of the choices I am left with, if this does not bring about the dissolution of this Parliament, is the formation of a new ministry. As I also said earlier, and I repeat, the only thing more outrageous than this premium increase is the contemplation—

Mr. Cassidy: Of a Liberal government.

Mr. Conway: —of a ministry in which the hon. member for Ottawa Centre would have any involvement where I was concerned. That is totally repugnant to me.

Further to that, having taken the position that we want this matter to go before the social development committee—

Mr. Warner: You're taking another position.

Mr. Conway: I am not, because the hon. members to my left know for what consistency, for what purity in our consistency, we in this party stand.

Mr. Cassidy: For all the sanctimoniousness.

Mr. Conway: We're not so foolish as to refer this matter to a committee for responsible deliberation, only to preclude that by voting ourselves and our Parliament out of existence.

Mr. Warner: They're not going to listen to you, and you know it.

Mr. Conway: That is simply the kind of foolhardy logic that I have come to expect from those on my left and which I consider to be a suitable testament to their seriousness in this matter.

My leader will be speaking later this afternoon. He will speak to some of the matters which I—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To some of the things you have missed.

Mr. Conway: To some of the things I've missed? I will admit to the Treasurer's comment, that I do not intend to make my remarks comprehensive, because that would be impossible and, I think, impolitic.

Mr. Breaugh: And beyond your capacity.

Mr. Conway: The Treasurer has joined us here this afternoon, and I think it fitting that he is here representing the government, which he is really now at one in terms of representation.

Mr. Warner: So are you.

Mr. Conway: It's happy that the Minister of Health has gone to readjust to the position in which the Treasurer has placed him, because what we have in this premium increase is, among other things, a predictable if punishing tribute to the modern-day Tory economic prejudice. I won't read it, because I indulged members to listen to me the other night as I read the very plaintiff letter that the Treasurer wrote to that esteemed government journal, so it is alleged, the Globe and Mail, of March 16. No doubt very much hurt by the affront of his fellow Chathamites, the distinguished editorial board of that journal, he explained why it was that the government was prepared to defend this indefensible premium increase. That letter to the editor is as feeble as this budget delivered by the Treasurer some weeks ago.

I want to speak to two or three points in that budget while the Treasurer is in his seat.

On page 15—and perhaps before I talk about page 15 I should say this while the Treasurer is here: In 1976 he announced a premium increase after a period of many years where there had been no premium increase. That says something about their planning so far as they want to continue with this premium mechanism. But in 1976 the Treasurer felt it was time for a premium increase, and at that time we had the premiums increased by roughly 45 per cent. Granted the basis for premium assistance was enriched and thereby broadened to include more people. At that time, the people of Ontario were properly invited to believe the Treasurer when he said and I quote from budget paper B of that budget: "Premiums will now generate approximately 28 per cent of the total financing of OHIP. This is a more appropriate level than the 23 per cent raise in 1975-76 and is a suitable long-run norm to maintain as 'Health care costs in future years.' Let me repeat that: 28 per cent of the total financing of OHIP from premium revenue would be a suitable long-term norm for the future."

Now, two years later, with the benefit of his latest thinking, we have the Treasurer come before us and say that is no longer acceptable, that 28 per cent as a long-term norm will now be adjusted to 34 per cent. We will, therefore, have our second increase in premiums in roughly two years, or three years depending on which way you wish to look at it.

I say to the Treasurer that the people of Ontario are being asked today to believe him when he says that premium revenues will now be expected to cover 34.1 per cent of the overall cost of the insured services within our health care scheme, in OHIP. The question I simply have to ask the Treasurer—one to which I hope he gives his full and conscientious consideration—is why should the poor, beleaguered, directly-paying subscriber in Newmarket believe the Treasurer of Ontario in 1978, when that poor, directly-paying subscriber in downtown Newmarket is now being forced to pay, if he is a family man, $528 worth of this incredibly regressive tax, when it is clear there was no cause to have believed the Treasurer in 1976?

Not since Lyndon Johnson has any political jurisdiction seen credibility-gap politics like that which the Treasurer is preparing to offer us in this health care debate. I just have to ask and invite the Treasurer to tell us why it is the person in Newmarket should believe him today when he says that 34 per cent is now a suitable long-term norm. Realizing that my time is very limited, I want to conclude by saying that the Treasurer in his budget offers, as he has in the past, a substantive reason and cause for continuing and maintaining the premium mechanism, which is nothing more than a fitting tribute to this government's continuing reliance upon a private Blue Cross mentality to run a public medicare scheme. They have not yet sorted out the contradictions that are inherent in that kind of situation.

Mr. McClellan: Socialist medicine.

Mr. Conway: Socialist medicine, absolutely.

The only reason we are given to believe for maintaining the premium mechanism by the illustrious Treasurer in this and other budgets of recent years is that, as he says, "Premiums retain a visible link with the cost of services." What I have to ask the Treasurer again is, taking into consideration no one more humble than myself: what is the visible link in this premium for me as a member of this assembly who has, as he points out later in that budget, the entirety of the premium increase covered as a fringe benefit? For the hon. member for Yorth North and myself this visible link is nothing more than a pay raise.

I admit there is an indirect aspect but it is very indirect, as the hon. Treasurer knows. There just is not any visibility to it. If nothing else, I want before these deliberations conclude to have the Treasurer in a quiet or less quiet way admit to the absolute bankruptcy of that argument. When he tells us that 75 per cent of the premium revenue in this province is a function of fringe benefits within various collective agreements, he is admitting without equivocation that there is no visibility maintained today within the premium mechanism.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Wait till you fill out your income tax.

[4:30]

Mr. Conway: If the Treasurer wants to maintain the premium mechanism as a good Tory like he would very possibly want to do, I invite the Treasurer to plan for tomorrow's or next week's consideration, an explanation as to just how visible that is for the vast majority of people who have their premiums paid without their ever seeing what it costs in terms or what we all acknowledge to be seriously expensive, but no doubt worthwhile, health care services.

The arguments which the Treasurer has put forward simply do not wash. The premium mechanism is not relevant as it is maintained today; it is clearly not a visible link: The Treasurer's own budget is a clear demonstration of that fact.

Furthermore, I want some assurance from the Treasurer as to why we should believe him today when he forces the poor Minister of Health to go cap in hand with his order in council saying that now 34 per cent of insured health services is a suitable long-term norm, when two years ago that kind of position was prepared and then completely abandoned within two budgets.

There is a clear credibility gap in the Treasurer's Tory and financial thought in this respect. That and other kinds of issues are what this responsible opposition party wants to invite a serious and responsible discussion about tomorrow and during the next few weeks in the social development committee. At that time I fully expect, as part of a responsible opposition, to frame alternatives that are going to meet with the approval of that vast majority of people in this province who understand, on the one hand—

Mr. Cassidy: You're stumbling now.

Mr. Conway: —that they have, by and large, a good health care system, but one which is becoming expensive and which must be paid for in a progressive, fair and equitable fashion.

Mr. Breaugh: I rise to support this motion. I am a little taken aback. I must say, by the vehemence that I saw during the question period today from the Liberal Party of Ontario in opposing this premium increase and yet within a two-hour period they manage to rise and somehow find it within themselves to support the government on the very same issue.

I think that tendency in that particular Liberal Party has been noted before. I believe it is now enshrined in Canadian parliamentary procedure as "flip-flopperism."

I think this is one of the most important debates we have had in this House for some time, because there are very few things that we will find affecting the people of Ontario in such a direct and serious way. As the Minister of Health pointed out, this particular service applies to almost everyone in the province. It has been a matter of considerable controversy over the last several years, and has taken what was once a very great promise of providing a universal health-care assistance to the people of Ontario that was the best in the world, into something of a crisis situation.

The increase which is the focal point of this particular debate is a substantive one. If you really look at what an average wage earner will take home, the premium they will now pay is about 8.4 per cent of the average industrial wage for a family of four. That is a substantial amount of money for a service that is there whether you use it or not. In effect, it is a very great source of taxation which, of course, is precisely the use to which this government has chosen to put it.

It is unusual again that in the province of Ontario the premiums we are paying for health care turn out to be twice as high as anywhere else in the country. It is unusual again that in the province of Ontario we are still struggling to get parity with Newfoundland. We are looking at a province that is supposedly among the poorest in the nation yet can provide a health care service with no premium, as opposed to the province of Ontario, supposedly the richest in the nation, that has the highest premium all across the country.

I think, too, it is interesting to note that the type of taxation and the effect this will have is rather serious. You know, we seem to have a Treasurer who is very fond of saying that if you didn't see the theft take place, it didn't happen. And we keep hearing again and again—and, of course, I listened to the Minister of Health say it again this afternoon—"Well, if they are on some kind of social assistance they won't pay, so they're not screaming. If they're over 65 they won't pay, so they're not screaming." In effect he said that if they are not paying the premium they won't notice the pinch. Well, that's true.

I listened to him make the argument, and I have listened to the Treasurer make the argument, that most of these things are employee benefits and therefore they won't feel the pinch again. Not now; but you see it doesn't even recognize that employee benefit package is really a matter of one's salary as well. In addition to the kind of increase one sees in terms of premium, one negotiated that package. That's part and parcel of one's pay cheque and that cost will be passed on eventually. If we want to run down a short list, these health benefits are taxable for the employees. If his net income is higher, then his taxation rate is also higher. Many of these benefits are negotiated as a package. Additional benefits, if paid by the employer, will be at the expense of other items.

Thirdly, where municipal governments pay all health benefits, the additional burden can only be met through increased municipal taxation. It's another load on the taxpayer. Fourthly, these employee benefits are a tax deductible item for some employers. It seems strange in a period of high unemployment we would load onto our system one more thing that will cut down the number of jobs and will increase costs. That's a rather strange and unusual way to go about it.

I must say I find the tendencies of this government strange in a number of ways. I read with great interest the Taylor committee report. It strikes me that once again the victim is being accused of the crime. We're looking at people who are sick and using the health care system and saying they are the ones at fault. That strikes me as being a weird perspective indeed.

I think we may well see an opting out of this system. We may see it at several levels. We may see doctors opting out of a system that is falling into disrepute and we may well see patients opting out of a system simply because they can't afford the premiums. I think those phenomena are there.

Once again we see this government chasing the same target group again, namely, those people who work for a living. They're after them again and they're going to get them with another form of taxation. This time they're calling their taxation a health care premium. They're at them again.

We're negotiating a fee schedule. Even though the budget is up substantially again this year and the Treasurer is making his argument that the rate of taxation is roughly the same, we're chasing them again; and we still have not solved the problem of the fee schedule with the doctors. I wonder how close we are in this province to the phenomenon that we see in other parts of this hemisphere, that is one pays cash before he gets a delivery of health care services. I hope we do not see that. I hope we don't see all of these doctors opting out. I hope we don't see a day when on presentation of one's body at the hospital door he has to come out with his Chargex card before he gets any service. That phenomenon exists in North America. I hope we don't see that phenomenon in the province of Ontario, but I must say we're under rather uncertain conditions.

I find it particularly strange that though we have heard a great deal of discussion about administrative costs—and the Minister of Health made a case again today that it's rather good—we're having some difficulty getting to that information. As members may recall, we had a small disruption in the affairs of this House about a year ago when we sought that information. The information that is there and the controls that are on the administration, all of which supposedly are in place, all of which we in supposedly good faith accept, really are not subject to a great deal of public scrutiny.

We heard again today that we will not be able to get a detailed, in-house ministerial investigation of alternatives that they had. So it is very difficult to criticize a health care system that is large and expensive—that's true—but doesn't give to us as opposition members a full accounting of how it goes about its business and specifically what amounts are met for each account.

I caution that in this House we may be seeing with this particular concept of an increase in health care premiums the end of that universal health care system. I think we may be seeing a system that is virtually without control. It is perhaps not controlled as meaningfully or as openly as we as members of this particular party would like to see.

There are some dangers in all of that. I think that a health care system which has some rather magnificent people making a contribution to it in terms of medical staff is falling into disrepute. We have a real danger here that more and more people, whether they are doctors or whether they are patients, will opt out of this system. I see a great difficulty coming before the House that must be dealt with.

I find it inconceivable, frankly, that the members of this House would do anything but support this particular amendment. I think it's so important to say to this government at this time that they have acted in an unacceptable manner to this House, that they have sought to tax the people of Ontario for a service that's in question, but which is certainly much needed.

I do wish that for once in their lives the Liberals would vote the same way at least twice in succession. I would hope that this afternoon when we call the vote on this one we will see them vote in a manner that will be precisely the same as when they begin questioning the minister before that committee hearing tomorrow afternoon. Unfortunately, I am not sure that that is going to happen. We will see, but it strikes me that one either supports this premium increase or one doesn't, and if one doesn't support it one votes for this particular no-confidence motion. That is clearly and precisely what it is all about. I will be grossly disappointed if I hear them posturing on one hand that they don't like the OHIP premium increase—

Mr. Stong: You are shunning your responsibility.

Mr. Braugh:—and on the other hand not voting at all this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take a few minutes to lay before the Legislature some of the facts that brought about the decision in the budget to increase the premium levels of OHIP beginning on May 1.

Much has been written in the past few weeks about the financial imbalance in the health care sector of Ontario. This imbalance occurs because expenditures under OHIP increased considerably faster than revenues earmarked for OHIP, namely premiums. As a result, there is constant pressure to finance this chronic revenue shortfall. The pressure was particularly strong this year because of our balanced budget objective. Everybody now realizes the importance of balancing the budget; the benefits to each citizen will be substantial.

Mr. Cassidy: Like seven per cent unemployed.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But if we do not have the revenue to finance our day-to-day services we will have to cut back on those services. And no one wants this to happen, especially if those services are health related.

Mr. Wildman: How about balancing the economy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think that even the members opposite will agree that new funds for health care are needed. Anyone who can add and subtract must reach that conclusion. The question then becomes one of where does the government find the new money.

Mr. Laughren: That's right.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The financing of health care is now the total responsibility of each province, since we established the programs of financing a year ago. We cannot go to Ottawa and ask for a better deal on a cost-sharing arrangement that no longer exists. We must therefore look to our own sources. I felt the responsible way to increase revenue was to raise premiums.

The leader of the New Democratic Party has called for hundreds of millions more in government spending, financed by a massive increase in corporation income tax.

Mr. Samis: Massive? How massive?

Mr. Wildman: Massive? Two per cent?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: So I would imagine that he would also suggest that the revenue raised by the OHIP premium increase could be found by increases also in corporation income taxes.

I will be frank. I considered increasing the corporation income tax, but I don't think it would be appropriate to load the entire $271 million increase onto the corporate sector.

An hon. member: Why not?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It would take three points of corporation income tax to raise that kind of revenue. Such an increase would give us the highest corporation income tax in Canada.

Mr. Wildman: Instead we have the highest premiums.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That would cut profits, reduce incentives, and seriously undermine our competitive position. That, of course, is of little importance to New Democrats, because they have no use for corporate competitiveness or profitability.

Mr. Samis: Baloney.

Mr. Martel: That's nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: That's nonsense.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But let's face it, profits are the foundation on which our economy has grown and renewed business confidence is crucial to the economic resurgence in Ontario. Business expectations are extremely sensitive to changes in the corporation income tax. Any increase in the corporation income tax would be paid for by the more successful corporations—precisely those corporations to which I look for much of our new investment and new jobs.

Ms. Gigantes: Like Inco.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: At the same time, by increasing OHIP premiums, I did not let the corporate sector escape untouched. As I have often pointed out, the OHIP premium increase is shared between corporations and individuals. It is my opinion that an affordable increase on both employers and employees is better than leaving either the corporation or the consumer to pay the full shot. As well, the OHIP increase is diffused over a large part of the corporate sector, because those firms who do not show taxable income contribute as well as those firms paying income tax.

In the formulation of any budget strategy, maintenance of our competitive position must be of crucial importance. As my budget demonstrated, the increase in OHIP premiums still leaves Ontario more than competitive in the field of payroll taxation—a direct cost of doing business.

Mr. Laughren: Talk about personal taxes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Considering that we also have one of the most competitive corporate tax structures in North America, I believe the OHIP increase will raise much-needed revenue in a way consistent with our policy of maintaining a competitive climate.

Mr. McClellan: It's consistent with your policy of regressive taxation.

[4:45]

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Of course I would expect the New Democratic Party would have fundamental objections to our way of doing things; ideology dictates that position.

Mr. Laughren: So does yours.

Ms. Gigantes: So does common sense.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But I think I might have expected more from the official opposition. To me, the input of the Liberals and their leader has been distinctly second-rate.

Mr. Cassidy: They are supporting you. Why get so nasty?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member for Hamilton West has informed everyone that we should have prevented the OHIP increase by cutting back on expenditures. That is easy to say but he has yet to suggest how to do it.

The Leader of the Opposition is aware that public federal figures show that Ontario has by far the lowest increase in provincial local spending per capita on health for the five-year period ending March 31, 1977. With our spending control in 1977-78 and this year, we expect this performance has been maintained. The budget shows for 1978-79 expenditures by the Ministry of Health as $3.945 billion. Payments to hospitals are tightly constrained by an average inflation allowance of only 4.5 per cent. Payments to doctors are targeted to grow in line with our constraint approach.

Where does the Leader of the Opposition suggest, then, that we find the $271 million which premiums will yield? Would he freeze the wages and salaries of hospital employees? Since the projected increase in wages and salaries in the hospital sector is only about one-third of the $271 million target, would he reduce hospital staff by 10,000 or so positions to find the remainder? Or—I say to the member for Brant—would he cut back on payments to doctors? The budget shows only a $37 million increase over last year. Perhaps he would suggest OHIP not cover out-of-province claims? The savings would not be substantial, but Ontario travellers would be subjected to the potentially disastrous situation of footing their own health costs abroad. Or just perhaps the member would remove government support for psychiatric services. If he dropped psychiatric services and the related homes for special care, he could save us the $271 million. The good doctor should tell us—the member for Renfrew North did not—what his prescription is for reducing health costs. We should have his answer in writing so that we could all read it.

The Leader of the Opposition also stated that should cost reductions not be possible, then we would need increased revenue. He suggests that this revenue should be raised for example through the personal income tax. So now we differ only in means.

Increasing the personal income tax at this time is just as bad an idea as the suggestion of increasing corporation income tax. Economic performance is also very sensitive to personal income tax. A personal income tax increase could damage consumer confidence—

Mr. Wildman: So could an OHIP increase.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and the implications of this are unacceptable as are the implications of reduced corporate confidence.

Mr. Wildman: Oh come on.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Even the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) thought better of his leader's idea to raise income tax, although he left us with the helpful suggestion that there must be "a better way." That has been the contribution of the financial critic of the Liberal Party to date. It is, I would point out, the opposition's prerogative to play cute rather than come up with good, workable ideas.

There is the obvious suggestion, of course, of raising the retail sales tax from seven per cent to eight per cent. The beauty of that scheme is that is roughly the amount of money which would be raised by one percentage point on the RST happens to be roughly equivalent to the amount being raised this year in OHIP premiums.

It has also been suggested that the answer is using lottery proceeds to finance part of health expenditures. I believe the member for London Centre mused about that possibility. I agree, it is an alternative. But it is important to view this alternative in light of some hard facts. For 1978-79, there will be an estimated $100 million in lottery proceeds. This is a considerable revenue, but it represents under 40 per cent of the OHIP premium increase. So a full year's lottery revenue would cover about $2 of the $6 per month OHIP increase for single persons and $4 of the $12 per month OHIP increase for families.

But we do not have a full year's revenue, since part of those proceeds from the lotteries are already committed. Proceeds from the Provincial for example are earmarked for health and environmental research, while Wintario proceeds are spent for cultural and recreational projects which improve the quality of life in Ontario. Such expenditures, I would suggest, are not to be dismissed lightly in the hope of finding a quick way to offset some of the OHIP increase. We can all think about the lottery approach, but it is important to keep it in the proper perspective.

It is our intention to continue to maintain quality health care services and I firmly believe that I have found the route to ensure this. Both corporations and individuals will pay more for our health care system, but in a way that does not have the negative implications for confidence associated with income taxation. This is what is accomplished by the OHIP premium increase. As well, an increase in OHIP premiums emphasizes the need to control usage of the system. For most Ontarians, OHIP premiums are a visible link with the costs of health care and, as such, an increase in premiums acts as a signal to continuing cost pressures.

Mr. Cassidy: That's a specious argument.

Mr. Wildman: You can't prove that and you know it.

Mr. Cassidy: There is no visible link there at all.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I believe it is important to maintain this relationship between health revenue and health costs.

Mr. Laughren: Mainly because it's regressive.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The OHIP increase will not be squandered. Constraints of the magnitude that we have applied squeeze any waste from the system. Our health care system is efficiently administered; administration costs are more than comparable with privately run plans. The premium increases will allow us to continue to provide top-quality medical and institutional services, without infringing on the financial resources that we must have to meet our other important public responsibilities.

I would be the first to admit that the OHIP premium system is not without its drawbacks. I am specifically referring to the impact the new levels have on certain individuals and families. While we substantially broadened the taxable income ranges within which premium assistance is available, there will no doubt be some persons whose income just slightly exceed the criteria.

Mr. Laughren: You're not kidding.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I want to assure the Legislature that I am currently reviewing ways to alleviate any sharp changes arising through the new premium levels.

Mr. Cassidy: Roll back the increase.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would hope, however, that all members read my letter to the editor of the Globe and Mail of March 16. This letter dispelled the notion—

Mr. Cassidy: It didn't dispel it—never to your satisfaction.

Mr. Samis: That's in your estimation and yours only.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —that at the new premium rates, the tax structure in Ontario is not comparable with the rest of Canada. There had been some press coverage that indicated this was so, and I feel that was misleading. The record shows that we have a tax structure comparable with that of other provinces in Canada.

Ms. Gigantes: Where are your figures?

Mr. Cassidy: Where are your figures?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The motion put forward by the New Democratic Party obviously should be rejected.

Mr. Laughren: You don't have to worry.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I imagine that this debate will be rekindled again in the standing committee on social development. I look forward to that debate. I thought it appropriate that I explain to those committee members, and to the Legislature, some of the thinking that shaped my decision with respect to premium increases in this year's budget.

Mr. McClellan: It is not thinking; it is instinct.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would hope that it would assist the committee members in their review and I am looking forward, as I have said, to the deliberations, the discussion and, most of all, the suggestions which will be put forward, I am sure, particularly by the official opposition, and we do wait, breathless, for their suggestions.

Mr. Sargent: You are looking for somebody to bail you out.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Their leader approaches now. Perhaps we will hear something from him, because we sure didn't hear anything from their first speaker, the member for Renfrew North.

Mr. Duszta: Mr. Speaker, the present OHIP premium increases will make health care for Ontario workers the most expensive in Canada. Those increases, which will cost the average family $528 per year, are symptomatic of deep-seated structural problems in Ontario's health care system.

What are we paying for and why are we paying so much? We are paying for an inequitable, unjust and expensive health care system. It is a system where control mechanisms are non-existent, where the product is often inferior and where profits or money to be made are more important than the concept of humane and essential service.

There are six essential problem areas which stand out in the existing health care system in Ontario.

1. That the focus of the system is on the cure of illness rather than on the elimination of those elements within our society which destroy health;

2. That those services which do exist are not equally accessible to all citizens as a result of economic and regional disparities;

3. That available health funds are badly misallocated.

4. That the quality of care is uneven and one's class origins determine how good is the care one gets and our "public" health system is significantly private and profit-oriented.

5. To pay for the health services even partially by the way of premium is a regressive form of taxation which penalizes the poorer segments of our society.

Ontario's health care system is publicly funded but its organization and logic is that of a private system. When public insurance system now called OHIP was introduced, no attempt was made to redesign the system itself. Consequently, physicians and health institutions behave much as they would in a private care system. Physicians, for example, behave as if they owned the system and believe that, in the name of helping the patient, the whole field of medicine is their private field and the rest of the health field professionals are their helpers.

Health care is hospital oriented. Hospitals are overwhelmingly oriented to capital-intensive, technology preoccupied systems. The high technology, capital-intensive system is very expensive. Ironically, the use of public funds to pay for the system has not resulted in substantially increased access to services for poor and moderate income earners, but has turned the health care field into a high profit area for capital.

It is instructive to look at health care systems from a point of view of a capitalist investor. Parts of the health care system are extremely profitable for an enterprising capitalist, especially in Ontario. One can invest heavily and very profitably in laboratories, in nursing homes, and in industries providing drugs, equipment and high technology:

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Mr. Duszta: The high profit areas are left to the private interests which are largely controlled from outside Canada. Labour in the health field is tamed and prevented from striking by being legislated as an essential service and consequently underpaid in comparison to other industries. The managers of the system, the physicians, are so well paid for their labour and so independent of the patients, their shareholders, so to speak, that they behave as masters of the system.

But this type of industry has its problems. It is after all a service industry and service industries left to the vagaries of a free enterprise system are notoriously expensive and the market—this is the patients—can fail at times to pay for the system. The solution for that problem of profit irregularity is to have the whole system publicly funded. And, even better, to pass off the whole profit-oriented system as a public service. In the perfectly ordered capitalist Ontario, those who cannot afford to pay pay more, and those who can pay easily pay less. What is just in the Tory-governed world is that a family that earns $8,000 per year and a family that earns $80,000 per year both pay $528 in annual OHIP payments.

The Conservative government continues to open the public Treasury to medical entrepreneurs, saying, "This money represents not tax money raised in the name of better health for all Ontarians but a marketplace. Treat it as such. Take what the market will bear."

The NDP does not agree that illness, pain and suffering should be a happy hunting ground for free enterprise. It believes that curative treatment is less efficient than a comprehensive system of preventive care. Therefore, a government which wishes to be truly effective in improving health must be willing to acknowledge the interaction of health, work and education and shift resources and manpower away from the sham "curative" system into preventive health, primary care, and a broadly-based social services system.

Five principles underlie our own approach:

1. We must focus in positive health measures, not on illness treatment.

2. The person's biological, emotional and social needs are inseparable. Therefore, they must be dealt with together.

3. All members of society have a stake in the health system. As a result, people must participate in the making of those decisions which directly affect their own health.

4. Health is a right, not a privilege. Consequently, necessary quality health care must be equally accessible to all.

5. The right to health services is as basic in a democracy as the right to education or the right to vote. Experience has proved that the only way to provide these health services for all who need them is through a plan to which all contribute according to their means and upon which all can draw in time of need.

[5:00]

Consequently, a New Democratic government would progressively abolish health care premiums, financing the entire cost of health services by means of the graduated income tax and corporate tax. Health workers would be remunerated in accordance with a schedule determined in negotiation with the provincial government. In a health care system based on community clinics and the team approach, the fee-for-service method of payment would have become progressively an anachronism and would gradually disappear.

Since the establishment of the community centres would be on a pilot project basis and would take time to implement, the present system of family physicians paid on a fee-for-service basis would remain temporarily, although incentives would be provided, concurrently, for physicians to enter the community centres. Eventually, the balance would shift decisively, perhaps entirely, to the community health and social services centres. While regional health councils and local clinics would determine community health priorities, control of the amount of provincial resources allocated to the health system and the guidelines for the distribution of these resources within the system would still be the function of the province.

In summary, let me say that the NDP government would take steps to reduce the profit motive in the health care system and return the health care to the public sector. I ask everyone here, especially the Liberal Party, to vote against this unconscionable increase in OHIP premiums which strikes directly at the particular segment of the working class of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: I certainly want to allow a little extra time for all the government members to resume their seats in the House. I know they're scurrying through the corridors to be here.

It's pretty obvious the health tax increase is wrong. It's absolutely wrong. The Treasurer is mistaken if he tries to suggest that not everyone in this province will suffer. In fact, almost everyone in this province will suffer from this regressive kind of taxation. It's painfully obvious to us and to anyone who has examined the situation that very few people can escape. That's a very large part of the argument. Very few can escape from the tax. Everyone understands that.

For the people who pay directly into the plan, the premium has suddenly gone up a great deal and they're going to have to pay that amount. But it's more than that. The large municipal governments, in fact any municipal government which hires civic employees, is now faced with paying a double tax. They're not only going to have to pay on behalf of their employees, but the taxpayers are going to have an extra burden on the property tax. The bill for Metro Toronto, for example, is $2 million. An extra $2 million is going to be added on to the property tax which the taxpayers in Metro have to pick up because of the Treasurer's move. We have a double tax.

It was outlined earlier by my colleague from Oshawa that the AIB will consider this to be part of a six per cent increase. It's allowable. It's exactly what they'll do. In addition to that, it will be considered to be taxable income. The $528 paid out for family coverage is taxable income. It's included in the amount of money. We already have so many workers in this province who are falling far behind the rate of inflation. The rate of inflation is about nine per cent and they've been held to pay increases of six per cent or less. Now, in real dollar terms they will receive even less money because of the OHIP tax increase.

Small business, obviously, has to pay directly out of their pockets to cover employees. Almost everyone in this province aside from those extremely rich people and aside from the presidents of corporations, is faced with a burden which is both regressive and extremely oppressive. Why the health tax increase at all? It should be quite obvious to all of us here. It was the one major source of revenue that the Treasurer could impose without legislation. It was his way of balancing the budget.

While previously in his terms it was quite all right to have the premiums account for 28 per cent of the cost, suddenly today it's not; it has to be higher, for reasons we don't know and for reasons which we are never given. While it was okay a couple of years ago for it to be 28 per cent, today it has to be 34 per cent.

That was never explained, but the reason is quite obvious. He did his accounting, he required $271 million and so he decided to use the health tax as the way to raise it.

Mr. Wildman: And he didn't have to bring in legislation.

Mr. Warner: He could do it behind closed doors. And make no mistake about it—Mr. Speaker, I know that you can appreciate this—the health premiums are a tax. There's no question about that, and everyone in here should understand that. It is a tax. When I put forward my private member's bill last Thursday, I was involved in discussing the matter with a constitutional law professor and it was his considered opinion, as it was of others, that there's absolutely no argument: it is a tax.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The courts don't agree.

Mr. Warner: The courts, in fact have agreed in past circumstances. The stumbling block in constitutional terms, quite unfortunately, is that this Legislature in 1972 gave away its rights and powers with respect to taxing as applied to OHIP. The government granted unto itself the power to levy taxes by order in council. They did that in 1972. It was wrong but the deed has been done and we must now live under that unfortunate mistake.

The real concern, of course, is that we can see an erosion of the principle of no taxation without legislation. Should we ever—I shudder to think of the day—be faced with a majority Tory government, they could amend whatever Acts they wanted to—the Tobacco Tax Act, the Liquor Act, you name it—to allow them to set taxes behind closed doors. That's what they are doing with every major source of revenue as one goes through the list. OHIP is one, of course; the others include the student tuition fees and car licence plates. They continue to erode the power and the stature of this Legislature. It's clearly a tax.

The question for all of us here in this assembly, knowing that the tax is wrong, knowing that it's the most regressive form of health tax found anywhere in Canada—six provinces are without a premium and the remaining three provinces, aside from Ontario, charge less than half the amount that's charged by Ontario—is, how do we oppose the government? That's a question which I am sure the Liberal Party must have discussed in their caucus meetings. We certainly did.

How do we oppose the government? The Liberals came up with a suggestion that they should oppose the government by way of a committee that would look at alternatives. That's a very reasonable suggestion. The stumbling block to it, which I think they realized later, was that the Treasurer had absolutely no intention of paying heed to that committee, and he still hasn't.

The fact of the matter is that the order in council was issued on the day following the budget, but it was not filed until after the Liberal Party had put forward its proposal for the committee. And it's on the day that the order in council is filed that it becomes law, and the government knows that. It was a defiant gesture to the Liberal Party, saying to them: "You can suggest whatever you want by way of committee, but we have no intention of doing anything else except to increase the health tax."

Mr. Martel: And the Liberals continue to delude themselves.

Mr. Warner: It is deliberate.

So we are left again. How do you oppose the regressive measure that has been brought forward? Because there is no legislation, as would have been in keeping with our parliamentary democratic principles, and because the committee is meaningless to the government, what is left? There is only one possible opposition, and that is a vote of no-confidence. We have no confidence in a government which would impose such regressive and oppressive health taxes upon the people of this province. I certainly have no confidence in that government. Maybe the Liberals do; but I don't.

That's why I am very proud today to stand and oppose the government in a very direct and honest way. I certainly feel sorry for those members of the Liberal Party who cannot do likewise; who can just allow the tax to be instituted without raising their voices in opposition and without doing the only practical thing which can be done; that is to oppose a government which does not understand how to deliver a health care system in Ontario, it cares only about balancing the budget by 1981.

Mr. Samis: I don't believe in that.

Mr. Warner: I support the no-confidence motion. I would hope that before the debate is over, the Liberal Party can reassess its position and force this government to do the only honourable and proper thing. That is to come back with a brand-new budget, without a health tax increase and to recognize the errors of their ways. The Liberals still have time; the people of Ontario may not have time.

Mr. S. Smith: I feel that the position of the parties on these matters is already very well known. I think the fact is that one is going through a ritual at this moment. We are here in this assembly on the fourth day of April—

Mr. Cassidy: It is only a ritual because you made it one.

Mr. Laughren: You made it a ritual.

Mr. S. Smith: —to vote on a motion which would plunge the province into an immediate election, when on the fifth day of April we shall be gathered here to have before us the minister responsible for this increase in the OHIP premium—

Mr. Cassidy: To do nothing.

Mr. S. Smith: —with an opportunity for us to examine what flimsy reasoning they may have had on which to base this increase. We can force them to face the people and explain their actions in this regard, and finally put before the people of Ontario alternative methods to deal with the financial situation now being faced by the province.

This, as far as I am concerned, is an opportunity for the opposition parties to participate in a constructive way in the process of being in opposition and the process of making the minority government operate in the interests of the people of Ontario.

I want to be very clear about this. The government will have an opportunity to deal with a number of alternatives which will come forward after we have had a chance to see all the information on which the government has based its present policies. Once we have had a chance to consider the various studies the government has made to justify its present policies, then we will be able to put forward alternatives for the people to judge, then we will expect action from the government.

Our objection to the NDP motion is not the words in the motion, it is simply the time of it. One day before the committee will be sitting down to look at this matter and come up with alternatives, strikes me as a highly irrational time to bring the entire assembly down.

Mr. Cassidy: And you will have the committee still sitting when the increase takes effect.

Mr. S. Smith: We will still have time before the new increase on May 1 to put forward alternatives. The government will have an opportunity to accept them in whole or in part, and I hope that the government will take that responsibility very seriously.
[5:15]

I had the opportunity to listen to some of the remarks that were read in this assembly by the Treasurer in his effort to explain why it is he raised the OHIP premiums $271 million. Some of his explanations really bear looking at.

In particular, what he seems to have said to the people of Ontario is that it's important for us to use the OHIP premiums to raise revenue, even though the money will have to come out of the pockets of ordinary citizens just as though it were coming out of income tax, and out of corporations just as though it were coming out of corporate tax, but he says the psychological effect will be less. He apparently has somehow or other divined that the corporations, when they pay the tax as a payroll tax, won't notice it as they might if it were part of the corporation tax.

He has somehow divined that when that 25 per cent of individuals who have to pay their own OHIP premiums are suddenly hit with the most regressive form of taxation available, which will hit a person earning $10,000 much, much harder than a person earning $100,000, he has divined that if you don't call it a tax on income, people won't realize that it's a tax on income and psychologically he will have preserved, somehow or other, a picture of Ontario, an imaginary picture which he is fond of painting throughout Canada, as a place with a marvelous tax structure.

Maybe in the circle in which the Treasurer happens to travel at the Albany Club they may like to hear about how wonderful his tax structure is. But the recent report which was put forward only two or three days ago in Ottawa indicates that because of these premiums those with incomes under $20,000 a year are now being more heavily taxed in this province than anywhere else in Canada.

That is a record which I think is shameful for the people of Ontario. We still have a sense of fair play in this province. We're going to have to have sacrifice in the future in this province because of the mismanagement of the present government. We know that people will be asked to sacrifice for the benefit of future generations, but this is a heck of a way to start—to start the sacrifices by burdening the people at the very bottom of the income ladder—and even worse than the people at the very bottom of the income ladder, we are burdening those who are still attempting to keep their head above water by actually working, in this day and age. when so many people find it easier to receive handouts from government.

Mr. Wildman: Who?

Mr. S. Smith: The people who are going to be hit hardest are the people who are trying to work, trying to keep their head above water, who are not getting their premiums paid for them by the government and they're being hit with the toughest stroke of all.

What does the Treasurer have to say for himself? First of all, two years ago he assured this province that the OHIP premiums had to be increased 45 per cent in order that the premiums pay for 28 per cent of insured health services. He said that was a suitable long-run norm.

Two years later he changed his mind, and what does he base it on in his statement today? The first thing he bases it on is the Henderson report. But he had the Henderson report in front of him when he brought forward his budget statement of 1976.

The other day he said he based it on the Ontario Council of Health report of 1973. Surely he must have already considered that report when he made his statement in 1976.

Now he says he bases it on the Taylor committee. Well, the Taylor committee based their statement entirely on the Treasurer's own statement of 1976, plus the Ontario Council of Health report of 1973, which pre-dated the Treasurer's statement by three years and which presumably had already been considered by the Treasurer.

He then adopts his usual tactic, which is the horror story tactic. Whenever we on this side—my predecessor as leader and since I have taken over as well—whenever we on this side say that the government is wasting money and over-spending and should cut a few hundred million from its budget, we hear from the Treasurer the horror story routine. You know what that routine is, Mr. Speaker? You say to the people of Ontario, "Smith wants to cut $200 million. Well let's just see where he'd cut it. If we cut it from the schools, that means 45,000 students would be huddled together in freezing classrooms, shorn of their teachers, bereft of heat and light probably, because schools will be shut down, furnaces will be shut off.

"If he saves the whole $271 million by laying off hospital staff, thousands and thousands"—10,000 persons, says he today—"will be without work."

He tells us year after year how impossible it is to cut any funds from his spending. He says his budgets are cut to the bone. He has the audacity to stand here and tell us this year after year, as though anyone would believe him.

Last year, after telling us in his budget he has cut things to the bone, that he had the most stringent budget cuts of anybody, after one quarter he saved $92 million in his expenditures without, as far as I can make out, anyone freezing in the schools or anyone being bereft of teaching possibilities. He saved $92 million, and he saved it throughout the budget in various ministries.

Then, only a few months later, when he realized he hadn't paid the teachers' super-annuation fund and he needed another $105 million, he saved $84 million in one quarter from his budget. He was able to save $16 million in Health, $7 million in Colleges and Universities, $9 million in Transportation and Communications and $14 million in Housing—all in one quarter.

That is the kind of fat he builds into the budget of the province of Ontario, and then has the nerve to come before us to say that anybody that says we can cut expenditures, anybody who says that, must surely mean that we are going to close hospitals, must surely mean that we are going to lay off thousands of persons and so on and so forth.

Mr. Foulds: The $14 million for housing was fat, was it?

Mr. S. Smith: The people of Ontario no longer believe that kind of utter rubbish which is all we have been getting from the Treasurer of Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: Both your arguments are fatuous.

Mr. S. Smith: He says an increase in OHIP premiums emphasizes the need to control usage of the system. I have never heard such drivel. The Treasurer, as a person who prides himself on facts, ought to be able to tell the truth to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: The Treasurer prides himself on drivel.

Mr. S. Smith: There are now two groups of people in Ontario; those who pay their own OHIP premiums and those for whom the government pays the OHIP premiums. According to the Treasurer, if one pays his premiums he is somehow going to be conscious of health costs and cut the usage. The facts indicate the opposite. Those who pay their own premiums actually have a higher utilization rate of the system than those for whom the government pays the premium. The Treasurer knows perfectly well that his so-called argument that if one raises the OHIP premiums people will use the system less does not hold water. In fact, it is just as reasonable to presume that once one is paying through the nose for a system his neighbours are using he might figure to get his money's worth and start using it even more himself.

Nowhere have the Minister of Health or the Treasurer told us what they are going to do to get doctors to stop doing unnecessary surgery. Nowhere have they told us how they are going to get the private lab system to stop its incredible growth from $4 million to $90 million over the course of about four years, all the while having been warned within their own ministry that that is precisely what was going to happen, even though we are no healthier as a consequence of that growth. Nowhere do we see indications that those hospitals with utilization committees which cut down the length of stay are going to be rewarded in their budget rather than punished by having budget cuts that cut into the bone, whereas other slothful hospitals have their budget cuts merely trimmed of a little of the fat, if even that much.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Which one are those?

Mr. S. Smith: Nowhere do we see how the Minister of Health or the Treasurer of Ontario are going to trim expenditures incurred by keeping patients in hospital too long or by admitting people to hospital for unnecessary surgery that could be done as outpatients. Nowhere do we see how they are going to trim the cost in these areas. Instead we see a so-called psychological program which is going to fall very heavily on the poor.

Who else will pay this particular OHIP premium. The Treasurer is very proud that it is going to be paid by corporations, even those who do not make a profit to have income tax.

Listen to this on page 3 of his statement today. "The OHIP increase is diffused over a larger part of the corporate sector because those firms who do not show taxable income contribute as well as those firms paying income tax." He is actually proud of that fact that companies that are hardly making enough money to pay any tax in the province of Ontario are now going to have a payroll tax piled upon them, which will have only one possible outcome—

Mr. Wildman: Oh come on!

Mr. S. Smith: —and that is to encourage people to hire fewer people. That is a fine policy by a Treasurer of a province with over 300,000 unemployed people at this time. The fact of the matter is that I do not know how the Treasurer has the ability to live with his own conscience when under his administration—

Mr. Laughren: How can you say that?

Mr. S. Smith: —the province of Ontario has now become the province that taxes the poor people the most heavily of any province in this country.

It is all very well for the Minister of Health to stand up and say that in British Columbia they may have to pay $5 a day for a hospital bed. So what, compared to what is happening to the poor in Ontario; the working poor in Ontario now have the worst taxation situation in the entire Dominion of Canada. That is the sorry legacy we have from the present government of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Vote no-confidence.

Mr. Cassidy: Vote against the government.

Mr. S. Smith: The OHIP premiums, as far as we are concerned—this increase from 28 per cent of health costs to 34 per cent of health costs—

Mr. Warner: You are working yourself up to no-confidence.

Mr. S. Smith: —has no basis, no justification. It is merely an effort by the Treasurer to raise revenue, in the most regressive way possible, but in a way that he thinks he can get away with because 75 per cent of the people have their premiums paid for them by somebody else; so he figures it is the easiest way he can raise revenue and save his political bacon at the same time.

Mr. Conway: Darcy the dangerous.

Mr. Foulds: Vote no-confidence in the government.

Mr. S. Smith: The Treasurer comments on Wintario funds. He says they wouldn't pay the whole $271 million. Well nobody ever imagined they would. But they could pay part of it. I haven't heard him give one intelligent reason why Wintario funds—that portion over and above the amount that one might want to keep for culture and recreation, let's say $25 million or $30 million could be kept for culture and recreation—why can the rest not be used for much more important purposes such as offsetting this most regressive and regrettable tax increase on the very poorest people in society?

The Treasurer has given no reason at all other than to say that it wouldn't cover the whole thing. We know that, but it would cover part of it; and other sources might cover other parts and savings might cover other parts of it. That is what I trust will come out of the committee deliberation.

The Treasurer will go around the province saying that I never provided him with alternatives. Of course if he tells this story long enough those who do not read Hansard may be so foolish as to believe him. Those who know what the Treasurer's credibility is, those who heard his statements in 1976 about 28 per cent being a suitable long term norm, know that his credibility is not to be trusted whatsoever and will not take him seriously.

Mr. Conway: Manthorpe will write—

Mr. S. Smith: The simple fact is that this party, after making very clear to the people of Ontario that the government prices and taxes must increase only according to the Anti-Inflation Board, is hardly in a position to be able to accept a 37.5 per cent OHIP premium increase.

Mr. Wildman: So vote with us.

Mr. S. Smith: By throwing this in our teeth, the Treasurer is fundamentally abrogating his responsibility to make minority government work. Minority government is not going to work if we are the only party that is willing to try to make it work. There has to be some co-operation, some give and take on all three sides.

We are prepared, therefore, to engage in tomorrow's committee work and the work thereafter in a constructive sense to provide alternatives for the people of Ontario to consider. At that point it will be the responsibility of the Treasurer and the government of Ontario—

Mr. Conway: One and the same thing.

Mr. S. Smith: —to accept reasonable alternatives or face our own vote of no-confidence following the committee deliberation. I tell the Treasurer very clearly, once again, that he has a responsibility to make minority government work and that we on this side in the official and the only responsible opposition—

Mr. Warner: There is a distinction between official and real.

Mr. S. Smith: —are not going to take the entire burden of making minority government work on our own shoulders. We will be reasonable and co-operative and constructive, but you are going to have to withdraw the 37.5 per cent OHIP premium increase.

We, of course, will not support the frivolous and posturing motion of the NDP—

Mr. Bounsall: Those are the only words in your vocabulary, you know.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: —a motion brought in only minutes after they could determine that we were not going to support it.

Mr. Cassidy: That is untrue.

Mr. S. Smith: Once they knew that we were going to go to committee—

Mr. Cassidy: That is not true.

Mr. S. Smith: —and then have their no-confidence motion, then they decided to bring in their motion.

Mr. Foulds: Osric, methinks thou dost protest too much.

Interjections.

[5:30]

Mr. S. Smith: I would suggest to the NDP that they just wait a few weeks and put their alternatives before the people of Ontario; we'll put our alternatives before them.

Mr. Warner: You haven't got any. You never had any alternatives.

Mr. S. Smith: The Treasurer and the Minister of Health will answer the questions of the committee as to what they base their fallacious policy on. Then we will have our chance to have an election, my friends.

Mr. Warner: Fiddle-de-dee and fiddle-de-dum.

Mr. S. Smith: Then we will have our chance to put before the people of Ontario where we stand and how we would do things differently.

Mr. Warner: You'll never oppose it.

Mr. S. Smith: Then we will have a chance to have a genuine debate on a no-confidence matter. But this is the sheerest nonsense and hypocrisy that has come before this House in some time.

Mr. Foulds: Certainly your speech has been.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: We will not support such a frivolous and ludicrous notion to bring down the House the very day before the committee is to sit to look at alternatives. What preposterous notions we hear coming from the NDP! But for a party that wants Michigan to freeze in the dark, that wants Saskatchewan not to be able to receive Ontario money —to set up a border between the provinces so that no money can cross the Ontario border headed for Saskatchewan—I expect almost anything from them.

Ms. Gigantes: What?

Mr. Foulds: That's a complete fabrication and you know it.

Mr. S. Smith: But bringing down the House the day before the committee is to look at the very alternatives that the people of Ontario are longing to hear and to understand is the height of irresponsibility and posturing and deserves no further comment from me.

Mr. Wildman: Has your party ever been able to show guts enough to vote against the government when you disagree?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to contribute to this debate on behalf of the only real opposition in the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. Conway: Did you circulate your private memo on this one too, Mike?

Mr. Cassidy: The most outrageous feature of the budget that the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) brought down a month ago was the increase of 37½ per cent in OHIP premiums. We in the New Democratic Party condemn as outrageous the government's decision to raise premiums which are already the highest in the country to a level which is now twice that charged in any other province.

We think it is wrong to impose this arbitrary and regressive tax increase on wage earners in general, on the farming community, on small business, and in particular on people of modest incomes.

Mr. Conway: How is Gordon Hill?

Mr. Cassidy: We further condemn the manner in which the government has proceeded to implement this increase quite as completely as we oppose the increase itself, because what the government is doing is violating the fundamental parliamentary principle of no taxation without legislation.

Mr. Laughren: Shameful.

Mr. Conway: Michael of Runnymede.

Mr. Cassidy: When the OHIP increase was announced, we vowed to fight it with every means at our disposal. That's why the New Democratic Party has brought this motion of no-confidence which we are debating today.

Mr. Conway: Have you got a memo privately circulated to that effect?

Mr. Cassidy: I want to begin my remarks this afternoon by explaining that we have come to a no-confidence motion in addition to our general amendment to the motion regarding the budget of the Treasurer—because this is the only way that this matter can be brought before the Legislature before the premium increases actually take effect.

Mr. Conway: You don't really want an election.

Mr. Cassidy: The budget motion will not be voted on until nearly the end of December of this year. There will be no bill implementing this particular tax increase, despite the fact that it is a tax increase, and the increases will actually take effect at the beginning of May.

If we are to stop this outrageous increase, the members of this House must act right now, not several months hence when it is a fait accompli and not, in fact, as the Leader of the Opposition pretends, after the committee has gone through a lengthy process of consideration and of deferral.

Mr. S. Smith: Two weeks.

Mr. Cassidy: As the new leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Conway: Soon to be the old leader.

Mr. Cassidy: —I had neither expected nor intended this early in my leadership to move a motion which could bring us to an election.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, sure! You even did it on Inco.

Mr. Cassidy: With a federal election pending, and with less than a year since the last election, when the voters of the province confirmed their repudiation of the Conservatives in 1975—

Mr. Mancini: And put you back in third place.

Mr. Cassidy: —there was a clear expectation across Ontario that the minority situation should be allowed to continue. We share that expectation—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Really?

Mr. Cassidy: —though we do not feel, and neither do the people of the province feel, that this minority government should ride roughshod over the opposition parties and act as they used to do in the arrogant years when they had a majority.

On the presumptuous, sanctimonious, dogmatic, incompetent, and uncaring record of the government in this session so far—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Are you describing yourself, Michael?

Mr. Cassidy: —we in the NDP would welcome the chance to take on the Tories in an election if that is the outcome of our motion today.

Mr. Conway: The member for Cornwall winses.

Mr. Cassidy: It is not necessarily true though that the price Ontario will pay to rescind the increase in OHIP premiums is necessarily an election. If the official opposition had, at any time over the three weeks since we filed our motion, indicated that they intended to support it, then the ball would have been in the government's court. At that point it would have been entirely in keeping with the spirit and practice of minority government for the government then to have withdrawn the premium increases rather than provoke an election and would have made the debate we are having today unnecessary. And if that was so and it provoked the resignation of the Treasurer as well, Mr. Speaker, so much the better, in view of his inaction in the face of unprecedented unemployment and the economic problems we have in the province.

Mr. Breagh: That alone should turn you around, Sean.

Mr. Conway: That's a very poor civic lesson.

Mr. Cassidy: It amused me that the member for Renfrew North suggested with horror that there might be another outcome from a no-confidence motion that was voted upon today. He suggested the Lieutenant Governor might actually call his party to form a government and then he went on to say that the only thing worse than a Conservative government would have been a Liberal government and we agree.

Mr. Conway: I know it's hard but tell the truth.

Mr. S. Smith: That's what you are going to get at the next election.

Mr. Cassidy: Nevertheless, I want to call upon the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues to join us now in voting in this House as they have spoken outside it to stop the OHIP increase.

The Liberal leader has postured before the public for the last month as an opponent of the higher premium.

Interjections.

Mr. O'Neil: You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Cassidy: In the last week he has discovered the things we were saying the moment that this budget came down—about the way in which this OHIP premium increase makes people earning less than $20,000 a year the most highly taxed people in any province of the country.

Mr. Foulds: Shameful. Positively shameful.

Mr. Cassidy: But the strength of the Liberal commitment to resist this outrageous tax increase will be demonstrated, not in the rhetoric they put before the cameras or the committees, but at the outcome of today's debate in about 10 minutes.

Mr. O'Neil: You can put it before the committee.

Mr. S. Smith: You are getting more irresponsible every day, Mike.

Mr. Cassidy: For the last few weeks the Liberals have been floundering around trying to find some way to avoid straightforward opposition to this increase. They have been saying it is possible to find some alternative by sending the increase to a standing committee.

Mr. O'Neil: Warmonger.

Mr. Cassidy: That position is nothing but bunk. The government's agreement to have the discussion in committee was hailed by the Leader of the Opposition as—and I quote: "A major breakthrough."

Mr. O'Neil: It sure is. It is what we want.

Mr. Cassidy: But the government thought so much of the breakthrough that they went ahead and implemented the change anyway and they actually had the effrontery to file the order in council to authorize the higher premium after they had agreed to the examination of alternatives in committee. That's one hell of a breakthrough, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. W. Newman: Watch your language.

Mr. Cassidy: It just is not credible. In the NDP we have made our opposition to this increase clear from the day it was announced. We are prepared to act as we have spoken and we will resist this government's bid to collect more money from the individual citizens of Ontario in health insurance premiums by every means possible. We believe that is wrong that more should be raised in Ontario from health insurance premiums than from the entire business community in corporation tax.

I want to say that we are going to be absolutely straight about our position on this issue.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That will be a switch.

Mr. S. Smith: That will be interesting.

Hon. B. Stephenson: A change.

Mr. Cassidy: When we filed this motion we knew that it could lead to an election. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if this motion were to come back in four or five weeks' time because, as we expect, the committee had not come up with any workable alternative in the way the Liberals are looking for, if this motion comes back and is proposed by some other party we will support it.

Mr. Ruston: You're making a promise now.

Mr. Cassidy: We think it is shameful for the province of Ontario to be levying health insurance premiums at a level which is so much higher than those that prevail in all other provinces. It is because of the government's gross mismanagement of the economy that the Treasurer is now trying to extract more than $270 million from the citizens of the province by this particular measure.

In fact, it is as an excuse for their failure to ensure a high level of economic activity and therefore make the private sector prosperous that the Treasurer and his colleagues have renewed their attack on the public sector by means such as increasing the charges for social services, which they introduced during their own tenure in office.

We are particularly concerned because of the impact of the OHIP increases on hundreds of thousands of ordinary people in this particular province. Any flat rate change in OHIP premiums is bound to be regressive and is bound to bear most harshly on those who can least afford to pay. This increase hits particularly hard at people on low and modest incomes, at farmers and small businessmen and at people who are unemployed and don't have the benefit of employer-paid coverage. These people and other people who don't have employer-paid health insurance must meet the entire increase from their own small incomes. Not only that, but even people whose employers bear the cost of some or all of their health costs will pay for the increase, either by a reduction in the wage increases that they need to offset the impact of inflation on their real incomes or they will pay because of the ceilings to which they are subjected because of the continuation of the Anti-Inflation Board.

I want to read you a couple of letters, Mr. Speaker, that I have had to indicate how people across this province feel about the health premium increases.

Mr. Conway: Do you need a Kleenex?

Mr. Cassidy: One lady wrote and said: "I am very discouraged as my income amounts to about $4,000 to $5,000 yearly and such an increase would cause me great hardship."

Hon. B. Stephenson: She was eligible for premium assistance.

Mr. Cassidy: Another lady who works for a small non-profit organization and is paying OHIP direct said: "My taxable income was $2,200 this past year, so I was ineligible for assistance. A raise has just put me over the new limit for assistance this year too."

Hon. B. Stephenson: She is wrong.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: She is wrong.

Mr. Cassidy: There are people in my riding, Mr. Speaker, who are living in assisted housing because they cannot afford private housing and from whom almost every penny in their wage increase this year will be taken because of the premiums they have to pay and because of their rent, which is geared to income.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: The lady I mentioned goes on to complain: "It is grossly unfair"—and we agree—"that a single low-wage earner should pay $264 a year for coverage when a millionaire with six kids pays only $528."

She concludes with the following words, which I have seen again and again: "People in my position feel the injustice of the payment system intensely. We are frustrated and have little power or influence. All we can do is express our frustrations and anger and cast our votes in the next election for a party that will introduce a more equitable system."

Mr. S. Smith: We will accept their votes.

Mr. Cassidy: Those calls have come in the hundreds. We've had enormous numbers of letters come in as well from people who are angry, upset and don't know what to do.

Interjections.

Mr. O'Neil: They are all going to vote Liberal next time.

Mr. Cassidy: They are offended—and they include former Conservatives—at the fact that this matter is not coming before the Legislature as it should properly do.

It is not, however, just the single human cases which have led us to table this motion of no-confidence. The premium increase is symptomatic of a budget which can only be described as the worst produced by a Conservative Treasurer within living memory.

The last thing that the private sector of the economy needs today is a tax increase of $270 million, which will take that much purchasing power out of the pockets of Ontario consumers. The last thing that the 326,000 unemployed people in Ontario need today is a budget which, by continuing the machinery tax exemption—

Hon. Mr. Norton: How do you propose to pay for it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: He has no suggestions.

Mr. Cassidy: —will actually destroy 14,858 more jobs than it creates.

Hon. Mr. Norton: So you are suggesting we borrow another $270 million?

Mr. Cassidy: I'm not impressed by the Treasurer talking about the need for a visible link, as he calls it, between the level of premiums and what people get in health care. If the Treasurer wants a visible link to exist, then he and the Minister of Health should have come together a long time ago and issued to every citizen in the province an Ontario health insurance charge card on which everybody who had health services would see what they are being charged for the services and would have to sign before that hospital, that doctor, that pharmacist or whoever else was involved could actually bill OHIP for those particular health services. If the government wants responsible scrutiny of whether people are getting value for money, that's the way to do it and not through this particular premium increase.

Mr. Laughren: That's right.

Mr. S. Smith: We suggested that long ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Nor are we impressed by the Treasurer's arguments about the corporation tax, because the Treasurer who moans and groans about the competitive situation of industry in the province is quietly putting forward a $121 million tax increase for corporations through the payroll tax that they will pay through their contributions in cases where employers are covered for health premiums.

[5:45]

We put forward a responsible proposal that would have taken concessions to industry from last year, and that particular amount the Treasurer felt as justified, and we would have imposed a two point increase in the corporation tax in Ontario. We felt that was responsible and that's in answer to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and to the Minister of Community and Social Services.

We put forward, as well, a responsible budget on behalf of the New Democratic Party that would have created 46,000 jobs this year as compared to 142 jobs—all that were coming forward from the government in their budget. This was at a time of seven per cent unemployment, and more than 300,000 people without work in this province.

In our budget we put forward a responsible long-term program in order to build the economy of this province rather than continue to destroy it in the way that the Conservatives have been doing these many years.

In our budget, and in my reply on behalf of the New Democratic Party, we put forward responsible suggestions for ways so we could ensure there would be jobs in the future in this province, and that we would not have the continuation of layoffs and the shutdowns which are plaguing our workers today and are undermining our economy. These suggestions are good suggestions. In fact some of them are now coming back to us because the government has no ideas of its own but has reluctantly agreed to take good suggestions—

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: —from the New Democratic Party.

But I want to suggest as well that it is irresponsible for the government to continue, as it has been doing, to attack the public sector for the Tories' failure to keep the economy of this province strong, both in the public and private sector. We believe that what is essential is to build up both sectors of the economy and ensure that there is an adequate economic base so people can have jobs and the tax revenues will be available so that this kind of regressive measure is not a necessity or is not imposed in Ontario.

Finally, I want to underline again the outrageously arbitrary manner in which this government failed to bring in legislation to implement the increases as it has to do with all other tax measures announced in the budget.

A year or two ago this party opposed a proposal related to a tax on cans. That was also opposed by the other opposition party and the government withdrew it because tax legislation would have had to come forward. I want to suggest that it would have been responsible to bring the legislation forward and find out what the opposition parties were prepared to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Your party used to be in favour of banning cans.

Mr. Cassidy: If premium increases had been legislated by this Legislature, we would obviously have opposed it. I haven't a clue in the world what the Liberal Party would have done with that measure.

An hon. member: Neither do they.

Mr. Cassidy: In order to make that a reality, my colleague, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, presented a private member's bill to amend the Health Insurance Act and to require the government to seek the consent of this House for OHIP increases. That bill, which was debated last Thursday, could have been put into law in time that we could have had it before us before May 1. But the government saw to it that 20 Conservative members stood in their places last Thursday to block the member's bill and to repudiate the great parliamentary principle that taxation may only be imposed by legislation.

Hon. Mr. Norton: There already is legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: We believe that no taxation should be imposed without the consent of the people's representatives in parliament. That's why we brought the private member's bill last week and that is why we are using the only other device open to us, which is this no-confidence motion.

I want to read it, again, into the record. It is a good motion. I ask all members of the Legislature to support the motion and to roll back this particular premium increase.

"Resolved: That this House condemns the government's outrageous decision to raise Ontario health insurance premiums to the highest level in Canada; deplors the regressive impact of this arbitrary tax increase on wage earners in general, on farmers and small business, and in particular on people of modest income; and condemns the government's affront to the fundamental parliamentary principle of no taxation without legislation; and that for all these reasons this House no longer has confidence in the government."

Resign!

Mr. Ruston: It's a charade, that's all it is.
[6:00]

The House divided on Mr. Cassidy's motion, which was negated on the following vote:

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

TENANT PROTECTION (concluded)

Resuming the adjourned debate on government notice of motion 11 with reference to sessional paper 13, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations' report on the policy options for continuing tenant protection, to the standing committee on general government.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of a quorum, do you not believe we should ring the bells?

Clerk of the House: There is not a quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, I would like to remind hon. members that the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) raised a matter concerning the portion of the motion dealing with coverage by Hansard.

I undertook to consider the matter further but I have not changed my position which I stated on Friday. That is, there is no impediment to the House ordering in a specific motion the coverage of any meeting in any manner in which the collective House sees fit.

I now recognize the hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious that earlier the members were not aware that I would be speaking at 8 o'clock, but that's been—

Interjections.

An hon. member: That's precisely why they weren't here.

Mr. Epp: Why would you misrepresent the House so quickly?

Mr. Warner: You will recall, Mr. Speaker, when we broke off last, the minister of corporate protection entered into a debate with myself—

Mr. Cureatz: We are trying to forget.

Mr. Warner: —over the original terms of reference, which really underlies the basic reason why we should not be accepting this resolution that's put in front of us. I had made the point earlier that it is temporary legislation and that the government is engaged in withdrawing tenant protection and the minister made the point that we had talked about temporary legislation.

He is absolutely correct; we had both spoken about temporary legislation. But there is a difference. We spoke of temporary legislation in terms of the housing needs in the province of Ontario. We said tenants need rent protection so long as there is an inadequate supply of rental accommodation in the province. Such obviously continues to be the case.

The government on the other hand clearly identified in its introductory paragraph of its red/green paper, and I quote: "Ontario's current rent review program was conceived as a temporary program complementary to the federal government's anti-inflation program."

But it isn't just in their paper. If we refer back to the introduction of rent review on November 6, 1975, we will find that the statement in the rent review document given to us is entirely consistent with the statement made by the minister at that time, the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes): "It should also be viewed in the context of the federal government's anti-inflation measures, which it is designed to complement."

From the outset it was determined that the rent review program would be temporary and that it would be in connection with the anti-inflation program of the federal government, but really there was no commitment in here that rent review should be in terms of rental accommodation or the supply of adequate housing. There is no reference to that in the statement by the then minister.

In fact, what is interesting is that that minister went on and made a commitment on behalf of the government in that statement of November 1975. He said: "Hopefully we will be able to interest builders in our housing programs in the new federal housing initiative, so that notwithstanding the controls a better supply of accommodation of all types will become available in these communities." That, of course, has not happened.

I think that all members of the House, and certainly the opposition members, can at this time appreciate that there is a very great difference between the interests of the government with respect to the rent review program and the interests of at least this party.

That is that the government wished to have a program—and they did—of rent review designed to coincide with the anti-inflation program; we wanted a program of tenant protection, temporary, but in terms of the housing supply. We don't have that adequate supply of housing in Ontario. We don't have any better supply now than we did in 1975; in fact, it's worse.

So from the very outset, the terms of reference mean that the government and ourselves could not possibly agree on the purpose of the program. And that's unfortunate. It's unfortunate that the government never made a commitment that rent review was necessary for the protection of tenants and that it should be connected with an adequate supply of affordable housing. It's quite obvious for us here in this party that we must oppose the measures that have been put forward by the government. What the official opposition, as opposed to the real opposition, is prepared to do is entirely its choice, but it seems inappropriate to me that it could continue to support a government program, which outlines at the outset that the rent review program should be in connection with the anti-inflation program and not in connection with the supply of housing.

Further to that, there isn't a single suggestion in this document which could not already have been carried out by the appropriate ministries of the government. There isn't one suggestion in here that could not already be in place or for which we could not see the appropriate legislation. The document talks about added tenant protection. We've waited at least two years and longer for the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) to bring in legislation that would toughen up the Landlord and Tenant Act. It hasn't happened. He's had all of the information provided to him. He knows what has to be done but it hasn't been done.

In there it talks about a supply of housing. There is nothing to have precluded the government from having done that before now. The Ministry of Housing, if it wasn't so interested in simply disassembling itself, would have introduced some housing programs that would have met the very serious housing problem we have in the province. It hasn't been done. We don't need a red/green paper to tell us there are housing problems. What is sadly lacking from the document, as a matter of fact, is any serious discussion of non-profit or co-operative housing. Yet, at this point, that is probably the most viable option for the government to have pursued. They have the ways and means to do it but they choose not to; they've always chosen not to.

There isn't anything in here that couldn't have been done and that shouldn't have been done. There's a very real reason why this document is in front of us. The government wants the three parties to do its work for it because it seems to have forgotten the very basic principle of our system, that is that governments introduce legislation and oppositions vote against legislation or support it depending on its merits. That's the way the system normally works. But the government has derogated from that system.

In my view, that's absolutely wrong. Give us some legislation. We'll debate it and we'll either vote for or against it, but don't let them start asking us to do their work for them, that's wrong.

If that's not the real reason then, since they normally do understand the principles of the parliamentary system and the way in which it should work, there must be some other reason. There is a reason, a very solid one; that is that the government wants to get out of the rent review system.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Right on.

Mr. Warner: Yes, we have an admission. Do you want to admit it? You said right.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I can't imagine the member knows how to say the word "right."

Mr. Warner: In fact, every time I look at you I know how to say the word "right," to the right.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You are so far left, for crying out loud, you don't know where to stand.

Mr. Warner: The government wants to get out of the rent review program and it's trying to find a way to do it; hopefully by co-opting the opposition, that's what it's all about. I wish someone over there would just have courage enough to stand in his place and say that's what this government's about. That would make it a lot more simpler; it would certainly make it a lot more honest approach to the tenants in the province.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Resign.

Mr. Warner: In conclusion, I cannot do anything else except vote against this resolution because it is a part of a co-opting system.

Mr. Hodgson: That would be the alternative.

Mr. Warner: There is that choice, but the people in Scarborough-Ellesmere would be very disappointed.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Then stand up and give your speech.

[8:15]

Mr. Warner: I am standing up; and the minister embarrasses the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations when he says that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not when I am standing next to you.

Mr. Warner: I sense from previous speakers that the Liberal Party is prepared to co-opt itself into this process.

Mr. Mancini: Oh don't be so silly. He's right off his rocker.

An hon. member: What else is new?

Mr. Warner: I certainly wouldn't apologize for having woken up that member.

Interjection.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, it's also evident that we do have a commitment to the tenants of this province, so I will be there in the committee to help defend the more than one million tenants who live in Metro Toronto and try to fight for some real protection for tenants.

Mr. Turner: Oh, get off it.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Sock it to him.

Mr. Warner: The minister knows I will, doesn't he?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: But you won't hit him with that. You'll stab him.

Mr. Warner: It's unfortunate, as we will probably wind up the debate tonight, that the Liberal Party could not see fit to make a very clear stand on behalf of tenants and say that this document is wrong.

Mr. Mancini: You have been reading Michael Cassidy's memos.

Mr. Warner: What is needed instead is an extension of the rent review program with some needed improvements. The minister has talked about the improvements. He knows as well as I do that the rent review program isn't perfect, that it's loaded on the side of the landlord and that it needs some improvements—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You guys put the thing together.

Mr. Warner: Let the minister introduce the legislation; we will debate it and we can amend it. But he should stop trying to co-opt people into a process whose ultimate design is to do away with the rent review protection that tenants in this province deserve.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Did your leader send you another memo on this one?

Mr. Mancini: David, how could you do that with a straight face?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise and speak on behalf of the Liberal caucus in support of the proposal of the government to review the rent program and the accommodation—

An hon. member: We're going to have some class now.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Fine lad.

Mr. Samis: You're in trouble now.

Mr. Warner: You should be more choosy about your friends.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I feel very strongly that we do have to protect and provide housing for our citizens, but it's a peculiar thing that only last June 9 the government went to the people of Ontario on the basis of a slight difference of opinion, using the excuse that the rent controls were the real election issue. But the people of Ontario turned against them and didn't support the government; they re-elected a minority government.

I want to say, as a member of this caucus, that we want to be constructive. I am certainly glad to see members of the government making statements that they want to cooperate, but when we discussed OHIP and health costs, they indicated they wanted to work together at one point in time and then, on the other hand, they don't want to provide the information, as was clearly pointed out today when we discussed OHIP and health costs. I just hope they will work along with all members of the House so we can come up with accommodation that is so necessary.

Because of these facts, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say briefly that we will support this proposal; we will work along with other members and try to be constructive to come up with some alternatives by which we can protect the average citizen.

Mr. Charlton: I won't be too long in my comments, Mr. Speaker, but I have a number of comments that I would like to make.

Mr. Mancini: You're a rare one.

Mr. Warner: Wisdom hurts the member for Essex South.

Mr. Charlton: One of the first points I would like to make is that it's unfortunate for all the members in this House that so many of the memories around here are so short. One of the things we all seem to forget, as the government proclaims that its intention for rent review was to be complementary to the federal program of wage and price controls, is that this party at some point—I don't know exactly when they started talking about it, but during the election campaign of 1975—the Liberal party and the government of this province all talked about rent review. The government during the campaign, through the Premier (Mr. Davis), agreed that they would consider some form of rent review.

That was all before the guidelines were ever announced in Ottawa, before we had to consider restricted wages. The problem of increases in rent that did not suit the economic circumstances were already there. All three parties in this House talked about that problem before the guidelines were ever announced. It is unfortunate that memories are so short; it is unfortunate that we forget that the phenomenal increases that were going on were going on even without the guidelines.

The second thing I would like to talk about is the average increases that we have had under rent review since its inception. Landlords have asked for average increases of around 20 per cent. Rent review boards in the province have granted increases on the average of 13 per cent. I would like to point out to this House, and especially to the government members across the way and to our friends in the Liberal Party down here, that the 13 per cent, any way you look at it, is considerably above the guideline as set out in the rent review legislation.

What in effect has happened under rent review is that for the most part landlords who could justify increases above the guidelines based on increased costs have got that extra increase because they could justify it. It was not because it was frivolous, but because they could justify it. If they couldn't justify 20 per cent they were rolled back, but they got an increase that they could justify. Some of those increases that I have seen perhaps were even over what they could legitimately justify, because tenants were not there with sufficient expertise to oppose those rent increases in an effective way. But for the most part, landlords got all or the better portion of what they wanted over and above the guideline whenever they felt it was necessary.

The polls in Ontario are fairly clear in terms of what the people of this province feel, especially the tenants; that rent review is a necessary thing, and that rent review has to continue. It is obvious to us in this party that the objective of the green paper is to get the government out of the rent review program with as much grace as possible and with as little political fuss as possible.

In the last year-and-a-half at my old job, working in the assessment division in the Ministry of Revenue, I spent a year working on apartments. I talked to literally hundreds of landlords. I think that some of the people on the opposite side of the House should take a look at a rather strange circumstance in Hamilton; because all of the discussion we have heard about rent review and the cost push in the rental sector has inhibited the production of or building of additional rental units.

The vacancy rate in the city of Hamilton right now is something over five per cent. It has actually increased from something in the middle three per cent range at the time of the inception of rent review. Over that year in Hamilton, in talking to both landlords who were experiencing the high vacancy rates and the landlords who were not—and it is significant to note the high vacancy rates for the most part occurred in two specific sections of the city, not right across the entire city—in talking to the landlords who were experiencing the high vacancy rate, it was significant to note that their complaint was very much the one that we are hearing here, that the cost situation was affecting their operation and the rent review was hurting it even more.

The comments from the landlords whose rents were lower than those landlords experiencing the high vacancy rates and the comments of those landlords who were not experiencing the high vacancy rates at all—in fact, in most cases their units were filled 100 per cent almost all of the time—were that the problem with those boys in the east-end is that they would rather push up their rents to cover vacancies than they would spend the time to keep their buildings filled at a lower rate of rent.

That is one of the reasons we got into the problem in the first place and the situation hasn't changed under rent review. The vacancy rate in the east end of Hamilton is still extremely high. It's still extremely high because even under rent review the landlords have been able to justify rent increases—

Mr. Mancini: How high?

Mr. Charlton: How high? Over five per cent. The landlords have still been able to justify rent increases. The thing that caused the vacancy rate in the east end has still not been caught up with. Those higher rents are still higher than in the rest of the city. For us to be sitting here in this Legislature and talking about going into a committee to find a way to get out of rent review just does not make sense. We haven't dealt with the overall problem for the province of Ontario, which is the supply of rental accommodation.

With that I'll leave it. The problem hasn't been solved and for us to be trying to get out of what is a partial solution until the problem is solved is just ludicrous at this point.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: An easy act to follow.

Mr. Mancini: I am pleased to rise and speak on the proposal of the government to refer this matter of rent control to an all-party committee of this Legislature. We all know why we have had rent control in this province since 1975. The fact of the matter is that at that particular point in time many tenants were being pushed to the limit with very high and very expensive rent increases, in the neighbourhood of anywhere from 20 to 30 to 40 per cent; and I'm sure in cases that I've not heard of possibly even higher.

To many of the people who are in this Legislature, and possibly to most of them on the other side of the House who say that we do not need rent control at all, I say we have it because the marketplace has shown us, and we've had experience now, that the matter of rent can get out of hand and this Legislature must be prepared and must be ready to take action to protect tenants when the matter calls for it to be done.

We know that this rent control program is going to end on December 31, 1978. I believe we are going to this all-party committee not to find a way to weasel out of protecting the tenants, as one of my colleagues from the far left has said, but so that we, as legislators, can put before ourselves what alternatives there are to rent control, what action we can take to protect tenants from high rent increases that they cannot afford to pay and what alternatives we can find to ensure that landlords get a fair return. And let us not forget that there are average people who are landlords. There are people who own small units, as the leader of the third party used to own one. We know that these people need a fair return on their investment.

So our job should be two-fold: First, to ensure that the landlord gets a fair return; and, second, to ensure that what happened in 1975 and prior to that never happens again.

Over the past two years rent control has been a volatile issue and surely the blame for this lies directly on the shoulders of the government. Rent control, Mr. Speaker, should have never been an issue in June 1977. It should never have been an issue at all. It was stated prior to then by the government that this program would be tied in to the Anti-Inflation Board until the expiration of the Anti-Inflation Board. That fact alone should have shown the government that it should never have been a campaign issue in 1977.

I think possibly—and I do not say this to be offensive—the government was looking for reason to call an election, no matter how poor the reason was—very, very poor.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where did you dream that up?

Mr. Mancini: And to tell the people of Ontario in principle alone that their wages but not their rent had to be held down to six per cent, is very poor judgement indeed. It is not only poor judgement, may I tell the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, but also very unfair and very unjust.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's six per cent now.

Mr. Mancini: Yes, that's right, six per cent now, but we had to have a $25 million election.

Mr. Hodgson: Who voted for an election?

Mrs. Campbell: You did.

Mr. Mancini: So I take it that this party, and I hope the party to the left—I hear now that they are coming; I wasn't sure if they were going to join us in the committee, but I hear now that they are coming.

Mr. Swart: We hate to leave everything to you guys.

Mr. Mancini: I hope we go into the committee with the idea that we are not going to abolish the protection of tenants. That is not the idea that I am going to go into committee with. We are going to go into committee because the government program is expiring this December and we must have something to put in its place that is fair and equitable.

Hon. W. Newman: That's the best speech you have made in a long time.

Mr. Mancini: That is because you are never here to listen.

Mr. Breaugh: I just want to briefly enter the debate because I think it speaks to some of the difficulties we are having in a minority government.

I would support the motion if I were assured that when we go to committee what the committee says in fact becomes law; that the things that are discussed in the committee and the motions that are passed come back to the House intact and then become matters that this government is prepared to consider seriously.

I think one of the very serious problems we are having is the credibility of this particular House in a minority situation. We have seen again and again where opposition members attempt to provide a service to the Parliament in the committee stage; they attempt to debate, to provide amendments. Then, oddly enough, when it does come back to the House we see that it is subject to another review. It is subject to whether or not the government chooses to proceed with that particular amendment or that particular item under discussion in that form; and very often we have seen that the government does not want to do that.

So, in fact, what opposition members attempt to do in the committee stage, which is to perform a function of the House which is quite parliamentary, quite acceptable, doesn't really happen. That is the reason for my personal reluctance—it is, I think, the reason for the reluctance of this party—in accepting this particular proposal. We are not terribly convinced that the government is all of that sincere about proceeding in this way.

If we thought that this recommendation would go to committee, would come back and the feelings of the committee would hold forth, we would be quite happy with this arrangement. But it doesn't seem to be likely.

In terms of the item under discussion, we have seen that this government doesn't have very much ambition to make our own rent review program work. In fact the government went into a rent review program not very much of its own volition, but in the midst of a great deal of political pressure.

The paper the government has presented on the rent review process and subsequent ideas is really kind of an amalgam or a dog's breakfast of various concepts that have been expressed by a large group of people over rent review and tenants' rights, and the Landlord and Tenant Act, and various other concepts or problems that people who are tenants run into.

What I would like to see is some serious commitment on the part of the government to follow through with some of those things. My hope is frankly that in the committee stage, and when it comes back, that tenants in the province will see some of their rights reinforced in law. I wish I sincerely felt that that would actually happen. I really don't. I feel that what will happen in the committee stage is that some concessions will be made; that's true, that almost invariably happens. But I don't sense a substantial change on the part of this government in reversing the roles of housing.

We as a party look at housing as a right. People have a basic right to have a decent roof over their head and some fairly decent houses to go with it. On the other hand, I get the distinct feeling that this government deals with housing from an entirely different perspective. They look at it as an investment, it is something upon which money can be made, it is a stimulus to the economy; it is a great many things but it isn't that basic right that we, as New Democrats, see people have to have in terms of housing.

I read with great interest the propositions that the government put forward in their position on this. I think that we really couldn't take too much exception with a number of the ideas that are proposed, except the source that is proposing them. That poses us some problems. What has this government done before this point, as a minority government, in terms of providing opposition members with an opportunity to substantially change the policies of the government? In theory I could look at this opportunity and say here is a government seriously telling members from all parties to begin to establish a new policy. It is telling them to establish something that is different, that will be unique, that will be substantively altered from the previous course of the government. I really have a hard time believing that that is true.

I have a difficult time believing that this government is prepared to take into account that tenants have a right to a decent place to live, or that they have a right to negotiate what is a decent payment at the end of each month for their accommodation. I have some difficulty understanding the concept that this government is now prepared, where it previously was not prepared, to say that tenants have a right to argue about small matters, about whether the place gets decorated, whether or not it has decent services provided; because that would be a substantive change from what this government has done in the past.

So I am looking to two things. I am looking at the right of a tenant to have a decent place to live and to pay a decent amount of money in terms of rent for a month's accommodation; and I am looking at the track record of this government. The two don't match at all; there are great discrepancies. This government has never really provided the tenants of the province with either a decent place to live or with the right as a tenant to say that we are not here at someone's pleasure, that we are here because housing is a right, and should have some efficient mechanisms that will say that our rights will be protected.

For example, one of the two things that are being discussed at this time is rent review. I would have a difficult time stating, from anyone's perspective, that the current rent review process in Ontario is efficient or works well. In fact, I would go the opposite way. I would say that it is an awkward process. It has worked with reasonable amounts of efficiency in a very general way but not in a very specific way.

From the second point of view, in terms of the tenant's rights, I would say that the rights are somewhat there, but they are extremely difficult to enforce. Where do you go if you feel that your rights have been violated under the Landlord and Tenant Act? That's a little hard for tenants to understand in the first instance. It's a little difficult for them to find an appeal court in the second instance. If they know the law, their rights can be ensured; but how do they go about getting those rights enforced? That's difficult. Do you go through an office? There isn't one. Do you go to court? In fact you do.

So there are great difficulties that are involved in accepting this discussion paper as being a valid document that is going to really help any tenant in the province to have either a decent level of their income deducted as part of their rent for a decent place to live, or to say that any other rights they might have as tenants will be actively enforced. There's hardly a member in this House who doesn't still have, as a regular occurrence, tenants calling him saying, "I've been served with a notice of eviction." But the notice does not come from any official source; rather, it comes from a landlord in the form of a letter. They're not aware of their rights, nor are they really aware where they can appeal if they think their rights have been transgressed.

There are problems with the Landlord and Tenant Act and with rent review, and this discussion paper purports at least to put all of those things together. It touches on some things I would agree with. There are a number of things, in fact, that I would agree with. But the minister is asking me, as a member of this House, to accept as an article of faith that this government is prepared to do a turnaround on that. I don't think it is.

I would have to put the case that my own credibility as a member of this House has been stretched beyond endurance. I don't expect this government to change substantially from anything it's ever done. I think you would have to forgive me, Mr. Speaker, for saying I was the member of this House who posed some amendments to the current rent review Act last year. I saw the letters that came from the government House leader (Mr. Welch) saying these things would be matters of confidence, whereas previously they had never been dealt with in that way.

I think you would also forgive me for saying I was the same member who proposed the actual formal amendments to say that the guideline would be six per cent. I listened to the government benches tell me that would ruin the economy, would destroy all housing in the province of Ontario and would not work.

I was the same private member who sat here and listened to a member of the government stand up in November of last year and say that, in fact, the guideline would be six per cent. All of that came after we had spent $20 million or so, after we had all gone through a provincial election and after we had dealt with this thing as a matter of confidence in this government.

Mr. Davidson: It's a matter of fact, Larry, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And slipped to third place. I can understand why you're unhappy.

Mr. Breaugh: In fact, Mr. Speaker, you are asking me as a private member of this House to believe this government. I find that very difficult to do in any circumstances, and on this particular item I'm afraid I can't believe it.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to enter into this debate. I have to share with the House something of the dilemma in which I find myself.

Having perused the document, one of the interesting gaps as far as I'm concerned is that this government, with all of the things it says in that paper, for some reason doesn't address itself to the one issue which I think has to be of primary concern if this committee is going to work. That is the simple question of affordability. That is not spelled out in the paper in a way that I should like to see and in a way that I can really give full credence to this thrust of government.

That is borne out by the fact that the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) is not interested enough to be here for this debate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about your leader? Isn't he interested?

Mr. Davidson: Never mind that. She's absolutely right, Larry. That's pretty cheap.

Mrs. Campbell: I have not commented on the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis).

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right. I'll take the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt). Who will you take?

Mrs. Campbell: I assume that the Premier does have other functions. But the Minister of Housing, in my view, should be concerned with the desire to provide affordable housing—

Mr. Hall: That's right. He should be here.

Mrs. Campbell:—and that is the difference between whether my leader is here, whether the leader of the third party is here or who is here.

Mr. Hall: The former Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes) is here.

[8:45]

Mrs. Campbell: I would like the minister who in essence is responsible for this debate to advise this House whether he would be prepared, as this committee is going into session, to try to give assurances to this House that there will be two ministers there discussing the two sides of this question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How about the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) too, because we'll need money? How about the Attorney General for the Landlord and Tenant Act. How about the Premier for the ultimate decision?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Campbell: It's interesting that this government loves to push off on to municipalities their responsibility. I would say that the city of Toronto has taken some pretty forward steps in trying to fill the gaps on which this government has so faltered.

Interjections.

Mrs. Campbell: That kind of response is the very thing that gives me a lack of confidence in this committee. If the minister really means what he is saying, he would want this committee to look at all sides of the question. He would want this committee to be able to say to the Minister of Housing that he has to be involved in the solution, because we have to consider the question of the affordability of housing.

The reason I have been prepared to support the committee—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is that you have been whipped.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, if that pip-squeak over there could keep his mouth closed, he wouldn't be braying like the proverbial animal.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Smile when you say that.

Mr. Martel: They don't want our support.

Mrs. Campbell: I believe I am getting to him.

Mr. Martel: It's not you; it's me that has got to him.

Mrs. Campbell: I think I am getting to him because he hasn't the courtesy to listen to what is really a very serious point that is being made.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Smile and I'll listen all night.

Mrs. Campbell: If affordability is not going to be part of the discussion of the committee, then let's not have the committee at all.

Mr. Martel: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You've got another vote. She is voting with you, there is no doubt about it.

Mr. Martel: Bring in the legislation.

Mrs. Campbell: I can wait for the braying to subside, Mr. Speaker, but couldn't you do something about the minister to let me proceed? Could we have some order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Campbell: One of the things that has to be looked at is a matter of ways and means to try to prevail upon the private market as well as the government to provide housing. It is interesting to me that everybody says, all the experts, particularly from the government side, that we have had a dearth of new housing because of rent review. You could fool me and the riding of St. George, because ever since I have been in this House, I have had at least one or two or three new towers every election time, and that will be no exception when the next election rolls round.

However, there is no doubt that in other parts of the province new building has come to a halt. For that reason, it seems to me that we as responsible people have to look and to understand what might be done to stir that industry. When you have a municipality like the one we are in, where we now find that a family of four is living at the poverty level with $12,000 a year, then the government, if it is concerned at all, must face that reality in the provision of affordable housing.

I don't suppose that I have added anything much to this debate; I regret that I wasn't here for the start of it. But I do insist, for myself at least, that if we can't change the guidelines, if we can't make it absolutely clear that affordability is one of the main features of the discussion of the committee, then I would have to say that we are wasting our time.

I would look forward to listening, with courtesy not accorded to me by the minister, to his response to my suggestion that both of these ministers sit with the committee as we try to find solutions, not on any stance of government but for the people of this province who look to us for some kind of solution to problems which are rapidly becoming, in their eyes at least, almost insoluble. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Samis: The sergeant-at-arms.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I had joined my colleagues in the Legislature tonight to hear what I hoped would be an intelligent discussion—

Hon. W. Newman: Glad to hear it.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —on the proposal before the House.

Mr. Makarchuk: He welcomed you in, did you hear that?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: However, I find that some of the comments being made—and I'm sorry that two of the hon. members who spoke earlier made their pitch and decided to leave, but perhaps it was just as well.

Mr. Makarchuk: They're listening.

Mr. Martel: They are having coffee.

Mr. Makarchuk: They are listening outside.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I listened to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere who stood in the House a few moments ago and commented upon the rent review legislation as it now exists. His comment was, of course, that the legislation was loaded in favour of the landlord and biased against the tenant.

Ms. Gigantes: That's why you wouldn't enforce it, right?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I would draw to your attention that in the fall of 1975, the original bill that was brought in—

Mr. Martel: With much protest.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —was discussed at that time by the then minister with the Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The then leader.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The then Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Lewis), and the then leader of the third party; we sat and discussed the contents of the legislation as proposed and both of them at that time said that legislation was fair and it was what they were looking for and they would like to see it introduced in the House. And it was.

Ms. Gigantes: And you said you wanted to get out of it.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: After it was introduced in the House, the third party in this House, led by the then Housing critic and now leader of that party, tore that legislation to pieces.

Ms. Gigantes: What did you say?

Mr. Swart: Made it workable.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: He tore it to pieces; amended it, changed it, and now that member for Scarborough-Ellesmere has the nerve to stand in this House and say the legislation is loaded in favour of the landlord.

Ms. Gigantes: What did you say about the legislation?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: If that's the case, the architects of the Act at that time were the members of the New Democratic Party led by their then leader and the then Housing critic. It's absolutely ridiculous.

Ms. Gigantes: And what did you say? Let's hear what you said.

Mr. Martel: That's absolute distortion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mancini: You are always up on privileges.

Mr. Warner: I certainly didn't realize in 1975 when the legislation came in that they were going to appoint a whole raft of Tory real estate agents to run the rent review program.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Of course, we could have carried out the request of the then Housing critic and now leader of the third party. He wanted to have—

Mr. Makarchuk: A few tenants' rights.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —investigators dressed in tights and a cloak, and leaping out of a balcony like Rental Storm Troopers to carry on the investigation.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: A Ku Klux outfit.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: But I want to comment briefly, Mr. Speaker, on the comments made by the member for Oshawa who stood in the House—and I have respect for the member for Oshawa. He was the Housing critic and he was a good Housing critic. He did his job and he did his homework. But he stood in the House a few moments ago and was concerned about his credibility. He said that he really was concerned about his credibility as a member of the Legislature. I don't blame him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's understandable.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think he should be concerned about his credibility, because the NDP have sanctimoniously stood and talked about how great has been their protection of the tenants of the province of Ontario—

Ms. Gigantes: Did he lean on you? What did you say about the legislation?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —how they have been there fighting. They're doing their job.

Ms. Gigantes: What did you say? What did you say?

Mr. Martel: That's absolute distortion.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Let me read this to you—

An hon. member: You just admitted it.

Ms. Gigantes: You said you wouldn't administer a program. You wouldn't touch it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, could I have some order? Could I have some respect shown to me, as was shown to the member for St. George, by the braying animal who sits on the other side?

An hon. member: You only get what you deserve.

Mr. Swart: We are showing the same kind of respect.

Mr. Martel: You earn that, John; you earn respect.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Gigantes: Why didn't you administer it? Why did you wash your hands?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa is so concerned about his credibility—and concerned he should be. It was in November of 1976—I think this is common knowledge but I want it on the record—that a memo went to the NDP caucus from our friend, the present leader, then the Housing critic, and it says: "We must be seen to be initiating the pressure to extend rent review."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Read that again.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: "If the Tories eventually agree, as it is likely they will, we still then win the credit. If the Tories don't agree, then we stand alone as the party which works for tenants. If we can make the Liberals make a clear anti-tenant vote along the way—"

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: "—so much the better."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Holier than thou.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Now there's a real sanctimonious document.

Ms. Gigantes: Why wouldn't you administer it? Why would you wash your hands of it?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Credibility? I have to believe that he needs help with his credibility.

Ms. Gigantes: Why didn't you want to administer it?

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: Why didn't it take much to satisfy you?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: His credibility and that of his whole party went right down the drain with that memo.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. I wonder if the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie could return to the principle of the resolution?

Interjection.

Mr. Martel: Return to it? He was never there.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I tell you I would be quite happy to do so. I only wish you would have said exactly the same thing to the previous speakers. But in order to abide by your ruling, sir, I will return and say this. The fact that we are asking this House to form a committee made up of all members of this Legislature and all three parties to go through this green paper and to give the people of the province an opportunity to be heard on the issues—

Ms. Gigantes: Why did you put it on Syd Handleman? Why did you do that to him?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —that are included in here is certainly not—

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well he is not answering the question.

Ms. Gigantes: A patriotic question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, would you inform the hon. member from somewhere down near Ottawa that this is not question period? If she would get off her hands during question period and ask the questions, I would be delighted to answer them then.

Ms. Gigantes: Well, if he would stick to his ministry I would be glad to ask him.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Of if she can find time to join us in the Legislature a little more often—

An hon. member: Pick on someone your own size.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie has the—

An hon. member: What are we debating?

Ms. Gigantes: Here comes Jack.

Mr. Makarchuk: Okay, here is where the conductor throws the policeman out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Good night, Evelyn.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see you back in the chair, sir, because I know that we all have a mutual respect for you. Even those people opposite have respect for you.

Mrs. Campbell: We have respect for him too.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: That's right, I said opposite. Oh, him? Yes indeed. But they don't only respect him, they fear him.

Mr. Speaker, taking this to a committee is not the wrong thing to do. It's not a question of trying to slough off responsibility. Goodness knows that you people have stood in this House on more than one occasion and wanted a committee on everything. You would like to run government by committee. You are asking for royal commissions and all these various things. This committee is going to be going in depth into the proposals—

Ms. Gigantes: Why did you hand it off to Sidney? Poor Sidney.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —in depth. I don't understand why you people, who are always in favour of having public participation, public input, public involvement—this is your opportunity to have that public involvement—

Ms. Gigantes: For you to say that, shame.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —that you base your whole being on. Well, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. minister might find it easier if he addressed his remarks to the Chair.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Yes, Mr. Speaker, not only easier but probably to one who would more properly understand and appreciate it.

It's gratifying to know that the members of the Liberal Party at least see the worth of being able to take this particular matter before the committee of the Legislature—

Ms. Gigantes: Why didn't you stick to being a Liberal? Why didn't you stay with the Liberals?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —and listen to the input, not necessarily the New Democratic Party, who doesn't seem to understand that there is such a thing as people being involved in the decisions that are made.

[9:00]

Mr. Swart: I rise to speak on this because I share with my colleagues around me in this section of the House, the realization that this resolution, referring this red paper, whatever it is, to the committee, is the wrong approach for protection of tenants.

What we really should be debating in this House, Mr. Speaker, are amendments, if some are needed, and there are some needed, to the Rent Review Act. There can be no question that this is the method by which the government intends to abandon rent review and abandon tenant protection. They have made this clear all along, that they intended to abandon it; they lost their last Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Handleman) because they wouldn't abandon it at the time they said they would, and I am sure that this minister took it only on the condition that he could abandon it at the end of this year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Wrong, wrong again.

Mr. Martel: The Tory party opposed it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You were doing better on coffee.

Mr. Swart: Certainly from his speeches to the investment people one can understand how he would be on the side of the landlords. Of course, when he says that about the coffee, you know that the coffee processors in this country wouldn't lie to him—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The tenants wouldn't lie to me either.

Mr. Swart: —we know where his friends are and they are not the tenants of this province.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: We're going to put you under control?

Mr. Swart: There is no doubt in my mind that this resolution is part of the general thrust of your government which—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Ours.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Our government.

Mr. Swart: Your government, not my government. It's part of the general thrust of the government to do two things: To reprivatize the economy; and by shifting tax burdens and other measures to widen the gap between the haves and the have-nots, the wealthy and those less wealthy in our society. Some of us remember, about two-and-a-half years ago, when they tabled a document called the special program review. For those in all parts of the House who haven't looked at that document recently—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Back to the resolution.

Mr. Swart: I would suggest that they should look at it, because it points in the same direction as the resolution we have before us tonight, the attempt to abandon rent control.

The OHIP premium increase is an example of this general thrust of the government; as well as the breaking of the Edmonton commitment; the raising of parks fees; the refusal to do anything for the unemployed in this province; the failure of the government to keep up workmen's compensation payments and family benefits, in line even with the cost of living.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And the date for municipal elections and coffee beans.

Mr. Swart: This is another measure on the part of the government to reprivatize and to widen the gap.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Building the bridge over the Elora Gorge.

Mr. Swart: It's a part of their general return to what they like to think of as a rugged private enterprise system.

But of course they have to do this very subtly, because the polls show, as one of my colleagues said in today's paper, that the majority of Metro residents continue to favour rent controls. They found that 80 per cent, this poll shows 80 per cent of the people in Metropolitan Toronto still favour rent controls.

Mr. Warner: Eighty per cent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's why Cassidy wrote that memo.

Mr. Swart: So they have to do it pretty subtly. Of course you realize that; and that's the reason we have this motion before us tonight, Mr. Speaker. As my colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere said, if you can co-opt the whole Legislature and make it look as if you are considering other things at the same time, then you may be able to get away with it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They all gave the same speech so far.

Mr. Swart: I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the people on the other side of the House, because I suspect they haven't had a great deal to do with actually seeing rent control in operation; that rent review, even with its faults, has served an extremely useful purpose, in spite of the fact that the government never wanted it and therefore didn't administer it anything like as well as it could have been administered.

Mr. Martel: Do you remember Donald Irvine? "We don't understand." You fought it in the middle of the election.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I remember you bringing the landlords down and telling me to do something for them, you donkey.

Mr. Martel: No, I made an appointment for them; that's all. I didn't bring them down.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You brought them down.

Mr. Martel: I didn't bring them down.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Right here. Right here in the lobby.

Mr. Martel: No, no. Don't mislead the House. I set up a meeting for them in your office.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: My apologies.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I have been involved on the side of the tenants, acting as their agent in five hearings before rent review officers, all of them rather major apartments. You will recognize that in the Welland-Thorold area there are not a great many apartments and this therefore is the majority of them.

In one of those cases the notice by the landlord was for a 28 per cent increase.

The rent review officer ordered 19 per cent. In another instance the request was for 22 per cent increase and the rent review officer ordered nine per cent. In another one of those cases the notice to the tenants was for a 19 per cent increase and the rent review officer allowed nine per cent. Another one was for a 16 per cent increase and the rent review officer allowed an eight per cent increase. In one that we handled just a month or two ago the request was for a 12 per cent increase and the rent review officer ended up allowing a three per cent increase.

I have been involved in two appeals to the rent review board—appeals by landlords, incidentally. In one of those the board upheld the decision of the rent review officer and in the other one, because of new evidence and the time lapse, permitted an increase of nine to 13.5 per cent.

I point these out because there is little doubt that if we had not had rent review those original notices would have been the rents those people were paying. There's no question about that. Those same kinds of increases are going to take place if rent review is abolished after the end of this year or is weakened substantially.

I think it's fair to say that the rent review Act, in spite of its shortcomings, has made a more civilized society, along with the Landlord and Tenant Act. People now can't arbitrarily be put out of what may have been their home for years and where they have a real stake. It's something like the Labour Relations Act, and I suggest the government has been driven into this as they were driven into the Labour Relations Act many decades ago, when the employer felt it was his business so he could hire and fire as he liked and tell the employees exactly what they could do and what they ought to do. That same sort of philosophy with regard to landlords rests on the other side of this chamber. I suggest it will be a real step backwards if we abolish or dramatically weaken the rent review.

Abolishing the rent review will not only permit unreasonable rent increases, it will destroy the affordability that the member for St. George was talking about, and it will destroy the Landlord and Tenant Act, because they are a package. The landlord now cannot evict without justification; one of those is non-payment of rent. But if we abolish rent review, and the landlord can set the rent at anything he likes, it'll be a very effective way of getting rid of the tenant and will, in fact, destroy the security they have under the Landlord and Tenant Act.

As has been pointed out by other members of this House, the need for the extension of rent review lies at the door of the government, because the great bulk of people in this province, as was pointed out by the member for St. George, cannot afford to purchase and own a home of their own. Yet the government over these last few years, when the escalation in the price of houses has been so great, has not done a thing to stop the land speculation, which is one of the major causes of increases in the price of housing. They have done little with regard to public housing and they have done nothing with regard to providing a capital fund for the purchase of housing at reasonable rates.

The resolution we have before us on the surface sounds great, and that is the intent of the government. When the government says it is going to refer something to the standing committee for consideration of such matters as the implications of rent control, the need for adequate quantity and quality of rental housing, the affordability of rental accommodation, methods and procedures for the resolution of landlord and tenant disputes, tenants' need for security of tenure and the rights and obligations between landlord and tenant, it all sounds very great.

Anybody like myself who has been around this House for just two and a half years—even those who came here in the last election—know that that is a subterfuge for the abandonment of rent review.

Mrs. Campbell: No way.

Mr. Swart: This is the reason why I and my party are vigorously opposed to this resolution.

Mr. Haggerty: You should have been here eight years ago.

Mr. Makarchuk: I wasn't really going to get involved in the development of the debate, but, however, I have decided to inflict myself upon this House.

Interjection.

Mr. Makarchuk: I was actually particularly provoked by the past Minister of Housing who unfortunately is not in the House at the moment.

Mrs. Campbell: He was provoked too and disappeared.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So did you.

Mrs. Campbell: But I am back.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He'll be back.

Mr. Makarchuk: If the Minister of Housing, the last one and the ones before him, had done their job or tried to do their job, we would not be involved in this debate at this time, and rents and rent controls would not be a problem in the province of Ontario.

The fact of the matter is that the previous Minister of Housing's total function in the housing field was to act as the pawnbroker for the Treasurer and to go around and help to dispose of any parcels of land that the province of Ontario had acquired earlier. Instead of building housing, he got involved in the speculative process and proceeded to try to dispose of the properties, which he did to a certain extent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did you see the figures in the book about public assistance starts?

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, I saw the book.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then you know he built houses.

Mr. Makarchuk: You should have printed it on stitched rolls. The mythology we have to recognize in this whole matter of rents and the mythology that persists at this time is that if we had no rent controls builders would proceed to build houses—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Read the front of the book.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not know it is discourteous to interrupt the hon. member continually?

Mr. Makarchuk: —and rents will therefore decline. Something that should be recognized is the fact that under the present legislation new rental units are not under rent control. Initially, the owners of those units, the landlords, have the right to set the rents at the economic rates which would bring about the returns they want. That option is available to them.

Removing rent controls is not going to change the problem. The problem, basically, is that people do not have an adequate amount of money to pay the rents that some landlords are going to charge them in the future. No matter what the government does at this time, no matter how many buildings are put up and no matter what effort the government makes in the future, it will have to recognize that in order to make residences available to all of the people it will have to have some type of controls on the cost of housing in the province of Ontario.

People have to have a place to live, and the only way the government is going to ensure they have a place to live is to ensure that it uses the various means that are available to the governments to provide housing at prices that people can afford. We don't have a shortage of apartments these days. We don't have a shortage of housing. What we have is a shortage of affordable apartments and a shortage of affordable housing. You can buy all the housing you want in Ontario if you have $65,000 or $70,000 kicking around. Unfortunately, most people in Ontario don't have anywhere near the amount of money required to be able to buy a house.

[9:15]

The reason we have this debate, and the reason we have this problem about housing right now, is the fact that the government actually failed, and failed miserably, in the whole project of housing. The reason this resolution should be opposed is the fact that the government is not looking at the housing problem. It is not looking at the land cost, which is the major component of housing cost; it is not dealing with it, it is not investigating the speculation, the profits that were made on it; it is not looking into the ownership of the land; it is not looking into the control of the land. It is not doing anything. It is not even involving the Ministry of Housing in the process; and it wants to do something about housing, and it wants to do something about rents?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Read the front of the book.

Mr. Makarchuk: It doesn't involve the ministry.

Mr. Warner: Ah, look at what the ministry has done.

Mr. Makarchuk: The government makes a little side issue in that piece of paper, towards the whole unit and totally ignores the rest.

Mr. Warner: The Ministry of Housing is dismantling it.

Mr. Swart: Like the food guidelines.

Mr. Makarchuk: The concern of the government, Mr. Speaker, is more for the speculators than it is—

Mr. Warner: That's right.

Mr. Makarchuk: —about housing for people in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Right on.

Mr. Swart: Read the speech the minister made to the investors.

Mr. Makarchuk: There is a common mythology, that is fostered by the Urban Development Institute, aided and abetted by the government and on occasion aided by the Liberals as well.

Let me read a couple of items out of the Kitchener paper on the matter of land costs; and this is out of the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, August 18, 1976. It's an article by Frank Etherington, date-marked Guelph. It says: "Housing lot prices here are soaring towards the $30,000 mark because four developers"—

Mr. Haggerty: Sounds like Saskatchewan.

Mr. Makarchuk: —"are managing how many lots come on the market, planning director Ken Perry said Tuesday. Mr. Perry was commenting on complaints made by a Kitchener builder-developer interested in building homes on Guelph lots. The builder, Harold Freure, said at times when builders are dropping house prices in a depressed market, lot prices were continuing to climb."

Here is another article out of the same paper. The dateline is August 19, 1976, and it is the Kitchener-Waterloo Record again. It is dealing with a name that is not unknown in this House, and it says: "Twin city politicians and planners said Wednesday before-tax profits in excess of 500 per cent promised to local investors gambling on housing land are sickening and shocking. Commenting on profits made on speculative land deals and those predicted in the prospectus sent to Kitchener-Waterloo investors, the politicians urged higher levels of government to move quickly to correct the problem."

And it says: "Waterloo mayor, Herb Epp"—a name, as I said, not unknown in this House—"called for a provincial royal commission to pinpoint reasons why housing land is continuing to cost more and to make recommendations of what has been to correct the situation."

It is strange that in this particular time his party decides to support a resolution that in no way is going to deal with this problem.

Out of the same article, it says: "Bill Thomson, chief planner for Waterloo region, said the profits were sickening and immoral when they are made at the expense of people needing houses. Mr. Thomson said he favours the region and other municipalities getting into land-banking for housing or working in financial partnership with legitimate builder-developers to beat speculators and buy long-range developable land for housing purposes."

Let me give you a specific example, again to throw away some of this mythology that the reason housing is so expensive and the reason the costs are so high is that the land costs are high. The assumption there is that there is no land available to build houses or build apartments, and if we have to have the land we have to pay a lot for it, therefore that drives up the cost of housing; and the reason the land is so high is because it takes such a long time to process and there is no plan of subdivision available or no land available for zoning.

In Brantford, when I was involved in a housing project in 1974 and 1975, there was space for 3,316 units of housing available and that in no way affected the price of housing. Let me tell you that at that time, when we made a request to Ontario Housing to get involved in the housing situation, to try to lower the cost of housing, the reply we received from them was, "Oh, we can't do it. This is going to affect the market." In other words, they were more interested in protecting the speculators than they were in providing housing for the people of the province of Ontario.

There's no question that on occasion there are delays in the process of plans of subdivision. In many cases we have to realize that that is not a fault of the ministry. I'm not in the habit of defending the Ministry of Housing or their planning department, but it's not the fault of the ministry.

In many cases a developer who has a certain number of lots available puts them on the market at a rate that will provide him with a reasonable cash flow. Then what he has left he proceeds to barter with the Ministry of Housing in order to try and get on to this land as many units as possible.

The result of this, of course, is that it depreciates the value of the adjoining housing. And you can't blame the people in adjoining housing for getting up-tight about the problem, because they have a lot of their assets, a lot of what might be described as their total commitment for life—total financial commitment—tied up—

Mr. Rotenberg: What does this have to do with the resolution?

Mr. Swart: It has a lot to do with it.

Mr. Makarchuk:—tied up in the housing that they have, and they have to protect it.

The point is that the government got them into this situation and then afterwards, of course, it blames them because they squawk or they get annoyed at the municipality if high-density housing is built next door.

No matter how the government likes to slice it or no matter how it likes to deal with it, the point is that it does depreciate the value of housing, and one can't blame the people for trying to protect what they've got because they have a great deal invested in it.

The other point we have to touch on is really what the government is doing by putting the price of housing where it is, what it has done in terms of the economy. The money people pay on their mortgages is money that is not spent in buying the goods to furnish their homes; it's not spent in buying fridges or stoves or furniture and it's not providing jobs. In many cases, we have examples of money made by landlords, by major companies, that is moving out of Canada into the United States—it's moving into Chile, it's moving into South Africa. In effect, the government is helping the export of capital out of this country. It is also part of the problem that's causing the run on the Canadian dollar at this time.

The government should also try to understand—because it has driven the cost of housing where it is—the reason that workers demand larger settlements is because they have to meet commitments and payments on their mortgages, which again is something with which the government is not going to deal in this resolution.

This resolution basically is an effort on the part of the government to get off the hook on rent control. It has absolutely no solutions to the problem the way it is now. It is not involving, again, the people who possibly can provide the solutions.

The committee is not prepared to deal with the financing of housing. It is not prepared to deal with developers. It is not prepared to deal with the plans administration of the Ministry of Housing. It is not prepared to deal with the Ministry of Housing. It is not looking at the land holdings to see who holds the land in the various communities in Ontario or by how many people is it controlled. It is not looking at anything really that's relevant to the whole housing process.

Specifically, this resolution does not provide the committee with any opportunity to try and find ways and means of providing affordable housing for the people of Ontario. I may point out to the minister that a municipality like Brantford was able, on its own, to build single-family homes and sell them at $32,000 without any subsidy from any taxpayer, and yet the mighty province of Ontario, with all the minions that it has—the millions and the minions that it has working in the Ministry of Housing—has yet to build one single-family home at that price.

At the same time, we should have been able to build multi-family units, row housing, at prices of about $16,000 to $18,000. That means that people could have possessed homes and could have been paying about $160 to $180 a month for principal and interest, which is a lot less than they are paying on rent anywhere in Ontario these days. I am not seeing these things, and that is why this resolution just does not deserve support because it does not deal with the problem we face in the province in terms of rent, rent controls or housing at prices that people can afford.

Mr. Deans: I just have a word or two to say on this, simply because over the last 10-plus years the matter of tenants has come before this Legislature so frequently. I have taken part in much of the debate surrounding the problems of tenants all the way from the acceptance of the lease that currently exists within the province to the point where we arrived at some protection for tenants over and against the gouging that certain landlords were engaged in. I want to go back a moment and begin this where I think the fatal flaw is.

The government has ceased to govern. This government seems to think that there is now government by consensus in Ontario. They have adopted the Liberal leader's view that there is some sort of shared power operation in the province. Sometimes the power is shared with other parties in the Legislature; sometimes the power is to be shared with select groups out in the community. But the government no longer puts forward clear directions, it no longer leads in the province, it no longer puts out for the public to see where the government stands with regard to crucial matters that deal directly with the day-to-day lives of the people in the province. That's the fundamental flaw with what the government has asked us to do. It is wrong to suggest to us that we should now enter into some co-opting process that requires the other parties in the Legislature and people out there to somehow come together to suggest to the government how to deal with and which priority it ought to assign the various difficult issues that confront it as it has to go about dealing with tenants in the province. It is wrong.

The first thing is the government has established, under its chapter five, the evaluation of overall approaches. It has set out the criteria for the future of rent review.

It says, first of all, that it can choose from among four choices: It can continue the program more or less as it is. That's certainly pretty obvious. Or it can alter the program with the basic changes aimed at relaxing the controls. That's pretty obvious too. Or it can alter the program with increased exemptions of various categories. I don't think one would have to be some kind of a genius to appreciate that that might be one of the options. Or, finally, the government can terminate the program. I think that that is obvious to all of us. One of the minister's predecessors, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman), would have been very interested in terminating the program before it was begun.

Mr. Warner: That's what they are after.

Mr. Deans: I think that's fair to say. There are those among the government supporters who would believe that the program was wrong-headed from the very beginning and should never have been implemented. In fact, the hon. member for Carleton offered to resign. Maybe offered isn't strong enough—threatened to resign—over this very program. So no doubt there are pressures within the government to scrap it.

Ms. Gigantes: Let's be fair. The former Minister of Housing wouldn't touch it.

Mr. Deans: I want to go back a moment because I can remember some of the Housing ministers, all the way back to Stanley Randall. Do you remember Stanley Randall, Mr. Speaker? If Stanley had looked at this he would have used one of his most oft-used phrases: "The answer is as clear as a yellow wheel on a hearse." Remember Stanley used that often in the House. The answer to this is just that clear.

The pressure that is being exerted on this government is forcing it to backtrack. The pressure that is being exerted on this government is forcing it to abandon the tenants in Ontario. What's happening is that because the government doesn't have the guts to stand up and propose what it really believes ought to be done it now wants to try to find some others in the community who are prepared to support its position.

The government won't have any difficulty finding people to support its position. Already HUDAC supports the government's position. They supported its position before the government brought it in. They supported the abolition of rent controls before the government had rent controls in place.

Ms. Gigantes: They are very sympathetic.

Mr. Deans: The landlords of the province in the main were not in support of the introduction of rent controls, and so they will be delighted to come forward and explain to the government what is wrong with the rent control procedures and how this is wreaking havoc on their business and their opportunities to make money.

When rent controls were brought in, it was clearly evident in most of the province that the majority of people in the middle- and low-income groups required protection. They required protection because there was not a sufficient number of housing units for rent in the province at a price they could afford and because there were certain landlords in the province who, without any consideration for the economic hardship that was inflicted upon those people and their families, were raising rents outrageously.

What we needed then were more rental housing units within the ability of the average individual in the middle- and low-income groups, to afford them. Nothing has changed. If anything, on a per capita basis we have fewer rental housing units now than we had at the time rent review was brought in. In fact, we're now faced with a situation where there are now fewer rental accommodations available to the people of Ontario in the middle- and low-income groups; and now the minister tells us that somehow or other it is possible to modify the rent review procedures to accommodate those people. It isn't possible. The only time it will be possible is when this government gets up off its butt and builds apartments and provides some decent accommodation in all areas of the province to meet the needs of the people who do not now earn sufficient to get into the private sector.

That's not only my attitude. That's the attitude that has been voiced over and over again by the representatives of HUDAC.

They say, without any shame or consideration, they cannot possibly meet the needs of the low- and middle-income groups within the general capacity of their members to build accommodation in Ontario. I listened to them saying it on the CBC morning program not a month ago. The representative of HUDAC said very carefully that he conceded that he and his colleagues, who make up the organization, could not possibly provide for those people under the current and normal building situation. In fact, they said that somehow or other the government was going to have to take up that slack, and that if the government didn't take it up, they felt sorry for the people—my God that's great consolation; they felt sorry for them—but there was nothing they could do for them.

A strange kind of situation arises. At the time it became apparent that the government was going to look seriously at the elimination of or the drastic tampering with the protection afforded to tenants in Ontario under the Act which is now in existence, HUDAC said: "Yes, there's no doubt about it. Rental accommodation in the Metropolitan Toronto area is at a premium. There are very low vacancy rates." And why? Because of rent controls.

I'll be damned, because that very same day the representative of the Metropolitan Hamilton Apartment Owners Association was saying in Hamilton: "Yes, we need rid of the rent controls because we have a high vacancy rate and it's been brought about by the rent control procedures." They can't have it both ways. They can't have HUDAC, on the one hand, saying that the reason we have a low vacancy rate is the rent controls and also have the Metropolitan Hamilton Apartment Owners Association saying on the other hand on behalf of their members the reason why we have a high vacancy rate is because of the rent controls.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Don't tell me. Tell the landlords.

Mr. Deans: Yes, but I am telling the minister because what he is now doing is opening up a forum for those who can afford to come in order to express their own particular vested position in order to try to influence the government. And I want the minister to know, without any hesitation, that the better-funded of the two sides are the apartment owners.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So do you want no forum? So let's have no forum.

Mr. Turner: He doesn't know what he wants.

Mr. Deans: The better funded of the two sides are the apartment owners. What I am saying to the minister is that if he believes his party is fit to govern in the province of Ontario, then put before us what the government wants to see done.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's not have the public input. Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Turner: Don't you want the public to speak?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We want public input.

Mr. Deans: Where was the public input when the minister's colleague, the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), was deciding to raise the OHIP rates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's the way budgets have always been done and you know it.

Interjections.

Mr. Deans: That's the way budgets are done, yes.

Where was the public input when the minister's colleague in charge of housing was selling off the mortgages of the province of Ontario? Where was the public input when the minister's colleague in charge of housing was determining that they were getting out of the house building business?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now which approach do you like?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: Where was the public input? You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which way do you want it?

Mr. Deans: You can't have it both ways. Do you want consultation or not? You tell me what you think should be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, I thought I had the floor.

Mrs. Campbell: You couldn't have with him yelling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems to be very difficult for the members to hear the member for Wentworth. I wonder if the hon. member would address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Deans: I certainly will. I didn't realize that you were responsible for this. I will address my remarks to you.

What I am saying is that I become a little perturbed, Mr. Speaker, when I look at this government and they pick and they choose, always to their advantage, to have public input. Boy, will they have public input, because they know the public input will substantiate the position that they want to take.

And when it's to their disadvantage, will they have public input? You couldn't drag them to public input. You couldn't beg them to have public input, Mr. Speaker.

You suggest to them that there is a need in the province of Ontario for the OHIP premiums to be dealt with in the Legislature. Now surely that's public input.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, no.

Mr. Deans: But no, no, we can't have public input on that. No, no, no, we can't do that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are going to be sorry you said this, Ian.

Mr. Deans: I am not going to be sorry. I am not going to be sorry, because what I am telling you is this, Mr. Speaker. If you would like to build houses in the provinces of Ontario under the auspices of the Minister of Housing; if you would like to embark, Mr. Speaker, through you to the Minister of Consumer Relations or whatever he's called—

Mr. Warner: Corporate protection.

Mr. Deans: If the government would like to begin a program of 100,000 units a year for the next three years and then come back to us and say that there are now a sufficient number of rental accommodation units all over the province of Ontario that we can now sit down without the pressure and look seriously at whether or not it is now necessary to maintain the rent control procedures we have put in place, we will then be happy to sit and talk to the government about it. We would be happy to.

But, Mr. Speaker, please don't ask us to go, in the current situation, given what we know about the—

Mr. Martel: Bail you out.

Mr. Deans:—difficulties that people are having in finding accommodation as it now stands, please don't ask us to take part in the process simply for the purpose of making it easier for you to come to a decision.

This Legislature is the place where government policy should be debated. This Legislature is the place for the discussion of what the government of the day would like to see happen. There should be before us, not a series of options but the government's choice, the government's direction, in the areas that it has set out—

Ms. Gigantes: Bite the bullet.

Mr. Deans:—and then the substantiating documentation, which shows all of the studies that were conducted. Then we should debate the relative merits of the position which the government has taken. That, my friends, is the parliamentary process.

Ms. Gigantes: That's your job.

Mr. Deans: That's how the parliamentary process is intended to work. This is not the parliamentary process. This consultative non-sense the government has embarked on, which is self-serving at the best of times, is intolerable.

Let me look at the government's options. I find it interesting to read your criteria. "Criteria will be considered in the same order as given in the table: Landlord's operations financial viability." There is already within the current rent review procedure an opportunity to consider the financial viability of the landlord's operation. We can stroke that out. We don't have to consider it now. It's already there. We can consider it now within the current legislation. We can look at the costs, we can look at the increase in costs and we can look at the rate of return. Then, having looked at all those things, we can set a rate that is compatible with the needs of the landlord in terms of his financial viability.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What rate of return is that?

Mr. Deans: The rate of return that was agreed upon was the rate of return which was in existence prior to the implementation of the Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What rate of return? Give me a figure.

Mr. Deans: That was the rate of return.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What if he was losing money?

Mr. Handleman: He stays there.

Mr. Deans: He can't lose money—in response to the interjection if I may. It is not possible to lose money because the Act itself allows for a pass-through of all reasonable fair costs. So he can't lose money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What's the rate of return base you are talking about?

Mr. Deans: The second is the affordability of rental housing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No answer.

Mr. Deans: I'm telling the minister right now that he doesn't need it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We don't need to act?

Mr. Deans: He doesn't need to study this. There is already provision for dealing with that in the existing Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about when they are losing money? They are entitled to break even.

Mr. Deans: I'll tell the minister what to do. If he would like to come on in and stand up there and list for me the ones that are losing money, we'll consider whether or not there ought to be a change.

Ms. Gigantes: Just cite one.

Mr. Deans: Come in and show us. Where is the consideration?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: Would you please ask the minister to let me speak?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I'd like to remind the members of the House that we are discussing the resolution whether or not this matter be sent to the committee. I wish that the members would confine their remarks to the resolution.

Mr. Deans: I agree with you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

Mr. Renwick: My colleague has the benefit of the cut and there's no thrust from the other side.

Mr. Deans: Having decided that the first of the criteria is already taken into account in the existing legislation, we go to the second. The second is the affordability of rental housing. Let me take members back to when we brought the bill in. It was clearly evident that the price of rental accommodation had reached the point where it was no longer affordable for I would say the majority. That allows it to be 50 per cent plus of the renters in the province of Ontario.

We had decided that that was the case. We had decided that we had to have legislation in order to attempt to maintain it within their capacity to pay. Nothing has changed. The only thing that has changed since then has been that there has been severe restriction placed on income by an act of the federal government, concurred in by the provincial government. There was no opportunity in that, incidentally, for a pass-through of legitimate costs.

What we did was we said that there should be, concurrent with that, legislation in the province of Ontario which took into account the fact that people's incomes were severely restricted as the result of the arrangement between the federal and provincial governments, and that, therefore, it was appropriate—

Mr. Martel: And you set up a phony election over it.

Mr. Deans: —to hold rents down to a level that would be within reach of the people's new income levels. We even went further and said that if the landlord found the costs rose at a rate faster than that allowed under the prices and wages review board he or she could pass the increase on to the tenant. We took into account the possibility that perhaps certain costs would rise at a rate that would exceed the limits set by the Act. We afforded the landlord the opportunity to get that return in addition to what we had calculated would be a reasonable and fair return under normal circumstances. So therefore we don't have to study that at the moment, because in fact nothing has changed; the situation remains as it was at the time we brought the Act in, and it was fully debated, voted on and passed.

Then there's the adequate quantity and quality of rental housing. One doesn't have to be a genius to look at the fact as it exists. The government has opted out of building rental accommodation in the province of Ontario, virtually opted out. The government has decided it doesn't want to be in the housing business any more.

The private sector tells us, and it is right, that it is not building as many partments as it was before; but that slowdown was already in operation prior to the implementation of this legislation. There has been nothing that has happened in Ontario to improve the availability, quality and quantity of rental accommodation—nothing; no action by the government; no action by the private sector.

So if one were to look at it objectively you have to come to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that in that particular situation, with regard to quality and quantity of affordable rental housing, if anything the conditions now have deteriorated since the day we passed the original Act. There is no more available; there certainly may well be considerably less available. So we don't really have to go into that in the committee, because the answer to that is self-evident.

We then come to the resolution of landlord and tenant disputes. I want to tell the government, Mr. Speaker, through you, if it believes there are problems with the Landlord and Tenant Act, let it bring in the amendments. If it believes there are problems, let it bring in its amendments.

It doesn't require study. We all have had put before us the grievances of one faction or another, and so if the government believes honestly that there are problems with the Landlord and Tenant Act, let's not go through the charade, just bring the amendments in. We'll debate them; we may send them out to committee for consideration, and at that time, if there is any public input, as we did before we can invite the public then to come and pass judgement on the validity of the amendments. Show some intestinal fortitude.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But you told me only the landlords would come.

Mr. Deans: I'm just saying to the minister the landlords would be primarily the people who would come, but do it in the right way. If the minister believes—don't play games with me—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are playing the games.

Mr. Deans: If the minister believes there is something wrong with the Landlord and Tenant Act, then let him come on back to us with it and show us what changes he'd like to make and we will debate them with him. If he would like to send them out to the standing committee, we will of course agree to send them to the standing committee and they can be considered by the standing committee. If the standing committee, in its wisdom, believes there's need to allow for public representation, then of course that can be undertaken.

But we don't send the Landlord and Tenant Act out to be massacred. If the minister wants to change it, change it. His father would have changed it; he was a tougher man than the minister though.

Mr. Warner: He would have told it like it was.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Aren't you glad you have a soft-hearted person like me?

Mr. Deans: He wouldn't have hidden—boy, do I remember him! He wouldn't even have discussed it, never mind hidden.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And I run an open operation.

Mr. Deans: Then we come to what perhaps is the crux of the whole thing, the final of the criteria—government financial restraint. In there lies the answer to what's wrong, that's where the problem lies; because this government does not have, as one of its priorities, the provision of affordable housing for people. It doesn't have that, has never had that—all the way back to the days of Stanley Randall and his hearse. I'm telling you, I can remember him standing—he used to sit away over there, a very imposing fellow with his silver gray hair.

Mr. Martel: Selling washing machines.

Mr. Deans: He would stand up there, and in an hour or more he would tell us nothing.

Mr. Martel: But rant about the socialists.

Mr. Deans: I remember the discussions.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: See how things have changed.

Mr. Deans: I remember the discussions. How we tried to implant on his mind—

Mr. Van Horne: Is this the socialist version of Scientology?

Mr. Deans: How we tried to implant upon his mind the problems that were beginning to emerge in the housing field; how the government was complicit in the rapidly-rising land costs; how those land costs were detrimentally affecting the price of housing, and how the price of housing was rapidly getting out of the reach of the average individual. He did nothing.

Mr. Martel: He said it wasn't true. And the minister's predecessor told us we didn't understand.

Mr. Deans: Then he passed it over to a fellow called Grossman Senior. (Applause)

Mr. Deans: I'm going to tell the minister, I would applaud—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Tell your colleagues.

Mr. Deans: He handed it over to Allan Grossman. In all fairness, judging by the minister's performance I am surprised that he is a relative.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who are you insulting? Him or me?

Mr. Martel: Both.

Mr. Deans: It is up to you.

Mr. Martel: Take your pick.

Mr. Deans: In any event, I remember him as the minister in charge of housing. He, too, couldn't see how the government was involved in the deterioration of the market, which was then inflicting upon people rapidly rising prices that well outstripped their ability to earn.

Then we moved to the member for Brock (Mr. Welch). He just passed through, in fact; he barely had time to open his briefcase before he was moved on.

Mr. Martel: He only got his sandwiches out.

Mr. Deans: Then, as I recall, we went to—

Mr. Martel: The member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman).

Mr. Deans: No, I don't think so. I think it was to the Hon. Donald Irvine.

Mr. Martel: No, it was the member for Carleton.

Mr. Deans: Was he next? Well, it just shows what an impact he had; I didn't remember.

Then there was Donald Irvine.

Mr. Martel: "You don't understand."

Mr. Deans: I remember him well. We went out together to look at the housing the government was building at the time. Boy, was that a disaster. If there was shoddy workmanship, the government would hire the man who would undertake the shoddy workmanship.

Ms. Gigantes: They still do.

Mr. Turner: Oh, come on.

Mr. Deans: If there was substandard materials to be used, the government would find the person who would use them.

Mr. Warner: Remember Bramalea.

Mr. Martel: Ross Shouldice.

An hon. member: How would you know?

Mr. Deans: I went and looked at them, time after time. I pointed out to the minister on numerous occasions the problems we were encountering in this province with certain builders who were not adhering even to the minimum standards. I kept telling the minister they were taking advantage of an unwary public and foisting upon the public a substandard product. But the minister kept letting them have the contracts, over and over. Gradually they moved out of business. The minister went to his home warranty program—it took so long to materialize; we tried for years to get it—but when it finally materialized, again he left it in the hands of the private corporations—

Ms. Gigantes: And they are the same people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's working very well. Don't you think it is working well?

Mr. Martel: Come to Sudbury.

Mr. Deans: —and, once again, they turned around and gave immunity to all—those shysters. They were allowed to operate for yet another year while they got around to licensing them.

Ms. Gigantes: And they are still operating. You are still giving them low-interest loans.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Turner: Oh, that's nonsense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: A bunch of greedy corporate creeps ripping off the public.

Mr. Martel: Do you remember Irvine's favourite line? "You don't understand."

Mr. Deans: I understood; he moved on.

Mr. Martel: He packed up his sandwiches too.

Mr. Deans: Then we went from there to the current minister. No, it wasn't—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You've got the wrong—

Mr. Deans: I am just coming to him; I forgot he had been moved. We went to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie. He was to rule over the elimination of the Ministry of Housing. It was his job to dismantle it, and dismantle it he did. At least when we started out we had some houses being built, now we have hardly any houses being built.

Then he passed it on to the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. Martel: That was the final crowning glory.

Mr. Deans: Enough said. Anyway, all I am telling the minister is that we know the problem in Ontario. We do not require to study it. If the government wants to build houses and to get them on the market, if it wants to provide rental accommodation in sufficient quantity all across Ontario at a price people can afford, and then comes back and tells us that it would like to eliminate or drastically alter the rent review procedures that we now have in place, then we will take part in the government's game. We will play with the government, because then it becomes viable and sensible.

Ms. Gigantes: It's real.

Mr. Deans: If the government wants to come back and tell us that it has a program in Ontario for building houses within the range of what is established and calculated by most as the need in the province of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The charter says 100,000 a year.

Mr. Deans: It says 100,000 a year? Fair enough. Then show me the 100,000 a year and show me the houses that are in the market for those who are at low- and middle-income in the province of Ontario and I will say to you, fair ball, we are ready now to look at the rent review Act. At that point in time it makes some sense. In the meantime, if the government wants to alter the Landlord and Tenant Act, because it believes there are some injustices being perpetrated, then bring in amendments.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We'll have them.

Mr. Deans: Bring in your amendments. But please don't ask us to play a game which can do nothing but be hurtful to the people who are not getting the benefit of decent accommodation at a price they can afford, the people who have been neglected for at least the 10 years that I have been here, and for probably longer than that, although I have no direct knowledge of that period of time prior to then.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That never stopped you before.

Mr. Deans: At the end of all the development processes, if the government wants to make some changes, then that is fine. But this isn't the way, Larry. This isn't how it is done.

Mrs. Campbell: His name isn't Larry. That's unparliamentary.

Mr. Deans: I am just using "Larry" as one would use "Joe" or "Sam."

Mrs. Campbell: Harry, Tom or Dick.

Mr. Deans: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: It is important because we've got to draw the distinction at some point. There can be no further co-opting in this Legislature. It has gone far enough. This is not the process that this Legislature was set up for. It was never intended to be a place where we would get together as chums and chat about a number of options. It was a place where governments governed and provided leadership, where oppositions put forward alternatives and where the final vote determined how those matters would be dealt with.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is the same thing.

Mr. Deans: Then bring it in in its proper form and we will be happy to deal with it.

Mr. Rotenberg: I am just a little surprised that the debate has taken us two full sessions on a simple reference of a report to a committee for discussion. The present rent review legislation runs out at the end of the calendar year 1978. Before we continue it, replace it or do something with it, it seems to me incumbent upon all members of this House to have some discussion, to have some input and to find out what we are going to do.

The report we have before us gives some policy options. These aren't the only policy options. There may be other policy options. In fact, I hope there are some other policy options. I don't know why we shouldn't hear them. I am surprised at the NDP being against public discussion of these problems, against hearing from the people and against public input to get their thoughts on the problem.

Ms. Gigantes: Hang in there.

Mr. Makarchuk: Discussion never built houses.

Mr. Rotenberg: I want to know what are they afraid of?

Mr. Turner: Public discussion.

An hon. member: They don't want to take a position.

Ms. Gigantes: We will give you $6,000 and you go out and look for a house.

Mr. Rotenberg: The NDP says that rent control is just fine as it is.

Mr. Martel: We didn't say that.

Mr. Rotenberg: But it is not just rent control we are talking about.

Mr. Warner: We didn't say that.

Mr. Rotenberg: It's the whole Landlord and Tenant Act.

Ms. Gigantes: Rent review.

Mr. Makarchuk: How come you are not talking about the speculators?

Mr. Rotenberg: They talk about the speculators and the land developers and so on. There are problems. One of the problems is that in order to get new affordable housing we have to have development. And when one wants to get development and when developments go before municipal councils who is it who is always opposing new developments? It's the same NDP supporters.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's nonsense and you know it.

Mr. Warner: That's absolute nonsense and you know it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: There are over 5,000 serviced lots sitting in Scarborough and what doesn't bring them on stream? Land costs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rotenberg: Sure, land costs are part of the problem.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are playing the game. You are expressing the mythology.

Mr. Rotenberg: Building costs are part of the problem. Building costs are part of the problem. Municipal regulations are part of the problem. Labour costs are part of the problem. There are a lot of problems.

Mr. Martel: What about speculation?

Mr. Rotenberg: One method of getting rid of some of the land problems is that if you have more and more developable land, serviced land, available land, buildable land, zoned land, you are going to bring down the cost of land.

Ms. Gigantes: Pray for it.

Mr. Rotenberg: Speaking in this debate on Friday, the member for Parkdale (Mr. Duksza) expressed "complete satisfaction with landlord-tenant law in Ontario as it now stands." That is what he said. Then he went on to make a number of suggestions for changes in rent review. I have looked over some of the suggestions. Some of them have merit. I hope when this matter goes to committee some of these suggestions will be discussed by the committee and by the public. We have to discuss landlord and tenant rights. I know some people in this House think that the tenants are always correct and landlords are always wrong. But I think landlords do have a little bit of right.

Ms. Gigantes: Who said that?

Mr. Rotenberg: Landlords have rights.

Ms. Gigantes: Who said that?

[10:00]

Mr. Rotenberg: Landlords have rights to come before a committee. We have to listen to both sides. We have to assess what they want to say, not necessarily decide that one side or the other is right. But we shouldn't be setting up this artificial confrontation between landlords and tenants that some people in this House want to set up. We can hear both sides. Not always, but sometimes landlords and tenants agree on what should be done. We can solve some of these problems by co-operation and discussion, not by confrontation, because both landlords and tenants want changes.

When I talk about landlords, I'm not talking about Cadillac and Meridian. I'm talking about the people who own three units, who own triplexes, who own 10-suite-ers, the people who are on fixed incomes, the people on low incomes who happen to be owners instead of tenants, who live in one suite and rent the other two in their triplex. These people have to be heard from because these are the people who have problems.

Ms. Gigantes: You are going to call them before the committee?

Mr. Rotenberg: Cadillac and Meridian can look after themselves but some of these small landlords should be heard from who have problems.

Ms. Gigantes: Who are these small landlords going to be before your committee? Who's going to speak for them? You?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Makarchuk.

Mr. Rotenberg: A few weeks ago, by a funny coincidence, on the same day I got two calls in my riding, one from a landlord and one from a tenant, both complaining about basically the same thing. The tenant complained he moved in, the stove didn't work, the landlord didn't clean up, the place was a mess. He couldn't get the landlord to do what he wanted him to do and what had to be done, what he agreed to do, and he really didn't want to go to court. He couldn't afford to take the landlord to court.

Mr. Warner: Did you fight for him?

Mr. Rotenberg: The same day I got a call from a landlord—

Ms. Gigantes: A small landlord.

Mr. Rotenberg: A small landlord, about four foot two. A small landlord.

Mr. Warner: Stop picking on short people.

Mr. Rotenberg: A landlord of a small building.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: You're embarrassing Larry. Stop picking on short people.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I'd be glad to take the member for Carleton East out for a drink after and we'll discuss this.

Ms. Gigantes: You try it, I'm busy.

Mr. Rotenberg: And then the landlord complained that a tenant moved in—

Mr. Warner: You're in trouble now.

Mr. Rotenberg:—and the tenant was keeping the place dirty and had, over a period of a month vandalized the fridge three times and under the Act the landlord had to fix the fridge. The landlord said, "What do I do? I can't afford to go to court. How do I take this tenant to court? How do I get my rights looked after?"

So we have to look at the Landlord and Tenant Act. We have to get input from landlords, from tenants, from everyone. We should talk about it.

Mr. Martel: Why don't we leave that with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry)?

Mr. Makarchuk: That's not part of the resolution.

Mr. Rotenberg: The NDP may be happy about the present Act, but I am not.

Mr. Warner: You didn't hear my speech.

Mr. Rotenberg: The resolution suggests that we send this report to the committee and look over both rent review and the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Ms. Gigantes: Bring out your policy, come on.

Mr. Rotenberg: The member for Parkdale spoke the other day and he indicated that all the tenants in his riding were happy with the present rent review situation.

Mr. Warner: Who said that?

Mr. Rotenberg: The member for Parkdale. He's happy. The tenants in my riding, and there are many of them, are not happy with the present rent review procedure.

Mr. Warner: Because it is loaded on the side of the landlord.

Mr. Rotenberg: They have complained to me and they want some changes. They are tenants who are fighting their landlords and they aren't happy with the procedure. I think we have to review it. I want those tenants in my riding—if the member for Parkdale doesn't want his tenants to come forward, that's fine—

Mr. Warner: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. Rotenberg:—I want the tenants in my riding to be able to come to a committee to put forward their objections, to tell the members, all members, how they would like the rent review procedure changed.

Mr. Makarchuk: Time.

Mr. Rotenberg: The other day I got a call from a little old—an elderly female in my ward. She owns one piece of property. That's all she has in the world.

Ms. Gigantes: "Little old lady" you were going to say. Why don't you just say it?

Mr. Turner: He didn't say that.

Mr. Rotenberg: She's an elderly woman.

Ms. Gigantes: Where are your guts?

Mr. Makarchuk: Sexist.

Mr. Rotenberg: There are elderly couples. There are elderly men. But this just happened to be one elderly woman who called me. She owns a store with an apartment above it and she has problems with her tenants. When she went to her tenant, the tenant said, "Don't bother me. You're no longer the boss. I'm the boss."

Ms. Gigantes: Who is going to represent her before the committee? Are you going to represent her before the committee? Or will you let Meridian speak for her?

Mr. Warner: And you didn't understand the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Ms. Gigantes: Will you let Meridian speak for her?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rotenberg: I would very much hope, because I keep a record of the calls of people who call me—

Mrs. Campbell: He has had three calls.

Mr. Rotenberg:—and I have people who have said they'd like to come here and speak to a committee and tell their problems. I would like to see some of these landlords of small buildings come before a committee. As I said, Meridian and Cadillac can look after themselves. I'm not concerned about them. Maybe the members opposite are.

Ms. Gigantes: They won't be there, right?

Mr. Warner: You don't care. They can do what they please.

Ms. Gigantes: You guarantee that? They won't be there?

Mr. Makarchuk: You've got four minutes.

Mr. Rotenberg: The other party has spoken—it's had the floor for the last hour, Mr. Speaker. I'd like a few minutes.

Mr. Turner: The last two hours.

Mr. Rotenberg: There's another problem I think we should look at and that is the problem of the non-payers. There aren't that many of them but there are enough of them to be a problem. Again, you get a landlord who may have a six-suiter or a six-plex, or a three-plex, and someone comes and pays the first and second month's rent and then doesn't pay rent.

Mr. Warner: That's in the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: And the landlord, after a month of default, goes to court. The tenant gets a deferral.

Ms. Gigantes: What about rent review.

Mr. Rotenberg: Then the tenant puts in a list of things he thinks the landlord should have done and he gets another adjournment in court. Five months later, when it finally gets to court, the tenant packs up and disappears and the landlord is out five months rent. Now, you all know this happens, from time to time.

Mr. Warner: Go get a decent lawyer.

Mr. Rotenberg: It happens to people like Cadillac and Meridian.

Mr. Makarchuk: The sheriff refuses to serve summonses.

Mr. Rotenberg: It happens to people like Cadillac and Meridian and they simply pass the loss on to the other tenants. They don't pay for it. But when it happens to some of these smaller landlords, sometimes it is financial disaster.

This is something the committee should review and get input on. Maybe we should be looking at a system that where a tenant withholds his rent, possibly for good reasons, possibly not for good reasons—and a tenant should have the right to withhold rent if the landlord isn't doing what he should do, or isn't fulfilling the responsibilities — but when a tenant withholds rent and it becomes a court case, maybe we should look at the possibility of the rent being paid into court, so that if the judgement at the end of the day comes down on the tenant's side the tenant gets things done because the money is there to do it, and if the judgement comes down on the landlord's side, the landlord gets his rent. You wouldn't then, Mr. Speaker, have the problem of many of these landlords of small buildings who suddenly are out a number of months' rent because the tenant—

Ms. Campbell: If you have all the answers, why don't you bring in the legislation?

Mr. Rotenberg: I am saying we should have a look at some of these things.

Ms. Gigantes: You have all the time in the world.

Mr. Makarchuk: You're to blame.

Mr. Rotenberg: I am wondering why some members of this House want to opt out of public discussion.

Mr. Hall: You know better than that, Larry.

Mr. Rotenberg: I don't think any member should restrict the input of ideas. Now the minister is honest; he said he doesn't have all the answers, he would like to hear from the public before bringing in legislation.

Ms. Campbell: We know that. He didn't need to tell us.

Mr. Rotenberg: We would like to have all-party input. There has been some—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Makarchuk: Since when did he not have any answers?

Mr. Rotenberg: Oh my.

Mr. Cassidy: You are abusing the minority government.

Mr. Rotenberg: In two days' debate some interesting ideas have come forth from all sides of the House. There are a lot of people out there, tenants and landlords, who want to bring in some ideas. As I say, the minister doesn't say he has all the answers, so on a co-operative basis let's send this to a committee. Have it studied. Have the people bring in what they think should be done, because my ideas or the minister's ideas or the opposition's ideas may not all be correct.

Let's hear from the people. Let's talk about it and then the government will bring in legislation.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest we support the motion and send this matter to committee for study.

Mr. Dukszta: Mr. Speaker, a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Parkdale on a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Dukszta: The member for Wilson Heights quoted me as saying that I was completely satisfied with landlord-tenant law in Ontario as it now stands. The exact phrase, is "Our opposition to the resolution is not based on complete satisfaction . . ." May I correct the member?

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, the issue that is before us in this motion is an important one in the area which I represent and in neighbouring areas. In the city of Ottawa, which is the major centre in eastern Ontario, the majority of people are renters. In fact, that's one of the reasons the new leader of the NDP was elected first in 1971, because he understood the issue of housing and how important it was to people in eastern Ontario and especially in the boom town in eastern Ontario called Ottawa.

It is not only in the city of Ottawa where the issue of housing is a very important issue. As a matter of interest, because I am a curious, open-minded person, as most of the people who sit in this section of the House are, I put out a question in a riding report about a year ago, asking the people whom I represent in Carleton East whether they supported rent review.

Rent review—with all the foibles, with all the problems that the Conservative government has foisted upon Ontario since 1975; even that miserable kind of rent review, did they support it? And, Mr. Speaker, over a thousand people replied to that questionnaire. Most of those people, and I asked the question in the questionnaire, were homeowners, most of the people were homeowners. Carleton East is an area where most of the new housing that's been coming in has been condominium housing. Even among that group of people, the support for rent review, even as miserable as it has been since 1975 under the Conservative government, was overwhelming. I think that speaks to the kind of feeling that people in Ontario have about the issue of affordable housing.

Watch the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) this evening; he knows exactly the kind of area that I'm talking about.

Mr. Conway: Is this a new alliance?

Ms. Gigantes: This is a major growth area—Gloucester township—which is the major part of Carleton East, very much like the riding he represents. Those two areas have been in the major growth areas in the country of Canada over the last few years, and he knows exactly how important the issue of affordable housing has been. He and I have both watched in that boom town, in that growth centre, what working families have gone through to get affordable housing.

I watched him sit with his head on his hands, and I know he understands that the kind of issue that we're talking about here tonight is a very grave one, that concerns families in Ontario at a very profound level. It affects the circumstances of their lives.

He knows because he has gone through the long list that has been our Ministry of Housing list over the last several years. He's been one of them. He has attempted, as a representative of the Conservative government of Ontario, to come to grips with the issue of affordable housing. He knows how this government has failed.

I'm not an expert in government and I'm not an expert in housing, but the hon. member for Carleton, as I have, has watched the list of Conservatives sacrificed to the portfolio of Housing. Some of them have been very decent, able people; him among them.

Mr. Mancini: Name one.

Ms. Gigantes: I haven't watched provincial politics for a very long time—

Mr. Mancini: Shame on you; that doesn't sound like a New Democrat.

Ms. Gigantes: —but with the interest I've devoted to it, even since 1973, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mancini: It must be the new hairdo.

Ms. Gigantes: —I've watched a total of six people passing through the Ministry of Housing; and we end up, two ministers ago, with a declaration by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes), whose responsibility it was to look after affordable housing in this province, that he would not touch the rent review program and he foisted it off on the poor gentleman, the hon. member who represents Carleton—

Mr. Conway: The member for Carleton is not poor.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But he's still honourable.

Ms. Gigantes: —who was honourably trying to carry out his responsibility as Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. The member for Sault Ste. Marie foisted off that responsibility. He said that he would not have anything to do with rent, administering a policy of rent review. And the poor member for Carleton, there he was.

Mr. Conway: Evelyn, he is not poor, get that on the record.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Time!

Ms. Gigantes: What was he to do? He didn't believe in rent review. He didn't believe in rent review in spite of all he knew about the crisis in affordable housing, having lived in a growth area—

Mr. Conway: Sidney, we didn't know about this new alliance.

Ms. Gigantes:—having watched, having suffered with the people he represents over the issue of affordable housing. He didn't want to have to deal with it but it was foisted on him.

Mr. Handleman: I should have stayed home tonight.

Mr. Bradley: Who are your friends?

Mr. Conway: Sidney Handleman.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Time!

Ms. Gigantes: And he eventually had to quit the cabinet, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Time!

Ms. Gigantes: I can't understand the kind of nonsense we're being given from the government side of the House on this issue. I really can't understand it. They talk about no rental housing coming on to the market. The fact is that any person who wants to build apartment units for rent—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mac, tell her it's time.

Ms. Gigantes:—in the province of Ontario ever since rent control has come in, has been able to do it without rent review, and has been able to do it recently with very large subsidies granted from the government.

There is no free lunch, they say; there is no free lunch, they tell us; but there is a semi-free lunch for a developer who wants to build apartments in Ontario. Still there are none being built, Mr. Speaker.

The only things that have been built over the last few years in Ontario, in terms of so-called affordable housing, which Conservatives call affordable housing, have been condominiums. The fact is that what's happening in the housing market right now, if Ottawa, boom town Ottawa is any indication—I suspect the same thing is true in Toronto, and we will document this, I am sure, during the discussion in the committee debate—

[10:15]

Mr. Conway: You are going to participate, are you?

Mr. Hall: Are you going to join in the debate?

Ms. Gigantes:—we will find that what has been happening is that condominiums—that great salvation for the lower-middle-income group in Ontario, that great answer to affordable housing in Ontario—condominiums, on which this minister does not dare to bring in legislation yet—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It will be in by the end of the session.

Ms. Gigantes:—let me point out, Mr. Speaker—condominiums are now being rented wholesale in Ottawa to such an extent that the poor unfortunates who bought into condominium buildings within the last year or year-and-a-half, are sitting in buildings, perhaps 14 or 15 of them, with 100 units in the building, and those buildings have been sold to wholesalers who are now renting them and there's a flood of apartment units coming on, which this government wishes to stop. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations talks about Alice in Wonderland; we are dealing with an Alice-in-Wonderland world.

Mr. Makarchuk: Read some of it into the record.

Ms. Gigantes: We are dealing with an Alice-in-Wonderland world on this issue.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Get to your point; you were going to be five minutes, stick to your deal.

Mr. Sterling: What's your point?

Ms. Gigantes: We will, in this committee, discuss with the minister what is happening in the marketplace. In spite of what the government would tell us, in terms of the economics of this province and the magic of the budget and the mysteries of finance, the housing market is not a mystery, it is not a mystery at all. It is a question of who has the money and who has the power. What we are telling the government is we know who hasn't got the power—those people who are in desperate need of affordable housing. We are saying to this government, if it had any ideas, if it had anything to contribute—

Mr. Conway: Is Michael Cassidy an equal opportunity landlord?

Ms. Gigantes:—in the way of policy, we would prefer, much prefer, to see a government worth its salt put out its legislation and its policy before us. Then we would discuss it with full heart. But if the government wants us to come into a committee to try to provide it with policy, we will come in and tell it the facts of life about affordable housing in the province of Ontario and how it has failed to provide it over the last five years.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, to wind up this debate after 12 readings of the same speech on the NDP side, won't take very long.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Just the punctuation has been changed.

Mr. Renwick: Oh, come on.

Mr. Cassidy: You are as bad today as you were last week.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wanted to refer the members of that party specifically to some of the parts of the earlier debates that perhaps they were out of the House for in 1975 and 1976.

Mr. Renwick: No we weren't, we were right here. There wouldn't be a rent review bill without us.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They were talking, at that time, they were complaining about the Tories not giving enough notice. From Hansard, December 15, 1975, I quote: "I must say I would really appreciate it if, whenever we do another bill, he"—that is the Minister of Housing—"tries not—

Ms. Gigantes: Where's the bill?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "—to use the kamikaze approach to legislation." That was Michael Cassidy, that was the member for Ottawa Centre—

Mr. Renwick: Where is the bill?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You were criticizing me for bringing it in.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —in 1975 complaining about our kamikaze approach.

Ms. Gigantes: Where's your bill now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Look, the member used more time than she promised to; now why doesn't she sit there and show me some courtesy while I say my wrap-up remarks—

Mr. Conway: Larry, you are a chauvinist.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —in half the time her party promised me I would have? Now show some courtesy and just listen to the eight minutes I have, thanks to her over-going her time limit.

Mr. Renwick: How can we do it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Secondly, that party goes on to tell us how they are afraid that open hearings are going to be tilted in favour of landlords; some approach to take.

The member for Wentworth went on. He didn't want hearings, he liked the old system where we didn't have open hearings, where we didn't invite the public in. Well I like the new system. I like asking the public to come in and have input.

Ms. Gigantes: He didn't say that.

Mr. Cassidy: You sit for two years and then you come and give the legislation two months.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I am interested to hear the leader of the NDP say that.

Mr. Renwick: It's not a new system and you know it. You have never consulted the public on any issue before.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because I ran his earlier remarks—

An hon. member: A new Cassidy approach.

Mr. Renwick: You never consulted the public on any issue before. Don't give us that nonsense.

Ms. Gigantes: Where's your bill?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to read from Hansard of December 3, 1976, in which the member for Ottawa Centre was talking about rent. "The matter could be referred to a standing or a select committee of the House to hold hearings"—imagine that—"and listen to tenants and landlords and the public during the month of January and early February."

Mr. Renwick: That was after the bill was introduced. You put a bill into the House—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wish the member for Wentworth were here. He goes on to say "to get their views and ensure that people across the province know what the continuation of the rent review process is going to be."

Ms. Gigantes: On a bill.

Mr. Renwick: You are no longer a government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At that time the member for Ottawa Centre was begging this government to have a committee, a standing or select committee. It didn't matter, but just let's have one, to use his words. I quote directly the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I don't know how you could have a point of privilege, I couldn't hear what was going on.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the minister read the page from which he is reading in Hansard, please?

Mr. Speaker: That's not a point of privilege. If we are going to get through this item of business by 10:30, I hope all members will co-operate and allow the hon. minister to complete his remarks uninterrupted, please.

Mr. Renwick: If he'd just sit down, we could have the vote.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't want the page number to get lost because I want them to work at it overnight and issue a press release tomorrow morning, explaining that they didn't really mean it then or don't really mean it now. It's page 5367. All the researchers in the back there, go and get it so the press release maybe can even be out in the early Globe and Mail in the morning. In any case, what the heck! That was a year and a half ago. He wasn't even the leader of the party then, and we ought not to refer back to it.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A point of privilege.

Mr. Cassidy: I would like to bring to the minister's attention, because he has misquoted me, that back in December 1976 I said that the government should put its proposals before a committee of this Legislature and that the committee of the Legislature look at its proposals. He is misrepresenting the position I took at that time.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the words speak for themselves. The member will have to live with the words he spoke a year and a half ago.

Mr. Eaton: All that talking you've done in Hansard is going to come back to haunt you, boy.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of order?

Mr. Cassidy: On page 5372 on December 3, 1976, I said and I quote: "We believe it is only fair to tenants and landlords that the government acts now and that it allow its proposals to go to public scrutiny and public hearings now or in January." That's what we said then, Mr. Speaker, and the minister should not misrepresent.

Ms. Gigantes: Where are the minister's proposals?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member for Ottawa Centre had been here a few minutes ago, he would have heard the man he beat for the leadership, the member for Wentworth, say he didn't want public hearings, that they would be dominated by landlords and that he was against the process. Compare those remarks with the remarks that I have just quoted, word for word, accurately. Live with them.

Finally, I sat here and listened among all the other silly remarks—

Mr. Makarchuk: It's about time someone else got the flak besides the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough).

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —to the member for the coffee belt. He was up earlier, for the first time on something other than the Municipal Elections Act, quoting figures of rent review increases that have been allowed. He had no specifics. He gave us 12, 14, 19, 26, 28, 30 per cent, every figure that came to his mind—

Mr. Renwick: He is always accurate. Do you remember coffee prices or not?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —as though there was something wrong with those percentage increases.

Mr. Renwick: Do you remember your first failure as minister on the coffee prices?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I thought he would be interested in an interview that the member for Ottawa Centre had. Why don't you sit and listen?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am entitled to the last two or three minutes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Riverdale will please come to order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I just want to read into the record a part of an interview between the member for Ottawa Centre and Elizabeth Gray on the CBO Morning Show. Get it, members of the NDP research. He went on to explain that a lot of the leases in Ottawa were two- or three-year leases, in which case perhaps a 19 per cent increase was suitable. How about it, folks?

Interjections.

An hon. member: That's six per cent a year.

An hon. member: That's over three years.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, the contradictions are all over the record.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So they won't have more contradictions they don't want to go to this committee—

Mr. Warner: You spend your whole time twisting words.

An hon. member: Highly irresponsible.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —whose remarks will be recorded in transcripts. This is a watershed in the history of the NDP.

Interjections.

Ms. Gigantes: Can you divide by three?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's the point at which someone said, "Hey, do you think you can play this ball game? Here's the ball for a few minutes." As soon as it was thrown, they said, "What? No, not me. I prefer to sit in the stands as a spectator. I prefer to condemn and criticize—"

Mr. Deans: No, we'd prefer not to destroy the process.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "—but for heaven's sake, don't ask me to participate." That's why this is a watershed.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this resolution.

(Applause).

Mr. Deans: Just because you are chicken.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: When I was addressing this assembly on this matter, I asked the minister if in his reply he would give to this House some commitment that the Housing minister would also be available at the committee. He has not replied. May I now ask if he is prepared to reply to that question?

Mr. Conway: It's your chance to make poor Claude feel like a somebody.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the rudeness of the member for St. George when she posed that question a few moments ago, I want to indicate to her that if I had the power to produce the Minister of Housing I would perhaps consider that request. However, if she has taken a moment to read the terms of reference instead of growling about the whole thing, she would have discovered—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —that the committee has all sorts of powers and the members may feel free to call whomever they wish and they may decide to take that step.

Mr. Warner: Unparliamentary language.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Interjections.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

MILTON JAIL

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce the intention of my ministry to close, later this spring, the century-old Milton Jail.

All of our complement staff at the jail have been offered alternative employment with my ministry. It is expected that most of the 19 staff will move to the Maplehurst Correctional Centre/Adult Training Centre, itself situated in Milton.

Milton Jail is only 25 miles from the Hamilton-Wentworth Detention Centre which, when opened shortly, will have bed space available to accommodate the average daily number of approximately 40 inmates from this jail. Inmates from the Halton and Peel regions will eventually be housed in the Milton Detention Centre, currently scheduled to be available in 1983. This centre will be constructed on the Maplehurst Correctional Centre site, which is already serviced for this purpose.

The closure of the Milton Jail will effect a saving to my ministry of approximately $400,000 in 1978-79 and $493,000 each year thereafter. There will also be a considerable saving to the Ministry of Government Services since substantial expenditures would have been required for renovations to keep this antiquated jail operating.

This will be the seventh 19th-century jail which I have closed since my appointment as minister last September. The others are the old Don Jail in Toronto and the jails in Orangeville, Simcoe, Kitchener, Guelph and Hamilton.

I would also like to give credit to my predecessors who, in the period between May 1971 and the date of my appointment, closed 13 antiquated facilities. These were the jails in Brampton, London, St. Thomas, Woodstock, Welland, St. Catharines, Cayuga, Goderich, Ottawa, Kingston, Napanee, Belleville and Picton. In addition to these 20 closures, upgrading of facilities was carried out at other jails, including major renovations at such institutions as Brockville Jail.

As I have indicated on a previous occasion in this House, I believe this government can be justifiably proud of its jail replacement and renovation program, which was set in motion when the province took over full responsibility for the operation of county and city jails in 1968.

Mr. Deans: With any kind of luck, you'll be out of work pretty soon.

PAPER MILL CONTROL ORDERS

Hon. Mr. McCague: I have a rather long answer to a question asked recently, Mr. Speaker, and I would like your permission to read it.

Mr. Speaker: I think it's for the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt). I spoke to the Minister of the Environment, and perhaps the hon. member would waive the provisional order requirement that he must be provided with a copy of a ministerial statement in advance. We decided this was the best way to handle it because of the length of the answer to a multiple question.

Mr. Gaunt: I am quite prepared to do that, sir.

Mr. Nixon: Murray's easy to get along with.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member would agree to that, especially since I anticipated the ruling you might give and gave him an answer two days ago—the same one I'm going to give you today.

Mr. Deans: Then why didn't you produce a copy?

Hon. Mr. McCague: In response to the question—and it was first posed by the NDP critic for Environment, the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden)—concerning control orders under the Environmental Protection Act on the Abitibi Forest Products Limited Thunder Bay division and Sturgeon Falls division mills, and the Abitibi Paper Company Limited Fort William division, I am pleased to advise that the requirements of these orders have been met.

The applications for approval for assistance to reduce suspended solids in the effluent from the Thunder Bay and Fort William division mills were submitted by the required deadline of March 30, 1978. Similarly, the report from the Sturgeon Falls division mill on means of reducing phenol loadings from the press runoff was received March 31, 1978.

In response to a supplementary question from the hon. member for Huron-Bruce, I would point out that the control orders on the three Abitibi mills in Thunder Bay require these mills as a group to take actions to reduce their collective discharges of BOD loadings. The first of these actions is required of the Abitibi Forest Products Limited Provincial Paper division Thunder Bay mill by June 30, 1978. Other major changes in Thunder Bay to reduce the BOD loadings are required by December 31, 1980, and December 31, 1982. Accordingly, there is no cause to consider charging the company under these orders at this time.

I might add that the company has proposed to meet the first of these obligations by shutting down its sulphide pulping operations at the Provincial Paper mill by June 30, 1978. We understand the other reductions required by the end of 1980 and 1982 will be achieved by major changes in the pulping processes used.

The hon. member for Huron-Bruce, in his question, appeared to imply violations by Abitibi Thunder Bay with respect to BOD emissions per se. The orders specify an overall reduction in BOD emissions or loadings from the three mills at this location to approximately 39 tons per day by the end of the term of the orders on December 31, 1982. There are no other BOD loading requirements that the company must meet at the present time.

It may be that the hon. member for Huron-Bruce is referring to BOD loading objectives which were identified in the ministry's report issued in September 1976 and titled, Alternative Policies for Pollution Abatement—The Ontario Pulp and Paper Industry. This report contains a table listing BOD and suspended solid loading from all pulp and paper industry mills in the province and identifies BOD and suspended solid loading objectives for them.

It should be noted that these objectives were not produced for regulatory purposes. They were produced from a special internal study in 1973 to permit rough estimates to be made of the ultimate cost of pollution abatement facilities to deal with these two effluent parameters alone and to put some degree of perspective on this cost and the overall environment problem associated with the industry. They were included for a similar purpose in the 1976 report. They were developed using a number of different approaches such as water quality requirements and what then appeared to be the best available abatement technology. In the latter case, there was no evaluation of whether or not the best available technology would necessarily be practicable in individual cases.

My ministry intends to continue to press this industry for substantial pollution abatement improvements wherever environmental problems are encountered. However, the factors we will consider in setting priorities for such works at individual mills will include, in addition to suspended solids and BOD, other waste water factors such as toxicity to fish and taste- and odour-impairing properties, and those associated with gaseous and particulate emissions to the air environment.

ONTARIO STATUS OF WOMEN COUNCIL

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, earlier today I deposited with the Clerk, copies of the third annual report of the Ontario Status of Women Council. The report covers the period ended March 31, 1977. I am sure that most members of this House are aware of the excellent work this council has done since it was appointed some four years ago, and I want to thank the members of the council for the very fine work they are doing.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: Before we get to oral questions, on Tuesday, April 4, the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) raised a matter of privilege and asked me to take such action as I deemed to be appropriate.

I have carefully perused the Hansard report of Mr. Riddell's statement, and from the facts as presented by him there appears to be at least a presumption that several offences against the provisions of section 38 of the Legislative Assembly Act may have been committed, not only by the service of these documents during the prohibited period, but also by the service of such documents in the precincts of the House without the permission of the House or the Speaker.

However, I must again remind the House that if any further action is to be taken in this matter it must be taken by the House. The Speaker has no authority to impose any sanctions on offenders. Only the House has such power.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I move the referral of this matter to the procedural affairs committee.

Mr. Nixon: The matter was raised by my colleague, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deans: But there's a motion on the floor.

Mr. S. Smith: He didn't have to do it.

Mr. Nixon: Since the motion has been put by the hon. member for Riverdale, I would ask your permission, sir, to put forward a motion on behalf of my colleague which would move the matter to the appropriate committee of the House.

Mr. Speaker: We have two motions, it would appear. The hon. member for Riverdale—

Mr. S. Smith: He didn't have the floor; he wasn't recognized, Mr. Speaker. You were still standing.

Mr. Speaker: He really wasn't recognized, although I didn't deny him the right to speak. Would the hon. member for Riverdale defer, to the hon. member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, the sum and substance of the motion?

Mr. Renwick: Always, Mr. Speaker.

[2:15]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, because of your ruling, I would move, seconded by Mr. Worton, that the matter of the service of documents pursuant to the Libel and Slander Act and the Labour Relations Act on the member for Huron-Middlesex, contrary to section 38 of the Legislative Assembly Act, RSO 1970, chapter 240, stand referred to the standing committee on procedural affairs, for which inquiry the committee may be empowered to engage counsel and which proceedings shall be transcribed and printed by Hansard in the format used for the House.

The committee shall be empowered to call for persons, papers and things and to examine witnesses under oath pursuant to section 35 of the Legislative Assembly Act and for which purpose the assembly doth command and compel the attendance before the said committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations for which the hon. the Speaker may issue his warrant or warrants.

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Before I ask any questions, Mr. Speaker, might I inquire of the government House leader as to the whereabouts of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough)?

Mr. Breaugh: They're hiding.

Mr. Martel: That is the hon. member's first question.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I can't be precise as to their whereabouts but I think their ultimate destination is here.

Mr. Ruston: But the hon. House leader is not sure about that, though.

Mr. S. Smith: I can only assume that as usual they are circling, looking for a place to land.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition with his second question.

Mr. S. Smith: I will therefore reserve my questions, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, until the arrival of those two hon. gentlemen.

HARTT INQUIRY

Mr. Cassidy: I first have a point of personal privilege to you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to point out to the Premier that contrary to what he said on Tuesday when he suggested I was not being constructive about the Hartt commission report and that the native peoples really supported the report, it has been greeted with great disappointment by both Chief Andrew Rickard from Treaty Nine and Chief Peter Kelly from Treaty Three. I just want to record that, and I hope the Premier doesn't make that kind of mistake in future.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of personal privilege, I would only inform the hon. member that I can't speak for Chief Kelly, but Chief Rickard was in my office when the concept of the three-pronged—or whatever terminology one may use—study of this matter was discussed—

Mr. Cassidy: John Kelly, I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and I have to inform the members of the House that Chief Rickard was totally in support of that recommendation.

Mr. Martel: That is not what he said in the paper.

Mr. Cassidy: I would just say that that is not what Chief Rickard had to say in the paper.

AUTO PACT

Mr. Cassidy: I do have a question now of the Premier. Will the Premier make a statement on his meetings these past few days with the heads of major automobile producing companies and, in particular, what consequences those meetings may produce in terms of ensuring a better balance of employment and production between Canada and the US in the automobile industry?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I met this week with one of the companies; I am meeting with another this afternoon. Perhaps early next week, if the hon. member wanted to ask me the same question, which I think is a very proper question, I would be in a better position to answer after I finish these discussions.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary. Could the Premier say with which company he has met now and give us an ongoing report on that particular meeting and we'll take the rest as they come?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it would be more appropriate if we discuss this matter after I've met with all of the companies.

Mr. Cassidy: I'll have to let that one ride then.

SALE OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Treasurer, now that he has come into the House. No, I will address this to the Minister of Housing since he doesn't get much attention and he should have some more.

Mrs. Campbell: Why?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the minister's attention that the government has begun to sell off the Ontario Mortgage Corporation's mortgages. I want to ask the Minister of Housing, now that the government has begun to sell off these HOME and condominium mortgages which stem from 1976, 1977 and 1978, and in view of the fact that the sale carries with it no obligation on the part of the buyers of those mortgages to renew mortgages on the below-market interest rates at which they were issued over the past three years, can the minister say whether the government has informed the 1,072 families immediately concerned that their mortgages are being sold? Can the minister also say what will be the consequences to those people when they are asked to renew mortgages at rates very considerably higher than the rate at which they took them, particularly in view of the fact that they were offered special mortgage financing at below market interest rates when they took out those mortgages?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, very clearly, the mortgages will be sold on the same conditions as prevailed at the time that they were originally entered into and the purchasers of those mortgages will not be bound to any terms different from those the Ontario

Mortgage Corporation itself would have been bound to at the time of renewal.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the minister not feel the government has any moral obligation to the people who took out those mortgages and who were enticed into taking those mortgages with large ads like this, which appeared only one year ago tomorrow and which said and I quote: "Special mortgage financing at below market interest rates"? Were those people not being offered 35-year amortization on mortgages and do they not have the right to expect that that kind of mortgage financing would continue over the life of that agreement?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I am sure if the leader of the third party had been listening to the answer he would have interpreted it properly. I said those purchasing the mortgages will live with the terms and conditions under which the mortgages were originally entered into. If they happen to be five-, 10-, 15- or 25-year mortgages those are the conditions under which the new companies will purchase them and they will honour the terms and conditions as set down by the Ontario Mortgage Corporation.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the mortgages were originally offered on a five-year term, 35-year amortization, and since the interest rate originally offered was substantially below market in order to allow people who couldn't afford market housing to get homes of their own, was it not the intention of the Ontario Mortgage Corporation just one year ago, as recently as that, that this kind of financing would continue for a lengthy period of time and not just for the five-year period, or if OMC and the government intended that financing concession to extend for only five years, should they not have been telling those purchasers so that they knew where they stood?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the terms and conditions were very clearly spelled out. I have said that three times now. We indicated clearly what the interest factor would be in the initial term of the loan. It was also indicated that the mortgage would be for a 35-year period renewable on five-year terms or whatever it might be. Some of the HOME mortgages happen to be for a 25-year complete term without a renewable period and that's the way those mortgages will be sold. In other words, we have said to the HOME purchasers, "In the first five years there is a mortgage break for you and they will be renewed at the end of the five-year period on terms and conditions set by the market."

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Would the minister indicate at this time what he expects those people to do when they get around to renewing their mortgage at the expiration of the five-year term and they will not be able to afford a mortgage at the current interest rates?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to project myself into a hypothetical situation.

Mr. Wildman: You are a hypothetical minister.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: You are a vanishing member, too.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: Without dealing in hypothetical situations, I would like to ask the minister whether or not the ministry has conducted any study of those persons who took advantage of the mortgage break that was offered to determine whether or not their financial position, which was taken into account at the time they qualified for the reduced mortgage, has improved to the point where they will be able to go into the private mortgage field and find mortgages at a price they can afford to pay, or will they, as I suspect, be faced with the possibility of having to sell the homes because they can't meet the additional payments?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the latter part I do not believe will happen, that they will be looking at selling their homes. There will be mortgage money and the companies that will be purchasing the mortgages—

Mr. Makarchuk: Where is it?

Mr. Deans: Have you studied the mortgage market?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, if I could finish the answer to the question, unless they prefer to answer it themselves—

Mr. Deans: I don't want to answer it, no.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: —the mortgage corporation has re-examined the mortgages—and may I say they have been gone over very carefully by our corporation—to make sure that the best qualified mortgages for replacement under the free-market position are being made available at this time and the conditions will be as prevailing in the market at the time.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's right, and they can't afford that.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'd be wrong to try to project or assess what some people's incomes might be at the end of the first five-year period, any more that it has been possible in the free-market position.

Mr. Deans: Aren't you glad you are out of that ministry, John?

OMA-OHIP FEE SCHEDULES

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Health regarding the negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association: Can the minister tell us whether there has been any suggestion from the OMA that the health insurance legislation be changed to allow opting-in doctors to bill their patients for the amount that is above the OHIP scale, or permit doctors to opt in for some of their poor patients and opt out for wealthier ones? Have those suggestions been brought forward at all and, if so, has the minister made it very clear that the government will not permit this to happen?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Inasmuch as the negotiations are going on this afternoon—even as we speak, I think—I would prefer not to comment on those at this time.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, do I take it that such a possibility might even be entertained by the Ministry of Health—that you have not, in fact, completely ruled that out as a possibility?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, five years ago, the government and the OMA agreed we would thereafter enter into good-faith bargaining on an annual basis. The Leader of the Opposition and others can postulate all kinds of things and suggest that they are in or out; I intend to live up to that commitment to good-faith bargaining, and the way we are going, the whole thing could end up here on the floor of the House before we even arrive at some kind of conclusion. Certainly, once the negotiations with the Ontario Medical Association are concluded, I will be glad to discuss what has gone on.

Mr. Nixon: Fait accompli.

Mrs. Campbell: Fait accompli.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: But I don't think it would really serve the interest of the people whom we both serve if we don't let those negotiations carry on as constituted.

Mr. Cassidy: In addition to the minister's commitment to act in good faith in discussions with the doctors, will the minister assure the House that he will also act in good faith in relation to the people who are consumers of medical care in the province of Ontario, in particular because thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of them, will be excluded from balanced billing proposals which the doctors have put forward and which would have the result of bringing in a disguised form of deterrent fee in the province?

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is absolute balderdash, Cassidy; you know not whereof you speak.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It goes without saying that the government which introduced hospital insurance into the province, that the government which introduced medical insurance into the province—

Mr. Swart: Dragged into it, is the word.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —will ensure that the interests of the people are in fact looked after in the best way possible.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the minister's statements on Friday concerning a separate OHIP schedule of benefits and a separate OMA fee schedule, is the minister now suggesting that the government is prepared to give government approval to both such scales? The minister will recall that he said we could anticipate that there will be two separate scales. He mentioned this on Friday. Would both of those scales have government approval, once they are negotiated?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, let me repeat what I said on Friday—in fact, what I said at the time the negotiations began—that is that the government is not going to pay 36 per cent more for the services listed in the schedule. Secondly, if you will recognize that by law—unless you would prefer to change this law or to make it illegal—the Ontario Medical Association has always had, and I think should always have, the right to write its own fee schedules to indicate what its members, as responsible people, think they are worth. I know some members opposite would almost like to make doctors civil servants—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —I was pointing that way, it's all right, calm down. The hon. Leader of the Opposition used the term "have government approval." The law is such that they have the right to write their own fee schedule. The law is such that the government has the right to say we are not going to pay 36 per cent more. Both of those things have happened.

Mr. S. Smith: A brief supplementary: The minister may not be aware of the import of the question. Is the minister aware that if the OMA writes its own schedule and receives government approval for it, it is then able to charge in accordance with the schedule without running afoul of the Combines Investigation Act; whereas, is the minister aware and has he conveyed to the OMA that, if they have their scale without government approval, they might run afoul of that particular Act—the Combines Investigation Act?

[2:30]

Hon. B. Stephenson: Where has the member been for 10 years? He is misinformed, ill-informed and unaware.

Mr. Deans: He's been on fee for service for 10 years.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: To the best of my knowledge, the Combines Investigation Act doesn't enter into it at all. If the member is suggesting it does, I'd be interested to know in what respect he'd suggest that. Then we'd be prepared to look at that angle. I'm sure that the Ontario Medical Association have certainly considered that because they have excellent counsel themselves.

Mr. S. Smith: As a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker or at least as a final supplementary from myself though maybe others have supplementaries—

Mr. Speaker: It probably will be the final supplementary.

Mr. S. Smith: In your wisdom, sir.

Mr. Speaker: We've had six now.

Mr. S. Smith: Since the proposals that I asked about in my original question—namely, the thought that the OMA might be asking for the rights for opted-in doctors to bill for the amount above the OHIP scale and for other doctors to be able to opt in their poor patients and opt out their wealthy ones—would each involve amendments to the Health Insurance Act, how can the minister come to this Legislature and say that such amendments are negotiable with the OMA before they're discussable in the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, the hon. member is trying to put words into my mouth.

Mr. Bolan: That's easy to do.

Mr. Deans: Either that or keep it closed.

Mr. McEwen: Why would he? The minister has his foot in his mouth. He could get both feet in there too.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I understand that he would perhaps do like the people to his left, virtually make doctors civil servants and dictate their incomes to them.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Hey, look, the member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. McEwen) is back. Did we have a by-election?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, Mr. Speaker, including silent Earl back there, I'm sure the member would want us to bargain in good faith and not to destroy those negotiations which have gone on very well for four years and we're now in our fifth. As I said earlier, I think we should let those negotiations carry on in good faith and not destroy them here.

Mr. Mancini: Where's Frank Miller now that we need him?

Mr. McEwen: Where's Matthew Dymond?

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary. The member for Parkdale.

Mr. Duzsza: Supplementary: As the minister well knows, the final responsibility for what is going to be the allowed fee schedule and payment for the services is the minister's. Will the minister answer very simply the question, is he going to allow, once the negotiation is over, this unconscionably large increase for the physicians?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I've already made it clear that the government is not going to pay 36 per cent more. That's been clear all along.

Mr. Cassidy: You'll make the people pay it.

UTDC RESEARCH

Mr. S. Smith: My second question is for the Treasurer. In view of the Treasurer's comments on Thursday when he said: "There has been a great deal of research done at universities, for example, publicly-funded research by very bright people . . . My own view is that some of that research might have been better done in the private sector", could the Treasurer give us his view on the public funding of transit research by his government through its wholly-owned Urban Transportation Development Corporation? Does he think this is still an appropriate use of public funds or shouldn't such research really be done in the private sector?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: My view? Fantastic!

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: In the absence of a dictionary, one hardly knows whether this is simply beyond the Treasurer's fantasy to contemplate or whether in fact he believes that this is a wonderful way to carry out the business of Ontario. Can he explain, given the rather dismal sales record of this agency since 1974 and its utter failure to attract partners or private capital, how long is he, as a person who believes in research in the private sector, prepared to subsidize its experiments in the $55.5 million intermediate capacity transit program, for example?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: My remarks on Thursday, the member says it was, and I've made these remarks before, have been in the context that a number of people—including perhaps the Leader of the Opposition himself, though I'm not sure of this, but certainly I and the Premier and others—have said that governments have been taking an increasingly larger part of the gross national product. That is something which has been reversed in this province for the last two or three years, and we hope to continue to reverse that.

What I was commenting on is what is often overlooked, namely, that in the process of going from roughly 20 per cent of GNP after the war to something like 40 per cent in Canada today—about 35 in Ontario—what has also accompanied that has been an increase in the human resources used by governments or by the public sector generally. Certainly some of the best talents and best brains have been recruited into government, into hospital administration, into universities, some of them into publicly financed research activities.

The point I was attempting to make was that had the money, of course, not been available in such large quantities to the public sector, some of the human resources might have found their way on to plant floors, if I can put it that way—into industrial research, into higher technology—in the private sector.

Ms. Gigantes: There isn't any research. What are you talking about?

Mr. Warner: Nonsense.

Ms. Gigantes: You are dreaming.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But the fact is that brains as well as human resources have been consumed by the public sector in ever larger amounts.

Mr. Foulds: Unfortunately it doesn't apply in your case.

Hon. B. Stephenson: And it will never apply in yours.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Having said that, there will always be, I would expect, a role for governments to do those things which are either too large for the private sector or to which the private sector is not paying attention.

The fact is, to my recollection—the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) or the Premier have a much better knowledge of this than I—but the discouraging part was that the private sector in this country, not just in this province, was not moving into the area of what is obviously a very high risk technology, a very exciting technology—that of transit. Certainly if the private sector had moved forward then we would not be as involved as we are.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are talking like a socialist.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Certainly if the private sector can get involved or wants to get involved then I think UTDC takes on an entirely different role.

Mr. Makarchuk: Socialist McKeough. Maoist.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the Treasurer comment then on the possibility that the problem is not too much research being carried out in the public sector but too little research being carried out in the private sector, and that the reason for that lack of research in the private sector may in fact be because of the foreign control of too much of the industry in our province and in our country?

Would the Treasurer like to comment specifically on the findings of the federal government's automotive task force, which I think is relevant, which says that consumers in Canada have contributed at least $230 million annually to the research and development accounts of the parent corporations of the big four here in Canada over the past six years? That amount of money is going abroad for research in the United States. Should that research not be carried out here in Ontario or in Canada within the private sector, and what is the government going to do about it?

Mr. Eakins: That's his third question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, but I don't think the member can have it both ways.

Mr. MacDonald: Nor can you.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member is an advocate of an ever larger public sector. One of the things that has happened in an enlarging public sector—for example, versus us and the United States—is that you have, and I don't have these figures at my fingertips, but you have assistant professors in this country earning $28,000 to $29,000 a year where in the States they would earn $18,000 a year.

Had not so much of our human and capital resources gone into the public sector, using universities as one example—

Mr. Wildman: They would have gone to the United States.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—it might have been easier and less expensive, and therefore there might have been more research in the private sector of this country. But that has not been the case.

Interjections.

An hon. member: Might.

Mr. Warner: That's wishful thinking.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, if in fact the Treasurer feels badly that so much has gone into the public sector when the private sector could have done it, what is the reason for UTDC? Is it simply that the Treasurer fails to provide reasonable conditions for the private sector to enter into this allegedly worthy enterprise, or does the public sector simply know better than to get involved in the sort of thing that is going on in the Kingston situation?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, Mr. Speaker. I think the question as to why they weren't involved in it is a question which should be put to the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. McEwen: You announced it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But what you are talking about are very large projects and what you are talking about in UTDC as much as anything was a catalyst to bring some large and some small companies together in one place.

I recall particularly some of the contracts which were bid on which ultimately had to have a heavy involvement of the government of Canada as well as the government of Ontario because Canadian industry, research or otherwise, simply wasn't large enough—not even Canadian-owned industry operating in this country was large enough to bid on those projects in themselves and there has to be a role for government. So I don't think it is an either/or proposition.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the Treasurer not agree that the major reason the government undertook the research being carried out at Kingston through the Urban Transportation Development Corporation, is because the government got egg on its face with the Krauss-Maffei adventure, when it should, in fact, have been building on the strength of transit technology already available in the public sector through the TTC?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly not reply in the affirmative to that question. I don't think the member knows what he is talking about. I'm sure during the estimates—

Mr. Cassidy: I told the government, long before—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You told the government?

Mr. Cassidy: Sure.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well then, I guess we didn't listen.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I guess you didn't.

Mr. Warner: That's the story of your life.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, would the minister, then, in the interests of encouraging entrepreneurship and private enterprise in the province, and private creativity, take the necessary steps to ensure that the research and development money, which is now budgeted with the Ministry of Energy, be apportioned as seed money to private interests in order to develop the unique energy technology that we are capable of in Ontario?

Mr. Swart: You guys should stop trying; you will never get an answer from McKeough.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, that is a question that should go to my colleague, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz).

TRUCKING CHARGES

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Could the minister inform the House whether or not he has personally endorsed his ministry's memorandum, dated February 13 of this year, signed by acting district manager M. M. McIntyre, relating to the production of written reports and the establishment of a quota system in the highway carriers section?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to comment on the following excerpt from that memorandum: "The number of reports being produced at this time are not sufficient to account for the number of man-hours spent to obtain them. Therefore, an order to account for the man-hours being spent, it is necessary to increase production of both the truck inspections and area inspectors. The following will be implemented immediately.

"At the truck inspection stations, each man is requested to produce a minimum of 10 reports weekly. As a result of these 10 reports produced, it will be expected that no less than seven charges will be directed. In the areas of each inspector, it is requested to produce a minimum of six reports weekly; as a result of these reports it is expected that no less than five charges will be directed.

"On portable scales each man is expected to produce a minimum of seven reports per week. As a result of these seven reports it is expected that no less than six charges will be directed.

"The quantities of production set out in the above are of minimum. Subsequently, in a period of nine months, these figures will be increased to 15 and 12, 10 and seven respectively. In reviewing some of the production reports recently submitted it is evident that some of the personnel are very close to meeting these requirements at the present time, however, it is felt that all personnel can reach this minimum by applying extra effort."

Mr. Breithaupt: They will get gold stars. Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, can I ask what the question is?

Mr. Ruston: Are you in favour of it?

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not agree the establishment of a quota system is contrary to the public interest and the policy set out by his ministry and the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) with regard to the issuance of tickets on a quota basis, and would the minister consult with the Attorney General with regard to the legality and the propriety, the efficacy, of such a so-called quota system? And would he not take immediate steps to see that such a distasteful practice is terminated or discontinued immediately?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the memorandum from one of my officials.

Mr. Nixon: Have a look at it and withdraw it.

Mr. Warner: Why did you say you didn't endorse it?

An hon. member: You said you didn't endorse it.

An hon. member: You are going to wish you never had.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I certainly will review the memorandum; but from what I have observed from the excerpts that have been read from the memorandum, it is a part of the continuing effort of my ministry to increase our productivity, to cut down our overhead and to get the best possible use out of our facilities.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I can see absolutely no reason whatsoever why we should not say that each of our inspection staff, doing truck inspections for instance, should not be expected to do a certain number of inspections per day. I think that's only good—

Interjections.

[2:45]

Mr. Warner: Is the minister telling us this afternoon that it is government policy to establish a quota system in terms of fines; that that is a policy and he's prepared to stand by that? If not, does he intend to change the policy, because obviously he has outlined it in the memorandum that was sent?

Mr. Makarchuk: Is this a new tax policy?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Nothing I said had anything to do with setting a quota for the laying of charges.

Mr. Conway: A new tax policy.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I said I agree fully that there should be objectives or expected levels of productivity of our employees. Obviously, when a certain number of inspections are made, if the inspections find unsafe vehicles, for instance, or overloaded vehicles or whatever it may be, then only on that evidence are charges laid, and that's the way it should be.

Mr. Warner: That's not what it says in the memo. It's a quota system for fines.

Mr. Cunningham: It is becoming obvious that nothing that the minister says or does is of any importance to the people within his ministry. Would the minister not agree, though, that outlined in this particular memo—which we have sent over to him now and which he is now in possession of—

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are brilliant. Your intellectual capacity is overwhelming.

Mr. Cunningham: —it, in fact, explicitly defines the necessity for laying charges, regardless of the merits of any particular case; and that he is, in fact, setting up a quota system for charges on the highways?

Hon. W. Newman: Did they get you?

Mr. Cunningham: I don't drive a truck; do you?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that as far as I am concerned there is no quota system for charges. There should be, and I fully support, an increase in the productivity of the number of inspections carried out. Charges would only be laid when there were offences committed.

Mr. S. Smith: What are you going to do about this?

TRUCKING LEGISLATION

Mr. Philip: A new question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Can the minister inform the House of the results of his two meetings with representatives of the trucking industry, one of which I believe the Premier attended? Also, in the light of these representations and in the light of the fact that the minister no doubt now realizes that Bill 21 will not pass in this House—indeed, that even members of his own cabinet are opposed to it—will the minister assure the House that Bill 21 will either be withdrawn or substantially altered?

Mr. Conway: Lorne says it will not pass.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Philip: Is the minister aware of the uncertainty that has been created by this bill in the industry, such uncertainty that companies in this time of high unemployment are, in fact, cancelling orders for trucks and trailers because they don't know what is happening in their business? In the light of this, will the minister not at least make a definitive statement in the next week or so as to where he stands on Bill 21, which is opposed by both opposition parties in this House?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have had ongoing discussions—

Mr. Nixon: I bet you have.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have ongoing discussions at all times with the transportation industry, not only the—

Mr. Cunningham: Are you and the president speaking yet?

Mr. Breithaupt: Careful, or the contributions are going to stop.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have had many discussions with many aspects of the transportation industry, not only the trucking association. I have met twice with representatives of the OTA in the past few weeks. I have also met a number of other people interested both in the trucking industry and the shipping industry, and we're having ongoing discussions at all times.

Mr. Philip: One final supplementary: Have the minister or his officials yet calculated the number of licence holders who will be affected by this deregulation bill, and is it not fair to say that aside for R and H class licences that the bill will affect between 40 and 50 per cent of present licences?

Mr. S. Smith: Is it in order to discuss the bill like this?

An hon. member: I would think not.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say at the moment whether those figures that have been suggested are right.

Mr. Swart: You should be able to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: When one says the percentage of the licence holders who would be affected, it would certainly depend on what degree of effect one considers to be an effect, and I'm sure there's a great many licensed carriers now who would be affected positively as well as negatively.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Hon. B. Stephenson: On Tuesday last the hon member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil) questioned me about the date at which the assessments to the Workmen's Compensation Board by employers in the province were due. I misinformed the House when I suggested—

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, not again.

Mr. Conway: That's par for the course.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—this was a part of the quarterly program of assessment which was to be introduced, I thought, this year. It will be introduced in 1979. But I would remind the House that all assessments are based on payroll estimates which are required to be returned to the board by the end of February.

Before 1977, it was normal practice for the board, for more than 20 years, to issue the forms for the return of payroll information in December and January of each year. Following the receipt of the estimated payroll, billings began in February and they were due 60 days later, at some time during the month of April.

In 1977, the billings were sent out in March and were due 60 days later, on May 20. That's exactly the same date the billings are due this year. No change has been made in the assessment notice issuing function in 1978 except that particular assessments are no longer delayed. All of the assessments are now issued when they are ready, rather than being sent out in bulk form.

Mr. O'Neil: As a supplementary to my question asked the other day, does the minister not feel this will put additional hardship on a lot of both large and small businesses in making sure these payments are due well in advance of previous years? I don't believe they have been notified.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, they are not due in advance of previous years. They are due two months after the issuance of the assessment, as has always been the case.

Mr. McClellan: May I ask the minister again, how long do the injured workers with families in the province have to suffer by virtue of her refusal to bring in an amendment to raise the rates?

Mr. Speaker: I don't believe that is a supplementary.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, I have never refused to bring that in. I have stated several times in this House that indeed it would be coming in.

Mr. Wildman: Just postponed.

Mr. O'Neil: Final supplementary: Is the minister then saying that when these assessments were sent out, she did notify the people that the payments would be due earlier?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would remind the hon. member that I don't send the assessments out, the Workmen's Compensation Board does. And exactly the same notice was sent to each employer, that the payments are due 60 days following the receipt of the assessment.

Mr. McClellan: Over which you have no control at all.

Hon. B. Stephenson: This has not changed in 20 years. It will change next year, in that those who were assessed more than $10,000 will be given an opportunity to pay this on a quarterly basis. We feel this would be more equitable for those employers.

FIRE DAMAGE ASSISTANCE

Hon. Mr. Kerr: On March 28 the hon. members for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil) and Peterborough (Mr. Turner) inquired about what type of provincial assistance might be available following major fires in Trenton and Bancroft. The fires caused considerable property damage and left a number of people homeless. Fire damage in Trenton was estimated at about $2.5 million and in Bancroft at about $800,000. It is suspected that arson may have been involved in the Trenton fires and the fire marshal's office is investigating.

As I indicated in my initial response, this is a different situation from a natural disaster, like a flood or a severe snowstorm, where provincial assistance is provided at the time. The fires were both quite serious but basically involved private property which may have been insured against such a calamity. The communities were not crippled by the fire, nor were essential municipal services, such as water supply or sewage disposal, destroyed. In the case of the Bancroft fire, Ontario Provincial Police did provide assistance at the scene, and I know that fire fighters from the Canadian forces base were in attendance at the Trenton fire.

The situation in both communities does not warrant providing provincial compensation to businessmen and property owners who suffered fire loss. I can only assure the Legislature that requests for provincial aid following a natural disaster or major outbreak which cripples the community will continue to be assessed on an individual basis.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. I wonder if the minister is in a position to either clarify, deny, confirm or otherwise comment on an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, headed "Carleton Board of Education New School Proposals Suffer Serious Setback"? In particular, would he deal with the portion of the article that alleges his ministry will not approve any new school construction in Carleton until the Carleton board has reached a formal agreement with the Ottawa Board of Education?

Mr. Conway: Since when did you start believing the Citizen, Sid?

Mr. Handleman: I don't believe it. I'm giving them a chance to deny it.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm happy to have my friend draw attention to what the Ottawa Citizen has been publishing, although I must say I have read some stories in the Ottawa Citizen recently about the school situation there which lead me to wonder whether all the facts ever appear in their stories.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

An hon. member: Is this rehearsed?

Hon. Mr. Wells: If the hon. members would like letter and verse on that, I believe there was an article in there that indicated we were going to give $22 million to the Carleton Board of Education in capital money.

An hon. member: That, obviously, is not true.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That, of course, was an obviously inaccurate story, and something which anyone would realize is not possible and would not be considered by this government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not until Brampton gets its share!

Hon. Mr. Wells: In commenting on the article my friend is talking about, I would say I regret that the approval we had given to the Carleton Board of Education for the new vocational school appears to have suffered setbacks because of the actions of the reeve of Nepean township and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, both of whom appear to be putting further roadblocks in the way of the development of this school.

Mr. Conway: Handleman's still after Andy Haydon.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I might say that I think that school should proceed, and I and my ministry will be happy to assist the board to clear away any of these additional roadblocks.

In so far as the rest of the present capital program for the Carleton Board of Education is concerned, it has never been, and it is not, my intention that it be held up ad infinitum pending agreement on certain other school accommodation agreements between the Ottawa Board of Education and the Carleton Board of Education. In fact, I was intending to send a letter to the Carleton Board of Education tomorrow, informing them of what we could approve in this year's program.

Mr. Handleman: Supplementary: Would it be possible, in the approvals given to the Carleton Board of Education, that they would be permitted to reorder their priorities in accordance with any agreements they might reach with the Ottawa Board of Education?

Hon. Mr. Wells: There is always that possibility. I certainly would be happy to agree to any kind of reordering of priorities in the Ottawa-Carleton area. I must say that in my six years as Minister of Education this ranks at the top of those areas where two boards seems to be running hammerhead together and not being able to agree when there is a real need for agreement. On behalf of all the residents of that area and the people of this province, if we're to save money on educational costs, the kind of agreements that have to go ahead there also have to be affected in other areas of this province. But this, to my mind, has been one of the most difficult areas, and I hope the trustees will come to some agreement.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Ms. Gigantes: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment—

Some hon. members: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: There's a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary; the hon. member for Carleton East.

Ms. Gigantes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister, given the way he describes the situation between two boards in the Ottawa-Carleton area, whether he is going to take any initiatives, following along the lines of the Mayo recommendation, to make sure that those intrinsic difficulties between the two boards will not arise every two or three years? In other words, is he going to make some positive decisions following on the Mayo report?

Hon. Mr. Wells: In a couple of weeks I intend to indicate, in a white paper manner, exactly what our opinion should be in so far as the Mayo commission recommendations are concerned.

[Later:]

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege; it has been drawn to my attention that during the answer to a question which I gave a few minutes ago during this session, I referred to a story which had appeared in the Ottawa Citizen and indicated it was an inaccurate story. That story in fact appeared in the Ottawa Journal.

Mr. Breithaupt: Any more inaccuracies?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would therefore like to apologize to the Ottawa Citizen.

Mr. Warner: Don't apologize, just resign. They'd be very happy too.

Mr. S. Smith: Your inaccuracy is a bad as theirs.

Hon. Mr. Wells: And I am happy that my confidence in their clarity and forthrightness has been restored.

WATER QUALITY REPORT

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. With respect to the Ontario-Ottawa-Quebec water quality study and report on the Ottawa River, completed some months ago, which indicates some serious phosphorous loading problems as well as mercury pollution, does the ministry intend to release the report? If so, when? And if not, why not?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member asked that question.

Mr. Cassidy: That's one the minister must have an answer for.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Since I came to the ministry, I have been trying to persuade the sponsors of the study—the federal government and the government of Quebec—to release this report. They shared in the cost and, of course, share in the ownership of it. We have not been successful with either the federal government or the government of Quebec in getting their permission to release the report and are therefore reluctant to do it on our own.

Mr. S. Smith: Anticipate; so what is so secret?

Ms. Gigantes: Go ahead.

Mr. S. Smith: Why not?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I can't really tell the member why not, or when.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: When was the last time the ministry had contact with the federal government with respect to this report, and does the minister not anticipate that some agreement could be arrived at in the near future in order to release it; and if no agreement can be arrived at, has the ministry considered releasing the report on its own because it participated in the study and participated financially as well?

Ms. Gigantes: The government supported it too.

An hon. member: Take a chance.

Hon. Mr. McCague: We will take those matters under consideration.

Mr. Warner: In the fullness of time.

Hon. Mr. McCague: There was a letter mailed to them recently; there have been two letters to my understanding. I think my predecessor wrote to them—

Mr. Laughren: Try the phone.

Mr. Makarchuk: Try Telex.

Hon. Mr. McCague:—once or twice. I have written to them once.

An hon. member: Try carrier pigeon.

Hon. Mr. McCague: My guess is that it was a month ago. I think the question was, "Did they get a letter from me?" I have no idea.

An hon. member: They run the postal service too.

Mr. Kennedy: It is only a month since we sent it.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us whether his ministry, when it entered into this joint project with Quebec and with the federal government, made any agreement whatsoever to keep the results secret, failing unanimous agreement to reveal those results; and if that kind of agreement did occur, why did he enter into such an agreement? If it did not occur, why does he feel constrained from revealing the results?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any agreement. There has been an exchange of letters and at no time has there—

Mr. Warner: It was a gentleman's agreement, and that lets the minister out.

Hon. Mr. McCague:—been any indication that there was an agreement that the report would not be released.

Mr. S. Smith: Release it.

Hon. Mr. McCague: That's all well and good, the hon. member says release it; we would like to do it in good faith if we could. I would agree with the members opposite that if we run into continual resistance, we probably will release it gladly.

Mr. S. Smith: Good.

Hon. Mr. McCague: But that's "continual resistance."

PAPER MILL CONTROL ORDERS

Ms. Bryden: With regard to the Minister of the Environment's statement today in reply to my question on whether Abitibi had met recent control order deadlines, while he did confirm compliance with certain interim deadlines, his statement also contained a very disturbing ministerial pronouncement downgrading the validity and the importance—

Mr. Speaker: I don't hear a question yet.

Ms. Bryden: —of earlier guidelines set by the ministry for the pulp and paper industry. I would like to know whether this means that the minister has abandoned the earlier guidelines and is attempting to justify the abandonment of it in this statement; and will he bring out new less stringent guidelines in accord with what appears to be the government's policy of weakening environmental standards and yielding to the blackmail by the industry, which is threatening to reduce jobs if pollution control is not relaxed?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The answer to both questions is no.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, can the minister also tell us why he continues to rely on guidelines instead of mandatory standards so that we would know what the objectives are for water quality in this province?

Hon. Mr. McCague: That's a very long answer which I was able to provide to the member in estimates, yesterday, I think it was. I don't think we need to go into that again at this point.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Housing has the answer to two questions asked previously.

HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) earlier this week asked about the statistics and how much money had been given to the city of Toronto and to the Metro boroughs under the Ontario home renewal program rental. The statistics are as follows: In 1976-77, the first year of the program, the city of Toronto received $62,000 and the borough of Etobicoke $10,000 from a total budget of $2 million. In 1977-78, of the total $2 million budgeted, none was taken up by Metropolitan Toronto because none was requested by that municipality or its boroughs.

As the House is probably aware, the allocation of funds is based on both needs and on the amount requested by the municipalities. In the case of the city of Toronto, it requested an accountable advance in 1976-77 of $62,000 out of a total application by that municipality of $250,000. The city made no further requests for funds in 1977-78. The Ontario home renewal program rental—and I stress rental—was conceived as an experimental, limited-funded program. The province has allocated $4 million for this program during the past two years, and we are now monitoring and evaluating the results. Based on our findings, we would be in a position to determine what kind of funding would be most appropriate in the future in conjunction with our programs with the federal government.

REXDALE H.O.M.E. PROJECT

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I have the answer to a question by the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip). On Thursday the member inquired about the status of the HOME development at Finch and Silverstone Drive in Rexdale, asking why sodding and other work had not been completed, despite the fact that he had received a letter from the former Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes) last September indicating that the builder would begin work almost immediately.

By way of explanation, I would point out that after the letter was sent to the hon. member, the builder's financial difficulties increased. A number of legal problems concerning mechanics' liens occurred and the ministry was unable to move in and complete the landscaping work until the named matter had been settled.

However, I can report to the House today that the Ontario Mortgage Corporation has arranged a settlement with the lien claimants, although the claimants have not yet signed the official documents. This would enable Ontario Mortgage Corporation to complete the landscaping, fencing, sidewalks, driveways and so on. This work should begin as soon as weather permits and sod is available to us. As a matter of fact, OMC did arrange for temporary driveways for the units when it became apparent late last year that there would be no activity over the winter months.

As far as HUDAC is concerned, the home owners will have full protection under the warranty program for interior and exterior deficiencies. When the official documents are signed with the lien claimants, OMC will be committed to completing the necessary landscaping work, and the question of HUDAC finishing this work will no longer be an issue.

HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM

Ms. Bryden: With regard to the minister's answer to my question about the Ontario home renewal program for rental accommodation, do I take it there is no money in the present estimates before us for this program, in spite of the fact that I am sure there is still a very great need for providing moderate and low-income rental accommodation, certainly in the city of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: As I have already said, we are doing an assessment of the program in its first two years to see whether we should continue it. At the same time, we are in further discussions with the federal government in some co-operative programs with them on the same basis.

REXDALE H.O.M.E. PROJECT

Mr. Philip: Can the minister tell us whether he knows whether J. C. Byers, the builder that got us into all of this problem, has been deregistered and whether this builder is still building in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Obviously, that is a question that will have to be directed to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations since deregistering is under his ministry.

Mr. Philip: May I redirect that question then? I would think that as Minister of Housing the minister would at least want to know whether J. C. Byers was building more housing for his ministry.

Mr. Speaker: Did the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations hear the question that was directed to him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There was a large impediment in front of me, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't hear it.

Mr. Speaker: Briefly, would you restate the question?

Mr. Philip: To the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, then: In the light of the Minister of Housing's statement concerning the problems we have had with the home warranty program in the Martingrove and Albion Roads area, and particularly with one construction firm, J. C. Byers, can the minister tell us if he knows why this particular company that has created all of these problems has not been deregistered and whether this builder is still operating in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I don't register or deregister any of the builders, as I presume the member well knows.

Mr. Swart: The Minister of Housing just said you did.

Mrs. Campbell: Your minister didn't know it.

Mr. S. Smith: Answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know the member understands, or I presume he understands, that the home warranty plan is administered outside of my ministry, although they report to and through my ministry.

Mr. Warner: He just handed it to you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So if the member has a question about any specific builder, I'm sure he'll agree that the appropriate place to ask that question is by way of a letter to the new home warranty plan program, not to me.

Ms. Gigantes: Don't you think it's important for you to know?

Mr. Wildman: Somebody's responsible!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, if the member has any complaints about the way his letter has been handled or the way they dealt with any particular builder, I'd be happy to hear from him.

MINISTRY REORGANIZATION

Mr. Blundy: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. In the light of information we have that the Ministry of Community and Social Services has been given a deadline by Management Board to reduce its executive positions by December of this year, and in view of impending changes we are considering in the children's services branch, would the minister tell us now what positions he contemplates will be removed and what reorganization will be made to accommodate these changes?

Mr. Kerrio: So that's why the deputy minister has been changed.

Hon. Mr. Norton: As I believe the hon. member knows, the reorganization contemplated in my ministry goes beyond just the children's services division. We are now, and have been for some time, in receipt of a report from management consultants who were commissioned shortly after my arrival in the ministry.

Mrs. Campbell: Which we are not allowed to see.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We have been engaged in a very detailed review and planning for the reorganization, which I hope to be in a position to announce in some detail within the next month or so. I'm not in a position at this point to answer the specific question the hon. member asked, but I think that answer will be forthcoming at the time of the announcement of any reorganization.

Mr. Blundy: Supplementary: May we assume that the minister is considering the end of the developmental resources branch as such and its absorption by the children's and social resources branches? If so, will the minister explain to us how we can properly debate proposed legislative changes for children when the ministry implementation framework is not defined or known?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I can assure the hon. member that the framework of which he speaks will be known prior to any formal debate on the specific recommendations on law reform, if those are the changes he is making reference to.

I can indicate to him, as he already is aware from the summary of the report that I made available to the members of the House and the public, that one of the recommendations that was made on reorganization involved the amalgamation of the adult portion of the developmental services division of the ministry with the social services division, and the amalgamation of the children's portion of the developmental services with the children's services division.

That was a recommendation, and when I am in a position to formally announce to the members the proposals we wish to make with respect to reorganization, I think it will become apparent as to which ones we are accepting and which ones we are not.

NO-FAULT INSURANCE

Mr. Samis: A question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: In view of the fact that the new no-fault insurance plan in Quebec puts Ontario drivers involved in an accident in Quebec at a distinct disadvantage in terms of disallowing disability suits for bodily injuries suffered in auto accidents, and in terms of recovery by Ontario residents involved in an accident with a Quebec-insured driver, can the minister tell the House if he has made any representation to his Quebec counterpart, Madame Payette, with a view to removing these inequities for Ontario drivers?

[3:15]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have just finished writing a letter to Madame Payette on the subject, and I hope to be meeting with her. This will be news to her because she hasn't got the letter yet, but the letter invites her to undertake some discussions with us in the next two months; I have suggested perhaps a date in June to review the whole subject matter. There are many inequities in the plan, as the member has pointed out, one of the most serious of which is, of course, that, in simple terms, contributory negligence is included when an Ontario driver is injured in Quebec, but that isn't the case with regard to Quebec drivers. So it is an inequity, and I think the best way to deal with it is by way of the route we have selected—let them know that we are concerned about it, that we think it is an inequity; and so we have asked them to discuss the matter with us. I hope to be going to Quebec sometime in June to discuss it with Madame Payette.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister advise us if he made any specific suggestions in his communication with Madame Payette? Could he also advise us if he would be prepared to take any initiatives in the event the Quebec government doesn't agree to any form of reciprocal agreement with Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The answer is that we have pointed out the problem to Madame Payette. I think some of the possibilities are rather obvious. All we have said is—these are the problems, I think it appropriate that we get together on it to see if we can resolve it. I do know Madame Payette, having spent some time around the consumer ministers' conference table with her just a couple of weeks ago.

No, I haven't proposed specifics, although obviously a reciprocal agreement is one of them which would work with regard to some aspects of it, not with others.

Secondly, I don't want to speculate on what the future holds because I would hope that the obvious inequities would be dealt with rather fairly by Madame Payette.

Of course, the member may have suggestions for me before I go; and of course from his position of expertise about problems with no-fault and government-run insurance plans—

Mr. Samis: Now, now, none of that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—his party may well in fact learn something from the obvious inequity that has arisen out of this government-run, no-fault insurance plan.

Mr. Samis: Off the grandstand, Larry.

SAFETY IN LEGISLATIVE BUILDING

Mrs. Campbell: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that the safety of this building is a matter of privilege for this House.

I have just been advised that a large glass globe, 12 inches in diameter, has fallen from the stairwell ceiling at the third floor level, moments after a group of school children passed by. I am advised that this occurrence is identified as having been caused by vibrations from groups on the stairs which regularly causes the globe to fall.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if that is within the precincts of this House—and I am not, of course, at all sure because of the confused position as to the responsibility for this House—I am making this statement as a privilege, because it does not seem to me that the matter of safety should be in doubt and that someone ought to be taking into consideration this dangerous situation.

Mr. Speaker: It is a somewhat gray area but I can assure you that it will be brought to the attention of the people who are responsible for maintenance, and that is the Ministry of Government Services. I will undertake to do that immediately.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Wintario program 41,000,000

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report, which was read as follows, and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends that it should be the practice of this House when in committee of supply that critics be permitted considerable latitude in speaking to vote 1, item 1, and thereafter that members adhere strictly to the particular vote and item under consideration; and further recommends that the chairman at the beginning of each ministry's estimates set out a time schedule for the minister, critics and members;

Your committee further recommends that this committee be empowered to hire staff as it deems necessary to undertake a review of all existing boards, agencies and commissions.

Your committee further recommends that for the commencement of proceedings each day, Mr. Speaker proceed to the chamber via the grand staircase.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I must say it is the first time I have heard this report; we have a motion for adoption, but I would like to move adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. Welch moves the adjournment of the debate. Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order, is the motion to adjourn debatable?

Mr. Speaker: I'm not sure.

I am advised that it is permissible to debate the motion for the adjournment of the debate only to question the reason.

Mr. Foulds: That is precisely what I wish to do, Mr. Speaker. I wondered if we adjourned the debate on this question at what point the House leader plans to call this business. In other words, I am worried that the debate would not take place. I wouldn't want it temporarily, permanently hoisted. I think we must have a debate on this matter and that the motion should carry.

Mr. Breugh: I am frankly a little baffled by all of this. These were simply three items referred to the committee by the Speaker as is contained in the provisional rules. There is provision for that. I don't think it is that contentious that he comes in this door instead of that door. I don't really feel that it is contentious that we adhere to the rules of the House in terms of debates during the committee of supply. I didn't think that it warranted a major debate.

But I want to point out an interesting question: there is virtually no sense, in my mind, of having the Speaker refer these items to procedural affairs. They bring them back in here and they get tabled. Then they will, I hope, at some point in time be debated, but not necessarily so.

If we are going to use the committee as a reference point for the Speaker when he wants a ruling or a recommendation to this House on points of procedure and we bring it back in here, we will simply table all of this stuff until we are blue in the face. We will never get an answer to any of it. If a matter is contentious I can see where the House would wish to debate this fully; but this morning there was, for the first time in the history of the committee, a quorum containing members from all parties. I rather thought, because of the magnificence of that turnout, that we wouldn't have any difficulty with this.

Mr. Walker: It's the first time it has met in a year.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the two points, there's no intention on my part not to proceed to call it. I simply want some time to understand the report. I think I'm entitled to have that.

In the negotiations with respect to House business we are quite open and we don't catch people by surprise. I must say I hadn't heard that report until it was read from the table. We have a motion for the adoption of the report. I want to know the implications of all that's in that report and not just the items referred to by the member for Oshawa. There is another item there with respect to the implications of staff for the committee.

I want to understand what that report means, and I simply have moved adjournment of the debate. I have no intention of not calling it again. Certainly we'll call it.

Mr. Foulds: When?

Mr. Breagh: Can we have a date on that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: We do House business every Thursday and I announce it every Thursday. I'm prepared to announce the House business today. This did not come up at the House leaders' meeting earlier today, so I can't give the hon. members a date until I discuss it with my colleagues, the other two House leaders.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Welch has moved the adjournment of the debate. Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the adjournment of the debate will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

I declare the motion carried.

Mr. McClellan: Do you want a vote on that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We don't have to now. It's too late.

Mr. Warner: We're just trying to be cooperative and to make minority government work.

GOVERNMENT MOTION NO. 9

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to get some direction from the House. This is private members' afternoon and I have no right to take away time from the order for private members' public business. We are doing some legislation tonight that may require the use of staff and I was anxious to put government notice of motion No. 9. This is a substantive motion which really should wait until we come to orders of the day, but I'm wondering whether the House would agree that I could put it now so that we could have this available if this is needed for the legislation for tonight.

Does the hon. member want to wait?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to recommend to the government House leader that government notice of motion No. 9 be further postponed.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can't call it today.

Mr. Nixon: Okay.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Kennedy moved first reading of Bill 56, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the eligibility for compensation under the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971, to persons who have been imprisoned for an offence and whose convictions are subsequently quashed. The victim would receive compensation for expenses actually incurred and pecuniary losses resulting from the imprisonment.

[3:30]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

PURCHASE OF AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr. McNeil moved private member's motion No. 4:

Resolution: That in the opinion of this House every person who purchases a lot created by a land severance in an agricultural area shall be deemed to be aware of the farming practices of that area and no governmental organization should give effect to a complaint filed by such person concerning those farming practices of which he is deemed to be aware.

Mr. McNeil: I remember seeing an advertisement in a recent issue of an agricultural publication which pictured a farmer guiding a plough pulled by a team of horses. The caption read "Gone are the days."

No one has to tell farmers that those days are gone, but maybe someone should advise city folks of this very fact. Too many of them have their heads filled with the romantic visions of the work-worn farmer trudging behind his horse-drawn plough. Too many of them are finding out what modern agriculture is really like after they have built a house and moved in next door to or across the road from a modern farm operation.

Farming is a 24-hour-a-day business. It doesn't take the weekends off and there aren't any summer holidays. A lot of people know that in theory, but they don't know what it means in practice until they move into their new country home.

As an example, I would like to mention what happened last fall to our corn producers. The wet weather prevented them from getting into the fields to get their crop off and some of them never got it off at all. Others managed it by working at night. That meant there were tractors, harvesters and combines running during the night. These machines are noisy. That's one of the differences between the real agricultural world and the pastoral dream that some people seem to have.

Agriculture runs 24 hours a day. Sometimes, and in some seasons, that means harvesting or ploughing or working land late into the night and it almost always means starting very early in the morning. Farmers are often in the fields with their heavy equipment before their city worker commuting neighbour is even up. They are often still out hours after that same commuter has finished his supper, read his newspaper and retired for the night.

What rewards do the farmers get for working all day and half the night? The farmer quite often finds himself slapped with some kind of notice of legal action requiring him to stop making so much noise, to stop keeping his neighbour awake. Can you blame a farmer for getting upset? He works the longest hours of anyone in our society and often earns a depressingly low rate for doing so, while somebody with a 9 to 5 office job and no hard physical labour may earn much more.

Mr. Nixon: Nine-thirty to 3:30.

Mr. McNeil: And to top it all off, the 9 to 5-er finds the farmer's work schedule inconvenient and wants it stopped.

These people not only object to the hours a farmer works, they object to the things he has to do. Probably a good example is the handling of manure. Everybody knows in theory that manure is good fertilizer and that good fertilizer makes healthy plants and that healthy plants produce good food. But all that gets forgotten in a real hurry when the white-collar, country home neighbour smells the stuff. You see, everybody knows that it smells, but that's another one of those inconvenient facts that doesn't fit the rural picture the ex-urbanites have created for themselves.

Mr. Haggerty: Fresh cut manure.

Mr. McNeil: Yes, they want good food, but no, they don't want smelly fertilized land next door to their backyard. Somehow the world has to be rearranged so that they can have it both ways. And you know who has to change his way of life don't you, Mr. Speaker? It is the farmer, the primary producer of food, who is expected to change his spreading and manure-handling operations.

Interjections.

Mr. McNeil: Another thing the recent country dweller from the city doesn't like is pesticides.

Mr. MacDonald: He is like the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) pitting the rural against the urban.

Mr. Wildman: Who sold the lots?

Mr. MacDonald: Divide and rule.

Mr. McNeil: He knows all about pesticides. He knows about how many parts per million there are or what happens to animals in lab experiments and so on, but he may not know, or what he has forgotten, is what pesticides do to insects. The fact is that perhaps he is too young to remember just where those insects would be if it weren't for the pesticides. They would be in his canned fruit, that's where they would be.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what you call emphasis.

Mr. McNeil: If pesticides were banned altogether, and there are people who would like to see that happen, the government might have to set up new standards for the maximum number of worms to be allowed for a can of cherries. Can't you hear the uproar in the cities if canned fruit started to include canned worms? But without the pesticides, which I freely admit occasionally drift away from the trees which are being sprayed, that's just what we'd have.

Mr. Wildman: You would really be opening a can of worms.

Mr. Foulds: It would be called your friendly meat and cherry dish.

Mr. McNeil: If people don't want pesticides drifting over their patios and swimming pools, then they should not build them next to an orchard. If they do build next to an orchard, either they should not complain or they should recognize the need for pesticides in the control of injurious insects and in the production of economical agriculture.

Mr. Swart: Which government has the responsibility for preventing this?

Mr. McNeil: There are other things that the commuter from the countryside to the city doesn't like about farming. He may object to farm implements being towed along country roads. He may become quite upset if he encounters one on a narrow concession road. All of a sudden, he is backed up behind a combine or another slow-moving agricultural vehicle. The farmer is probably only going half a mile but for that half mile the car driver may have to drop from 50 miles per hour to 15 or 20 miles per hour. He starts tailgating and quite often becomes very impatient. By the time the farmer turns his machine off the road, the commuter is only a couple of minutes behind schedule, but his blood pressure may be going through the roof of his car.

There is a remedy for that and we all know what it is. Get the implements off the highways and the concessions. Set up a maximum width for vehicles and enforce it to the last inch. The farmer loses money in fines and some premium time while being stopped on concessions and highways. Then he winds up having to make some complicated and expensive arrangements getting his machinery to the spot where he needs it. He might even have to get new machinery. All the harassment is just because a salesman or a personnel manager or accountant is going to be a couple of minutes late for a meeting at the office.

Mr. Bradley: Who allowed that?

Mr. McNeil: Since the big exodus from the city to the country began, farmers have been subjected to everything from abusive telephone calls to court action simply because they were going about the business of farming in the accepted modern method. The smells, the noise, the sprays, the dust and heavens knows how many other inconveniences, have aroused the ire of the ex-urban dweller with visions of pastoral fields floating before his eyes.

The ex-urbanite has even been known to object that a newly constructed farm structure spoils his view. The landscape with a placid cow under a willow tree has given way to the feed lot with manure-collection systems and the milk cows with automated milking systems. In all these situations, the farmer is the heavy. He isn't doing anything differently from the way he has always done it. He is only going about his legitimate business on his own property, growing the food we all need.

Mr. Wildman: Plus selling lots.

Mr. McNeil: All of a sudden he has to justify his operations because somebody finds them inconvenient—not dangerous or damaging but just inconvenient.

Then we have the sorry spectacle of hearings and orders and all the trappings of a regulatory society. And who has to change? Of course the farmer, who's been there all along.

Mr. Mackenzie: I'm glad you said Tory.

Mr. Wildman: Did you say a Tory society?

Mr. McNeil: He may well be farming land his father or grandfather farmed but now he's in somebody's way and he has to do the changing.

Mr. Conway: Mitch was right.

Mr. McNeil: I remember when the first draft of the code of practice came along. It was supposed to prevent houses and feed lot operations from being built too close to each other. In the way it was written, all the restrictions were put on the farmer. He had to put his barn here, his manure there.

Mr. Swart: Whose government is responsible?

Mr. McNeil: He often had to go out of his way at considerable cost to avoid a house that was being built long after he started farming and one that should never have been built there in the first place. Well, I am happy to say the code was amended somewhat to put more of the onus on the former urban, now country, resident. The government's food-land guidelines should help to keep agricultural and rural residential developments apart, but the problems I mentioned are always going to exist unless it is made perfectly clear to the non-farm rural resident that he, not the farmer, is the interloper, that he is the one out of place in the rural setting, not the producer of food.

The prime use of the countryside is to produce food. That's the only place we can produce it in any quantity and of high quality. In that sense we might call a lot of the countryside a production line, almost a factory. Well, if someone wants to plunk a house down in the middle of a production line, he should be prepared to accept the fact that there are going to be some noisy, smelly inconveniences. When you think that farmers are now outnumbered by non-farm rural residents, something like four to one, we have to wonder how long farmers are going to be able to fend off onslaughts on agriculture.

Mr. MacDonald: Who permitted this development?

Mr. McNeil: People who outnumber them and do all the complaining have the time, and often the money; they are not farmers.

Mr. Laughren: Who allowed all these people to move into the country?

Mr. McNeil: They have the money to spend on harassments and hearing and lawyers.

Mr. Swart: Do you think there has been something wrong with the laws?

Mr. McNeil: Farming doesn't leave much time for the farmer to waste defending himself against these attacks. He has crops to plant, livestock to feed, equipment to repair. His evenings and weekends are fully occupied by the same work that kept him busy every day all week. It makes one wonder how long farmers are going to bother to farm with all the harassment. Why not just sell the land off to a bunch of ex-urbanites and retire?

Mr. Nixon: Right, turn it into a sod farm or something like that.

Mr. G. Taylor: Pave it, pave it.

Mr. McNeil: Luckily for the people of Ontario, it hasn't come to that yet.

Mr. Nixon: It's coming fast though.

Mr. McNeil: But it will, it will—

Mr. Hodgson: It will unless you support Ron's bill.

Mr. McNeil: —if the farmer's prior rights are not recognized.

Mr. Ruston: Bring on the violins.

Mr. McNeil: If there's no reward but harassment for the responsibilities he undertakes, who could blame him if he just gave up those responsibilities?

Mr. Nixon: And went into politics.

Mr. McNeil: The farmer's fundamental position—

Mr. Ruston: Get another wheelbarrow.

Mr. McNeil: —is morally unassailable. He has the right to farm in the accepted manner—

Mr. Samis: How many years in politics now—19 years?

Mr. McNeil: —not only because he was there long before any of the residential development showed up but because he is performing the most basic—

Mr. Ruston: McNeil for leader.

Mr. McNeil: —of all human activities, providing the life supporting food we all must have. You can't get along without it.

Mr. Wildman: You can't get along without basic activity.

Mr. McNeil: I think it's high time that his position was made legally unassailable as well, in recognition of his vital contribution to society.

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know who your ghost writer is, but he is interesting and amusing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Elgin wish to reserve any time at the end of the debate?

Mr. McNeil: No, I don't think so.

Mr. Eaton: How can anybody vote against that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Huron-Middlesex.

Mr. Riddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, with due respect to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture and Food—and I do respect the member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil), although I held him in far greater esteem when he was a Liberal—

Mr. McNeil: That was at the turn of the century.

Mr. Hodgson: You weren't born then, Jack.

Mr. Riddell: —but I think this resolution is really nothing more than an excuse to correct a serious problem facing farmers that this government has failed to come to grips with. I am inclined to think that the member's lottery number came up and he was hard pressed or discouraged by his cabinet colleagues to introduce either a private member's bill or a resolution that had some teeth in it and which would provide a solution to the rather serious problem facing farmers today, including the restrictions which were placed on them by guidelines handed down by this government.

[3:45]

Admittedly, this resolution gives us a chance to voice our concerns about the restrictions that the agricultural code of practice which the member alluded to places on farmers; and I am sure this was the motivating factor behind this resolution. I might point out the irony of this whole matter. The question of whether the code of practice is government policy or merely a guideline is debatable. In any case, there are three ministries that are pushing pretty hard for it—the agricultural ministry, the environment ministry and the housing ministry.

The Ministry of Housing is trying to get the code of practice into official plans. The Ministry of Agriculture and Food is not only trying to get the agricultural code of practice into official plans, but is very keen on getting it plugged into municipal bylaws. So we have a parliamentary assistant trying to protect the farmers' rights by discouraging the inclusion of the code of practice into municipal bylaws; and on the other hand we have the Minister of Agriculture and Food endeavouring to have it enshrined in the municipal bylaws. This is the irony which I alluded to.

Fortunately, there have been no concrete decisions made by the minister at this time. I would suspect the reason is that there are a couple of legal questions on whether the code of practice can be plugged into zoning bylaws. I believe there are two or three municipalities that have incorporated it into bylaws, but it has not been tested legally as yet. I believe there is also an administrative problem.

If the code of practice was incorporated into official plans and municipal bylaws, then there would not seem to be any need for this resolution. However, I would hope that the agricultural code of practice in its present form would not be incorporated into zoning bylaws.

I want you to listen to what Peter Hannam, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, had to say about the matter: "Scattered rural development takes acres out of production, but has a much greater impact on a farmer's ability to produce food through its impact on farming efficiency. When people move to the country, they seem to want to live in a park and appear unwilling to accept the odours and noise of farming operations. Under the Ontario government's agricultural code of practice, which is being enforced by many rural municipalities, a farmer cannot expand or build a new livestock barn within smelling distance of a neighbour's house.

"It is forcing many farmers to either curtail expansion or build new facilities that cost in excess of $100,000 in remote areas on their property. If equitably enforced by municipalities, new revisions in the code should halt development of houses near barns as well. Nevertheless, the problem remains. The rights of people to complain about odours are enshrined in local bylaws; farm expansion is hampered, and the recycling of livestock waste by spreading it on fields is greatly curtailed.

"Municipal anti-noise bylaws are another threat to modern agricultural practices and tend to hamper a farmer's need both to work around the clock in certain seasons and to adapt to newer and larger equipment.

"Scattered rural development compounds the complaints. The traditional rural society deteriorates, and the infrastructure supporting agriculture is lost. Farmers lose the flexibility which allows them to expand and adapt to new technology. Because the root of this problem is scattered rural development, a move by municipalities in farming areas will help alleviate problems in the future."

I recognize the aim of the code of practice is to provide some guidelines for future expansion of livestock facilities, as well as non-farm development. However, I believe the code in its present form is far from perfect and it needs revision. It should not be enshrined in municipal bylaws, as is now proposed. It should only be used as a guideline by municipalities in their land-use planning activity.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Have you got some suggestions?

Mr. Riddell: Another matter I would like to draw to your attention is that the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) in a press release of March 20, 1975, at a time when he was the environment minister, stated: "Farmers who are only carrying out normal farm procedures have nothing to fear from officials of the Ministry of the Environment." He also mentioned the existence of an "independent body called the farm pollution advisory committee, which consists of four farmers and is called in to assess farm and environmental situations if a farmer refuses to accept the advice of a Ministry of the Environment official."

Safeguards do exist for farmers who are subject to complaints or continually harassed by complaints and the farmers do have recourse to appeal a decision by a Ministry of the Environment official. This further illustrates the redundancy of this resolution.

One final point, and one that we cannot ignore, is that this resolution goes against a number of other laws presently in existence, namely, the Environmental Protection Act, the Environmental Assessment Act, the municipal noise legislation and the common law.

In closing, I don't believe that we as legislators should initiate any action to deprive a person of his or her right to complain about a nuisance. There are laws in existence which give people these rights and there are procedures in effect whereby complaints are handled. For this reason, I don't feel that I can support the resolution, but I can appreciate its intent.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my conclusion is a little different—and let me state it at the outset. I think the objective of the resolution is right in principle, but I think the possibility of its implementation, given this government and its policies, is nil. That leaves one in a rather perplexed position as to what one does with the resolution.

But let me go back to the beginning of my remarks, if I may. There is a problem here: The problem of the conflict between rural residential living by people who used to live in the cities and the normal conduct of agriculture.

The hon. member for Elgin, who has introduced the resolution, has spelled out that conflict in almost humorous terms. He has reduced it to smells and noise. He has exaggerated it and appealed to the offended senses of people in the farm community who have had inadequate laws to cope with it—laws that were produced by this government. So he has ended up by sort of appealing to the farmers and pitting them against those city slickers who are coming out and intervening in his community. But he's ignored the fact that the problem is a problem created by this government in the inadequacy of its laws.

I just want to suggest in my remarks two areas where the government should have done something. One has been dealt with at some length by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex. That is, if you have a code of practice, that code of practice presumably is going to reduce, if not eliminate, the conflict between rural residential dwellers and normal operations of agriculture, whether it be noise, whether it be smells, whether it be farm machinery on the roads or what.

If there are inadequacies in that code of practice, then zero in on that code of practice. If it is the code of practice that is so weak as to be merely guidelines that have no real effectiveness, then again we have a problem which is on the government's doorstep—to strengthen that code of practice and give it some legislative backing, so that it can become effective. But let me go one step further, because I think it's even more complicated than that.

We had a study done in the county from which the last member comes, Huron county, Countryside Planning, in which they laid down for the guidance of this government what I still believe is the essential first step in sensible, effective land-use planning out across this province. Their proposition was that in Huron county and generally speaking across the province, there should be an examination of land categories so that the government can designate what is an agricultural priority area, what is an urban priority area, what may be a recreational priority area, and what in some areas might be a forestry or a mining priority area.

Despite the fact that this government put in $80,000 along with approximately $40,000 from Huron county to do that study, the study has lain there on the shelf; it has been examined and used as a guide in Northumberland county, but it has never been seized upon as a pattern for this government to act in moving towards effective land use across the province.

Interestingly enough, when he was a backbencher, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. McCague) introduced a bill, which was picked up by my colleague the hon. member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) and introduced just this past month in the House, an Act to provide for the Designation and Retention of Foodlands.

Let me remind you of one section of that bill which would come to grips with the problem that I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker. Section 2 of the bill reads as follows:

"Every planning authority shall within two years following proclamation of this Act,

"(a) survey and clarify all agricultural land situate within the planning area in accordance with the classifications established and defined in studies and maps prepared pursuant to the Agricultural and Rural Development Act (ARDA) (Canada);

"(b) prepare a plan designating as foodlands those areas which can be defined as such and recommend such plan to the council of the designated municipality for adoption;

"(c) develop planning criteria primarily designed to promote retention and protection of foodlands but which will permit non-agricultural use where justified."

In other words, if we had a program with some legislative backing from this government, such as this bill envisaged—a bill originally introduced by a man who is now in the cabinet—we could move to the designation of agricultural lands and we would have a framework within which the objective of this resolution could be implemented, because if a person severed a lot in an area that was an agricultural priority area, then what the hon. member has said in that resolution could legitimately be implemented.

If a person operated in such an area and he got a severance, he would know that he would have no rights in the future to complain with regard to smells or noises or something that emanates from the normal operation of the agricultural industry.

However, if he got a lot in an area that is designated urban—that is, ultimately it is going to be subject to urban development, though agriculture may continue in it for 10, 15 or 20 years—then, of course, he would know in advance that he could never get that kind of protection.

Out in the agricultural priority area, I would be inclined to agree with the suggestion—it wasn't a firm assertion—by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex, that maybe there should be no severances at all for what you might call purely rural residential living, that the only kind of severance you would permit would be a severance in relation to somebody who is living and working in the agricultural industry—and not a city slicker who just comes out to live in that pastoral park, as the hon. member for Elgin was calling up for us to view.

In other words, without the kind of moving towards a clarification of land categories with priority areas for agriculture, and without the granting of legislative backing to that, then the noble sentiments that are expressed in this resolution remain nothing more than noble sentiments, like so much of this government's profession of protecting of prime agricultural land.

I am a little perplexed. I think I would be inclined to vote for the resolution because it is the kind of resolution that speaks to a problem. But I assert with great vigour that it is impossible to fulfil the objective of this resolution because of the inadequacies of this government's record (a) in relationship to the code of practice and (b) in terms of its refusal to come to grips with guidelines having the backing of legislation in the protection of prime agricultural land in this province.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of this resolution. Ontario has a code of the countryside, and it is not spelled out in any statutes. It would carry little weight in court. As a matter of fact, only those who live by the code of the countryside know that it exists. Those people are a minority now, a very important minority. They feed the rest of us who don't live and work in the countryside. They are special people. Mind you, I don't think farmers will ever become an endangered species, but they deserve special consideration from those who live in the countryside without living by its code.

[4:00]

Our farmers need every break they can get to continue their demanding and largely thankless job of feeding the rest of us. People who move to the country from our cities and towns are generally unaware of the code by which neighbourly disagreements have traditionally been settled in rural Ontario. When they violate the code, it is the farmer who usually gets the short end of the stick. In my opinion, the principle of this resolution will go a long way towards redressing this sort of imbalance.

I suppose the problems of farming in the shadow of urban expansion first gained prominence in the Haldimand-Norfolk and Niagara areas. People who had moved next door to poultry farms complained about the smell and a lot of really bitter disputes developed.

From 1968 to 1970 the Ministry of the Environment office for Haldimand county was receiving 50 to 60 calls a month complaining about farm operations. It also received a petition with 386 signatures.

People from the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture and Food deserve a lot of credit for the way they handled that situation. They got farmers and their non-farming neighbours together to discuss their differences calmly and sensibly. They persuaded livestock operators to stop spreading waste in June and July and install holding tanks instead. And they also offered a crash course in the facts of life in rural Ontario.

As a result of these government efforts, only one of the hundreds of disputes had to be taken to court. Where one farmer used to be the target of complaints for 26 other property owners, nowadays only four or five complaints a year are received throughout the whole area.

Another result was the agriculture code of practice. It was devised jointly by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, the Ministry of the Environment and the livestock industry. It contains guidelines for farmers in the storage and spreading of manure to minimize pollution of air, ground water or surface streams.

It also sets out guidelines for the location of residents in the vicinity of livestock operations. In 1976 the code of practice was revised to include what is known as the minimum distance separation formula. It is used to calculate the appropriate distance between, say, a barn and the neighbour's patio barbecue.

The advantage of the formula is that it applies not only to a new or expanding livestock operation locating near an existing building but also to other new uses proposed near a livestock farm. Thus, it works both ways for the protection of both the farmer and the non-farmer. The agriculture code of practice is included in the government's foodland guidelines for municipal councils and planners. Its provision will apply in any new or amended official plan. As the code of the countryside is overtaken in the urban shadow, the code of practice is replacing it as a more effective way of reducing conflicts between neighbours about barnyard smells.

But what of the other conflicts that can develop between farmers and non-farmers? All sorts for unforeseen problems are cropping up in our changing countryside. Take the basic question of line fences.

Farmers have traditional ways of sharing the upkeep of fences that separate their properties. In my riding they usually face each other at the mid-way point of the fence and each assumes responsibility for the section to his right. That is the code of the countryside. It may not be the code of the newcomer to the countryside.

Good fences makes good neighbours. Sure, but good neighbours make good fences too. Every good farmer inspects his fence every spring and makes any necessary repairs. To the non-farmer that chore is not so important. As a matter of fact, I have heard of instances where city-reared people actually waited until their sections of the fence fell down before they made repairs. These same people are the kind who hit the roof when they find their neighbour's cow in their garden. They don't ask themselves whose fault it is. Often they are also the kind of people who take their complaints to their local council and there is a good chance that nowadays many councillors are also unfamiliar with the code of the countryside. That's another strike against our farmers.

Maybe a farmer's animals will stray through a hole in the fence, but his farm dogs rarely turn killer. When poultry and sheep are attacked by dogs they are usually dogs that weren't raised in the country and trained to stay away from livestock. I heard of a case in Simcoe county where two dogs newly arrived from the city got into a barn full of sheep. They were responsible for 21 deaths. When the farmer caught them at it, drenched in the sheep's blood, they immediately reverted to friendly household pets. One of them came to lick his hand.

Dogs can also worry sheep to death, quite literally. Even if they don't slash at the mother, the fear they cause often brings on abortions at lambing time. When abandoned or runaway dogs mate with coyotes, they start hunting in packs and that's when they start killing calves.

It's difficult to prove responsibility for these attacks. The code of the countryside calls for a farmer to keep his dogs under control. If it turns killer, he expects it to be shot, but nowadays he finds a lot more sympathy for the dead dog than for the ewes and lambs it slaughters.

I could go on at length. I could tell about a York county farm wife who got so many abusive phone calls about insecticide spraying that her husband sold the farm. I could tell about farmers who get a hard time because their farm equipment moves down the road too slowly to please the commuter next door who's hurrying to work in the city. I know of a farmer who no longer ploughs his fields in the fall because the owner of an expensive new house across the road complained about the dust. I could tell how our Minister of Agriculture and Food had to ask Pickering council to forget an anti-noise bylaw for awhile so farmers could operate their corn-dryers late at night after last year's wet harvest.

However, I hope it's clear that the farmers need a better break from our society. I'm not a farmer, but see a clear need for the provisions of this resolution. I hope it has the support of all the members.

Mr. McKessock: It is a pleasure for me to rise and support this resolution. In this House, it is very seldom that we can debate something on agriculture. When something like this comes along, it gives us a chance to support our life in the rural areas. But I am a bit concerned. The resolution states: "That in the opinion of this House, every person who purchases a lot created by land severance in an agricultural area shall be deemed to be aware of the farming practices of that area and no governmental organization should give effect to a complaint filed by such person concerning those farming practices of which he is deemed to be aware."

If this is passed, will it really have some teeth or will it be like the government's farm land preservation program which works in one area and doesn't work in another and is very discriminatory across the province. If it is like that, then there wouldn't be much good come of it. But I certainly hope that this resolution would pass as well and something would come of it.

Most of us who have farms have some land that is not fit for agriculture but is certainly fit for a residence. I think that this offers the farmer a little bit of extra cash if he can sell this lot to somebody from the city who really wants to come out and live in the country. But they must be aware when they move to the country that there are a few things that they have to put up with now and again. Those are the facts of farm life, like spreading manure or noise or what have you, that have been mentioned.

Newcomers, when they do come to the rural areas, have a tendency to go along with everything at the start, and then when they get well-established decide that it's time they start to complain. I think the intent of this resolution is to put a stop to that. I know that there have been some farmers put out of business in the past by complainers, because they quite often have more financial resources than the farmers have. They can go to court, and when things go to court I sometimes lose my faith in that direction. It depends on who has the most money.

If we haven't got some law to prevent people taking things like this to court or prevent them from complaining, then farmers are going to continue to be harassed by the newcomers in our area, and eventually they will probably be stopped from coming. This isn't what we want. We certainly want to share out beautiful country with other people as long as they accept what we have when they get there.

Mr. Makarchuk: You have been giving it away completely.

Mr. McKessock: I have said before that something like this should happen. It should be put on the deed when a person purchases a lot on a farm, so it is right there in black and white. Maybe this would be better than this resolution. Perhaps the government could consider that in the future.

Actually, they should really be pleased about the odd smell that comes along. I have told everybody, these smells don't hurt them, it's just good nitrogen going through the air. Actually that's what it is—and it has really cured many an ill farmer too, I don't know whether you are aware of that or not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Makarchuk: Suggest it to Dennis Timbrell. Maybe it's the answer to his problem.

Mr. Wildman: He produces enough of it himself.

Mr. McKessock: That's right.

A farmer told me recently, he spent about three months in a Toronto hospital and said he was going to die if he didn't get out. One of his neighbours told him if he could just get home and get out to the barn and get a smell of that barn he'd be fine. He said he got home, got to the barn and was better in no time.

Mr. Samis: Ronnie, you could have mentioned that.

Mr. Eaton: Look at all the money we can save on OHIP.

Mr. Wildman: Tear down the hospitals, build more barns.

Mr. Makarchuk: Says something about the state of medical care in Toronto, doesn't it?

Mr. Conway: Just give him one of Reuben's speeches.

An hon. member: Is that the Liberal's solution to the OHIP problem?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Watch it, smarty.

Mr. McKessock: And also, perhaps, they should not criticize this smell if the farmer is spreading manure close to the line fence with his modern equipment and it flows over into his neighbour's garden. The neighbour will find that his onions will be much better this year than they were the year before. So there are benefits to the smell; the people from the city must be aware of that. If I move to the city, which I did a couple of years ago for the biggest part of every week, I have to put up with the smog down here and if I complain, nobody does a thing about it.

Mr. Wildman: Not even the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. McKessock: So similarly, when the city people move to the country they should have to put up with much less harmful smells and the bit of noise we have periodically in the country.

Mr. Swart: I rise to speak on this resolution and to say immediately that although there has been quite a bit of levity in the debate the subject matter that this resolution deals with is exceedingly important in the farm community and, of course, to the long-term welfare of this province. Those problems and the injustice to farmers were, I think, very well outlined by the member for Elgin and others. We know there is a real conflict between the non-farming resident in the rural area and the farmer in those areas.

I am a little bit concerned that the member for Elgin may have deliberately intended to heighten this a bit and put all the blame on the urban dweller who now lives out in the rural area. But in any event, everyone in this House, I believe, recognizes the problems that exist and solutions should be applied. The farmer certainly recognizes the problems and they are a major issue in every presentation that is made to government. The brief presented in 1976 to the Premier and the cabinet of Ontario, which was also presented to the other caucuses, states "farmers are suffering from conflicting non-farm uses of land. We are restricted by neighbours who have voluntarily moved next to us and now find barn smells and machinery noises bothersome. In addition, these intrusions create considerable fragmentation of rural communities to the detriment of farming enterprises. Farmers are not adequately protected from these threats," so on and so on. I agree with that description of the problems that exist for our farming community because of the non-farm residents in those areas.

Even the government recognizes those problems in its green paper. I won't take time to quote from it, but it goes into quite some detail in outlining the problems that face the farmers and the hardship that it is for the farm operation.

[4:15]

So the question before this House is not in any way a question of a recognition of this problem. The question before this House is really whether we want to do anything about it.

I say quite frankly I question the sincerity of the member for Elgin in really wanting to do something substantial about this with the type of measure that he has introduced in this private member's resolution. All of this problem has come about while the present government has been in power—all of it, during those 34 years. The government had the power to prevent it and nothing was done.

They have the power to amend the code of practice, as suggested by the member for Huron-Middlesex. They have done nothing about that. The code of practice, in fact, inflicts more hardship on the farmer.

Now we have this resolution. And let there be no doubt about it, the resolution we have before us is completely meaningless. After it's debated today, things will be exactly the same. There will be no change in legislation. We're all in agreement on the principle of this resolution to start with, and not a single action is going to be taken to change things.

Mr. Makarchuk: So why doesn't the government bring in a new bill? Tell Bill to bring the bill in.

Mr. Swart: Yes. And you know, the member can't lose. He really can't lose on this. Because if it passes, it's a nice thing to send around to the farm community and say, "Look at what I've been trying to do."

Mr. Makarchuk: Here comes the Premier (Mr. Davis). Tell him to bring in the bill. Where is the bill, Bill?

Mr. Swart: If it loses and the two opposition parties combine to vote against it, then he can display this loss because the terrible people in the opposition parties voted down a protection he wanted to give to the farmers.

Mr. Riddell: Vote against it and it might encourage them to bring in something more meaningful. We can't accept this kind of nonsense.

Mr. Swart: It might very well, but knowing the government there I would doubt that that would be the case.

Mr. MacDonald: You have greater faith in the government than we have.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you bringing in legislation, Bill?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Makarchuk: We want an answer. There he sits cherubic and smiling.

Mr. McClellan: Why doesn't he have an answer?

Mr. Swart: My question of the member's sincerity is also heightened by the fact that the same member bringing in this bill was the lead-off speaker against my bill on the issue of preserving our prime agricultural land—yes, even classifying it. He is the man who has brought in this motion.

Mr. Wildman: It's sheer hypocrisy. I wasn't aware of that.

Mr. Swart: You see, it does nothing for the preservation or the classification of land. That would be omitted. It does nothing for the whole land severance problems in all its ramifications, including the one of the conflict between the farmers and the urban rural dwellers.

First of all, it only deals with governments, and it deals with that in a very vague way. It doesn't deal with such things as trespass problems, does it? That's a very real problem to the farmer. It doesn't deal with the human relationship, the harassment that the farmers now have and about which the member spoke. This resolution can do nothing about that.

It doesn't deal with the root causes of the problem, even if it was legislation. It doesn't deal with the questions of the traffic increase. It doesn't deal with the question of additional costs because of the urban service demand and policing and so on that all has to come when rural communities are urbanized.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm afraid it's just political grandstanding.

Mr. Swart: It is nothing more than, as my colleague from York South says, political grandstanding, because it doesn't deal—

Mr. Lane: You people over there ought to recognize that pretty well. Your grandstanding is unique.

Mr. Swart: —with the real issue of reducing severances. In fact, the wording in the motion would indicate that it would promote severances. It says: "That in the opinion of this House every person who purchases a lot created by a land severance." It says nothing about the people who are there, the people who may purchase a house and a lot which exists there now. There is nothing about them. It is only where a lot is created. Why wouldn't there have been an amendment to it if the member was meaningful about it? Why not say lot or non-farm residence? In addition to a person who purchases a lot created by land severance, why not include a person who purchases a non-farm residence in an agricultural area shall be deemed to be aware of the farming practices of that area and no government organization shall give an effect to a complaint filed by such person.

The fact is that the member intends to go on by his bill allowing more and more severances in the rural areas. He knows that is not what the agricultural community wants. They want those cut down.

Mr. McKessock: It's nice having those city farmers telling the member what to do.

Mr. Swart: Let me again quote from the brief from the Federation of Agriculture: "A full planning package for agriculture for this province must include consistent restriction against encroaching uses not compatible with agriculture." They make that clear that that implies additional severances out in the rural area. Even the government's agricultural paper, the green paper that it produced with such great fanfare makes this comment: "Severance applications which may create rural residential lots must not be allowed within a high priority agricultural designation."

Hon. W. Newman: You are finally beginning to listen and read it. I am glad you understand it. You are finally beginning to learn. I thought there was no hope for you.

Mr. Swart: The government qualifies everything in this green paper but it does express that principle in it. Yet in the resolution we have before us it is implied there are going to be more and more lots created in the rural area of this province.

Mr. MacDonald: The government speaks in contradictions.

Mr. Swart: Even in the conflict between the farmer and the non-farm resident, the bill provides really no answer at all. What if health measures are involved? I could tell members of a farmer in the Niagara Peninsula who farms 350 acres of grapes and keeps a large dairy herd who had his manure pile located on his property close to a lot which had been created many decades ago on which was situated a house.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Swart: The Ministry of the Environment came and ordered him within one week to remove all of that manure from that area. I conclude by saying that the answer to the problem is not the resolution that is before us. It's sensible land-use policies that will prevent the problem from arising.

Mr. Eaton: I hadn't intended to go very deeply into this subject but the member across the way incensed me a little bit when he referred to my colleague from Elgin as being insincere about this question.

An hon. member: Oh, never.

Mr. Eaton: He has moved a practical resolution to this problem.

Mr. Swart: What will it change? Where is the legislation?

Mr. Eaton: If there is anybody that's a hypocrite on it, it's the member for Welland-Thorold, another urbanite trying to tell the rural community what to do.

Mr. Warner: Oh, that's cheap nonsense.

Mr. Eaton: As an urbanite, he wants to regulate everything that goes on in rural Ontario. He wants to regulate the lives of the farmers.

Mr. Wildman: It is your government that is regulating it.

Mr. Eaton: He mentioned the trespass legislation. We dealt with a practical solution to that and most of his party voted against it.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, they did not.

Mr. Eaton: Most of his party voted against it. If there is anybody that does any political grandstanding over this issue it's his party.

Mr. Swart: Tell me what this motion does.

Mr. Eaton: They play to the freezing of agricultural land to save it because they say we are going to starve in Ontario. Who are they playing to? They are not concerned with the lives of the people in the rural community. They think they are playing up to the consumer and playing scare tactics to the consumer in issues like that.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a cheap political ploy.

Hon. W. Newman: No, it is not. It is true.

Mr. Eaton: They talk about freezing agricultural land. It is always something along that line. They are not concerned with a practical solution to the problem.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the practical solution?

Interjections.

Mr. Eaton: The members opposite would tend to complicate every one of these problems. They want to regulate everything. They want to control everything.

Mr. Swart: What does a regulation do?

Mr. Eaton: They think they can draw lines as to how far a smell will drift in a rural community.

Mr. Wildman: I wish we could designate it here.

Mr. Eaton: Even with the code of practices in place, and it has got some real practical points to it, I think you can see what happens when you have a building that could be 2,000 feet away from a house, producing a lot of manure. It's not what's taking place at that time, it's when they go out and spread the manure that the people complain.

Mr. Ruston: There is quite a bit of that.

Hon. W. Newman: And you do a good job of that, too.

Mr. Eaton: In a case like that, the regulation that you want to implement and make law has no solution to it.

Mr. Swart: Tell us what the resolution does.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you voting against it?

Mr. Eaton: Okay, just a minute. If the member for York South recognized that if a sewerage were created in a rural setting like that, in an agricultural area, he even admitted he was going to allow them in an agriculture-designated area. And it is practical to allow them there sometimes. But once again he wants to regulate that designation right down to the last little "t".

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you voting against the resolution?

Mr. Eaton: The member for Elgin has put forth something here that is quite practical. He has put forth a solution to the problem of allowing people still to settle on those pieces of property in rural communities that are not good for agricultural purposes, but are close to agricultural areas. He is allowing them to settle there, to build there, accepting the fact that the agricultural practices that are going on there will continue to go on and that they can't complain about them. They accept it the way it is, just the same as the person already living there puts up with it.

It's not the nicest thing, even in your own farm home, when you are spreading the manure on the field next to your house. But it is part of what you carry on with. If those people want to come out and live on those properties, they could do so, knowing that they have no right to stop the operation of the farm because of a smell, because of a noise, that is carried on in an agricultural area.

Mr. Riddell: How do you deny a person's rights to complain?

Mr. Eaton: They can complain. But the member has put forth the premise that they have no legal right to stop the practice from taking place.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Only fair.

Mr. Eaton: Anyone can complain. You people complain all the time—that's all we hear from you most of the time is complaints.

Mr. Warner: You never listen.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: City slickers.

Mr. Eaton: But here is a practical solution: simply by placing legislation on the books that would say they have no right to stop these particular types of operations from going on.

Mr. Davidson: Talk to your government about that.

Mr. Swart: But this isn't legislation.

Mr. Eaton: I think we should all stand up and support this proposal. I certainly can't understand why the member representing Huron county would oppose such a resolution.

Mr. McClellan: I don't understand what the motion is; a motion is not a law.

Mr. Eaton: It's a practical solution and I urge all the members of the House to support it.

Mr. McClellan: Nonsense.

Hon. W. Newman: If we packaged up all that you said today, I wouldn't buy fertilizer for my farm this year.

Mr. Swart: You don't need to; you can produce enough.

Mr. Gaunt: I just want to make a few very brief comments with respect to this resolution. I think the member for Elgin senses that there is a problem and in that respect he is correct. There is a problem, as has been indicated by many members this afternoon, with regard to people who come out from urban areas and settle in the country and then complain about the odours and the tractors running at 2 o'clock in the morning, and all that kind of thing. Obviously, there is a problem.

My concern, however, is that this resolution really wouldn't resolve the problem. There is no way, if this resolution were passed unanimously by this House, that the problem would be resolved.

Mr. MacDonad: There is no backing in law; it is another guideline.
[4:30]

Mr. Gaunt: It has no backing in law, it has not teeth, it is simply an intention. What we need, as has been mentioned previously, are changes in the code of practice and a sensible land-use policy in this province, which we simply don't have. If the member, my friend from Elgin, is going to tell us that this resolution is an intention of the government to bring in that kind of legislation, then I would certainly be more inclined to support it. But as it stands at the moment, it certainly does nothing in any way, shape or form to resolve the problem. While it's a good debating vehicle and a good mechanism to air all of these problems and to put them on the floor of the House and thereby give them some public attention, it really does nothing to resolve the very real problem with which farmers are faced today.

Mr. Bradley: It's got fewer teeth than Leon Spinks.

Mr. Wildman: I originally hadn't intended to participate in this debate—

Mr. Eaton: But there is enough time.

An hon. member: Sit down. Sit down.

Mr. Wildman: —but when the member for Middlesex alleged that people on this side of the House did not support his bill to deal with petty trespass—

Mr. Eaton: I said most of your party and that's right. You did, but most of your party didn't.

Mr. Wildman: I spoke in favour of that bill and indicated the weaknesses in it and made suggestions for improvement.

Mr. Lane: Come across the floor, Bud, now's the time.

Mr. Eaton: I didn't single you out. I said most of your party.

Mr. Makarchuk: I could say things about most of your party, too; what does it mean?

Mr. Wildman: I'm participating in this debate today as an individual who has grown up in a rural area and who has lived in a rural area most of my life.

Mr. Swart: We didn't block it, anyway.

Mr. Davidson: That's more than your party did.

Mr. Wildman: All of these comments that have been made on that side of the House about urban people on this side of the House making comments about rural life, as being an example of what the member for Elgin is complaining about, are pure hogwash.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's not an urban term, is it?

Mr. Wildman: The fact of the matter is that I'm a little bit concerned about the resolution because I'm one of those so-called people who might be living on land in a rural area and not farming it. I might point out, however, that I live on a rockpile that is only good for growing trees and is not too good for even growing trees, so I'm not concerned about taking land out of production.

Mr. Makarchuk: Grow the rocks.

Mr. Gaunt: Go to hydroponic farming.

Mr. Wildman: In my riding there have been a lot of problems that have developed largely out of the development of what we call in the rural area hobby farming or horse farming. There's a lot of horse farming going on and unfortunately a lot of the people who are carrying out that horse farming don't understand much about farming procedures.

Mr. Lane: They don't know about the blunt end of the horse, do they? Did you ever try to figure out how to plant them?

Mr. Wildman: We've had a lot of problems with line fences. We've had problems with people complaining about farm machinery on the roads and so on. I congratulate the member for Elgin for pointing that out in this House, I think quite eloquently although sometimes in a rather amusing approach.

However, I must echo the comments made by other members to the point that this really doesn't solve a lot of the problems. Because unless you have the Minister of Agriculture and Food ready to put some weight behind this resolution, it is just another sort of motherhood statement made in the House that everyone can talk about and say, "Wasn't it nice that they discussed these problems?" but it hasn't got much weight. I find it very difficult to vote against this; I will probably support it. But where does it go after that? Where do we end up?

Mr. Haggerty: Talk to Mel first.

Mr. Warner: It's not even a bill.

Mr. Lane: You have to start some place.

Mr. Wildman: A little while ago on a private member's bill from the member for Algoma-Manitoulin we started to talk about problems with gasoline prices. We started, and what happened with that?

Mr. Makarchuk: What happened to that, John?

Mr. Wildman: The minister there at least had the guts to participate in the debate and get up and oppose it. Where is the Minister of Agriculture and Food?

Mr. Makarchuk: He walked out.

Mr. McClellan: He doesn't care.

Mr. Wildman: I'd like to know what his position is on this.

Mr. Lane: We're going to get some results on that bill yet, Bud. Don't worry about it.

Mr. Makarchuk: He didn't even talk on the preservation of—the Minister of Agriculture doesn't care.

Mr. Wildman: I'd like to know what his position is, because that's what really counts, not the position of the member for Elgin, even though he's a wonderful person and a very sincere man.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: He certainly is.

Interjections.

Mr. Wildman: Some members here suggested I'm laying "it" on a little thick. I don't know exactly what they mean in terms of this resolution.

Mr. Gaunt: You're spreading it.

Mr. Lane: You know. That's the way you spread manure sometimes.

Mr. Wildman: I'd like to comment briefly—and I hope the member will be able to reply to this—on the matter that I'm a little concerned about.

What happens if your neighbour is one of these hobby farmers and you happen to be living on a lot that you were able to purchase because of the severance. You aren't farming it, but your neighbour, a hobby farmer is farming and he's doing a poor job in the sense that he isn't fixing his own fences and he's letting his livestock get out of his own property and on to someone else's property. Does this resolution mean you can't complain about that?

Mr. Haggerty: Right. That's what it means.

Mr. Wildman: I hope not. That would be a very bad thing. What if your neighbour isn't carrying out his responsibilities as he should as a farmer—and I don't think people should presume to tell him how to do that, but let's say it's obvious he's not doing what he should. If, say, he's letting his horses wander over his neighbour's property, which is what has happened in a serious case in my riding—the police have been called and have tried to get the farmer to look after his horses, and the humane society has become involved—what happens in that case? I hope the member can clarify that position.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am willing to support this resolution but there are some serious problems with it unless the government wants to really put some weight behind the sentiments expressed.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Elgin for four minutes.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the member's question with respect to line fences, he might be interested to know that particular problem would be covered under the Line Fences Act.

Mr. Wildman: Except it's not enforced in many cases.

Mr. McNeil: It's enforceable. The Line Fences Act is going to be introduced and amended during the current session of the Legislature.

Mr. Wildman: You've been talking about that for years.

Mr. Haggerty: That's the best news we have heard, Ron.

Mr. Makarchuk: You're a carrier of good news, Ron.

Mr. McNeil: I'm rather sorry that there is quite a division in the NDP Party.

Mr. Makarchuk: It's the NDP—not the NDP Party.

Mr. McNeil: I've been told that I'm not sincere and I was told that I am sincere; so I'm really confused at the present position of the NDP Party.

Mr. Makarchuk: It's the NDP—not the NDP Party.

Ms. Gigantes: Do you say the RCMP Police?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. McNeil: I would just like to point out that this is a resolution that will resolve a problem without a lot of regulation.

Some hon. members: How?

Mr. McNeil: I am rather surprised that the member for Huron-Middlesex would not support this resolution, because I imagine that he has the same problems as some of the rest of us who represent urban rural ridings. We realize there are problems caused by severances.

Mr. Riddell: I'm fully aware of that, but it doesn't answer the problems.

Mr. Swart: He knows it won't do anything.

Mr. McNeil: I can only say that I hope, after the discussion that has taken place here in the House, that the members will support this resolution.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The time for debate of this item has expired.

CONSUMER PROTECTION
AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Blundy moved second reading of Bill 45, An Act to amend The Consumer Protection Act.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak to this bill, pointing out the reasons why I believe that all members in the House should vote for this bill. By voting for this particular bill, they will ensure that something is done to protect the consumers of Ontario. It is different from the resolution that has just been debated in this House; while I have every sympathy with that resolution, I personally don't believe that it will ever mean anything to the people of Ontario. But that is not the case in this bill to amend the Consumer Protection Act.

I would like to mention exactly what the bill is going to do and I will explain the reasons why it is being introduced. The bill is going to provide that everyone who is the renter, any businessman or proprietor who is the renter of a product, a tool, or a piece of equipment is going to have to have laid out in the contract for such a rental whether the piece of equipment or the material is covered by insurance for loss of or damage to the particular tool or piece of equipment. This is an important thing because most people walk in and say: "I want an electric drill." They get it and they walk out. There is nothing ordinarily said in most cases, I should say, about who is going to be responsible for loss of or damage to such a piece of equipment.

The consumers of Ontario are becoming more and more involved in the rental of equipment for ordinary household jobs that have for many years been done by the householder without use of equipment. As an example, Mr. Speaker, how many times do you see advertised where the housewife can rent a carpet steamer and cleaner and so forth? This is becoming a very commonplace thing, as well as other members of the family renting tools and so forth. How many times do those people ever stop to examine what would happen if that article was destroyed by fire in their home or was stolen from their home when it was in their care and so forth? There are some very reputable people in the business of lending tools and renting out tools who do make arrangements and who either orally or in written terms explain exactly what kind of liability is imposed upon the person who is renting.

The majority of people do not and the majority of the consumers of Ontario—ordinary people just like ourselves—don't ever think about it and they don't ever ask about it. Therefore, they could become liable for something without their knowledge.

Recently, the hon. member for Simcoe Centre introduced a resolution in this House which said "commonly used and easily understood language should be used in all contracts and legal documents in Ontario."

Mr. Wildman: It would put the lawyers out of business.

Mr. Blundy: I don't think that would be such a bad idea. They could all run for the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's all right for you. You have a business that will never run out.

Mr. Ruston: Bill 59 will put them back in business.

Mr. Blundy: Bill 59 will take up the slack. I am sure they will all be very busy on that.

However, I spoke in favour of that resolution that the hon. member for Simcoe Centre brought in. I think that this is a kind of a natural thing to go with it because it is something that we all want to have and assume we have without ever knowing it. I say, and the bill says, that it must be clearly stated that "the owner of the goods or his agent, as the case may be, shall inform the person as to whether or not insurance for loss of or damage to the goods is included in the rental fee."

The second clause is that the warning must be clearly shown that this is what is happening. The renter, in order to be protected must know exactly what his liability is, whether it is just liability for him or whether it is extended liability to a third party damaging, or something of that nature.

What really is being done is a very simple step to further protect the consumers of Ontario. And I want to say that in Ontario the Consumer Protection Act we have now is one of the best in the jurisdictions of which I am aware. There are areas of that Act that should be amended and additions should be made to it. I certainly would suggest that this is one addition that will correct what is an omission in the present Act.

There are more ways of renting equipment cropping up every day. People are renting things we never thought of in previous years. It is becoming a way of life and people who wouldn't ordinarily read a contract are renting equipment. Therefore I believe that this bill will bring one more protection to the men and women of Ontario who are ordinarily people and need its protection very, very much. I would strongly urge the members of this House to vote in favour of this bill.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Did the member for Sarnia wish to reserve some time at the end?

Mr. Blundy: Yes, I would like to do so, Mr. Speaker. At least five minutes.

Mr. Davison: I rise to offer my support on second reading of Bill 45, An Act to amend the Consumer Protection Act. While I am quite happy to support this bill today I would much prefer to be speaking on a government-sponsored bill of the same title that would in fact have the effect of making the Consumer Protection Act of Ontario have contents that would equal its fine title. Neither the provisions of that particular Act nor the record of its accomplishments or the enforcement of the Act are something of which the people in Ontario can be terribly proud, and in that I am afraid I must disagree with my colleague from Sarnia.

Mr. McClellan: The minister isn't even here.

Mr. Davison: By the way, where is the minister?

An hon. member: He is out to lunch today.

Mr. Eaton: He is unable to be here.

Mr. Pope: You are pulling a Mel Swart.

Mr. Davison: I trust that he will upon return to the House this evening carefully read the excellent remarks of the member for Sarnia and the remarks that will be made by other members in this debate so he can bring himself abreast of some of the real problems that consumers are facing in Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: The minister is talking to Mr. X.

Mr. Davison: This government's commitment to consumer protection is indeed a very modest one, consisting in large part, if not totally—

Mr. Eaton: That is not what the member for Sarnia said, he said it was the best.

Mr. Davison: Yes, he did and—

Mr. McClellan: He was wrong. He was dead wrong.

Mr. Davison: —I disagree on that. He is wrong.

The commitment consists almost totally of public relations. This government has actually been able to convince some members of the citizenry that we do in Ontario really adequately protect consumers through the legislation of this House. That the member for Sarnia, the former Liberal critic for Consumer and Commercial Relations, understands from his review of this matter and his talking to people in the province that it was necessary to add what would seem to be such a basic, simple and sensible protective amendment to the legislation shows, I suspect, quite clearly the inadequacy of Ontario's Consumer Protection Act.

I thought that his remarks in explaining the need for the bill were quite appropriate and while I couldn't agree with him in his overview of the bill I would like to put on the record the explanatory note which the member has had attached to Bill 45, because I think it shows quite clearly the intent of this particular amendment:

"The bill provides for warnings in rental contracts as to whether or not loss of or damage to the goods rented is included in the rental fee. The warnings also point out that persons renting the goods may be responsible for loss of or damage to the rented goods where no insurance is included." The lack of such basic protection in the Act is indeed puzzling to the members opposite or anyone else in the province—and should indeed have been puzzling to the member for Sarnia—who would have thought we had adequate protection or that the government was at all serious about protecting consumers. At times, the Consumer Protection Act is anything but. I'm sure that all members of the House recall Judge Killeen recently commenting that the Ontario legislation, including the Consumer Protection Act, falls far short of the mark in protecting the public.

In 1976, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations received, classified and closed, some 6,095 complaints under the Consumer Protection Act. It sounds rather impressive, 6,095 complaints. How many of those complaints were prosecuted and in how many cases was there a conviction? Only two. That number seems to me to be quite memorable, although it's terribly unimpressive. However, its lowness can perhaps better be understood when we compare it to the number of cases that were investigated under the Consumer Protection Act. That number was four. That leaves 6,091 cases of complaint under the Consumer Protection Act in 1976 uninvestigated.

Mr. McClellan: A wonderful record.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is a distortion though. There are alternative ways of doing it. You people would use a heavy-handed approach.

Mr. McClellan: I'm sure there are. One would be to get rid of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Davison: Those are statistics—6,095 complaints, four investigations, two prosecutions. The statistics speak rather loudly and they show an ineffective ministry or an inadequate piece of legislation or, as I suspect is the case—

Mr. Foulds: Both.

Mr. Davison: —an ineffective ministry administering an inadequate piece of legislation.

Mr. Makarchuk: Combine the two of them and you get something pretty rough.

Mr. Davison: Quite rough.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is the blind leading the blind.

Mr. Davison: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has in the past explained that the legislation is a bit of a problem in that most courts of law will not grant restitution in these cases. If the current legislation is the only reason—and I suspect it's not—for the lack of adequate consumer protection in Ontario, then the minister's job would be to propose massive alterations that would provide consumers in Ontario with the kind of protection that is so obviously and apparently necessary. It should not be necessary for members like the hon. member for Sarnia or the hon. member for Simcoe Centre or indeed myself to have to move by way of private member's bills to add some law to surround the loopholes in consumer protection in this province.

Mr. Foulds: Or even the hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. Davison: That's right. In Ontario today, consumer protection should not be a part of our modern mythology. It should be a reality. I support the member for Sarnia's private member's bill today but I hope in the very near future those of us in the House will have the opportunity of seeing some wide-ranging and effective government legislation to amend the Consumer Protection Act so that it is indeed finally worth its name.

Mr. MacBeth: To my mind, this bill is a very good example of the ambivalence of most of us in this House as legislators.

Mr. McClellan: Speak for your own ambivalence.

Mr. MacBeth: It is true that when we're elected we all run on a platform that will remove Ontario from sin and injustice.

Mr. Wildman: We haven't done it. There have been 35 years of it.

Mr. MacBeth: No, I don't think we have and I don't think we're about to.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's because there have been so many sinners elected to the Legislature.

Mr. Bradley: Not until the next election.

Mr. Foulds: That's called the Elmer Gantry ticket.

Mr. MacBeth: That's the legitimate purpose of all of us. Until we get rid of you fellows, it might be a little difficult to do that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's all right. We will return to the high road.

Mr. Foulds: Stop heckling your own member.

Mr. Wildman: Don't turn around. You'll turn to a pillar of salt.

Mr. MacBeth: If a rectangular chamber can have three sides, I have listened to us on all sides of this chamber tell us and make a similar pledge that we are all in favour of making the life of the small businessman somewhat simpler, we want to remove him from government control and we want to get out of his life. I've heard it from all three sides of this rectangular or this diagonal chamber, or whatever it is. When I listen to these debates on these private members' public bills, I wonder whether or not we are putting a little too much importance on them under our new procedure. I know it is good to give the private members an opportunity to express their thoughts so the government can get the flavour, so the people will know what we are thinking and we know what the people are thinking. Yet, at the same time, I think the way to do it—

Mr. Samis: John, you're sounding reactionary.

Mr. MacBeth: —is through a motion similar to the one the member for Elgin has made—so that we can express our thoughts without trying to leap into legislation.

There are two things, I suppose, that we as legislators can do. One is pass tax bills and the other is pass legislation. Every bit of legislation that we pass restricts somebody's freedom or liberty. But that is what we seem to be able to do and some of us feel, unless we are either passing legislation or taxing somebody, that we are not doing the job we are expected to do.

Mr. McClellan: You are the only ones who can tax; you are tax happy.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't know, we find you rather taxing at times.

Mr. MacBeth: That's right, we find you people wanting to tax all the time. I think it has been ruled that only the government can pass taxing bills—

Mr. Foulds: He should get an award for the worst pun of the year.

Mr. MacBeth: You are down to trying to deal with legislation. We have 100 private members in this chamber all trying to rush into the records for posterity—that that is the bill that I put down on paper, that I had a part in, that I introduced—to restrict the freedoms of the people of the province. There is no wonder that so many people look upon us with a jaundiced eye.

Let's take a look at this bill. I have been rambling—I admit that—and I have had my tongue in my cheek part way along. But I think, in all seriousness, we shouldn't be rushing into legislation unless there is a good practical purpose for doing so.

Mr. Foulds: Rambling and mumbling.

Mr. MacBeth: We've got too much legislation.

This purports to protect the interest of the consumers of this province. With the millions of contracts that are entered into every day between consumer and purchasers, whether they are oral contracts or implied contracts, when you go into your neighbourhood store, when we suddenly pick out this—I won't call it an insignificant matter—but it is only one of thousands of matters in the field of contracts that my good friend from Sarnia could have dealt with.

I have never heard that these matters of rental were any great concern over any other types of concern that people have over various contracts. So I don't know why at this time we would suggest to a businessman: you've got your forms all ready and all the rest, but because a private member of this House thought there was some concern over the matter of rental agreements you will now have to go out and do your forms all over again. This matter of rentals is so important that you have got to put this in capital letters.

I don't know, as I say, whether this matter is any more important than the thousand of other things that are dealt with in contracts. Next week, I might have a bright idea—I don't get too many of them but I get one or two—so I bring in my bill. I want to outdo the member for Sarnia so I say that the point I want to make should be put in red ink.

These are the kind of problems we present to the small businessmen of this province, whom we are all trying to woo and say we look after. It doesn't matter what problem it is for you, Mr. Businessman. The vendor is the villain while the purchasers are always the good guys, so you go out and do your forms over again. Go to this expense. We are not so sure that we won't give you a different form a few weeks from now to redo, and have retyped with all the expense, consultation with lawyers and all the rest that goes with it.

I think we are trying to tell people—and this is where we make a mistake—that the government will protect you from every evil. That, of course, is not good, but some people seem to think that a good consumer protection Act is all that is needed. You don't need to have any common sense yourself. You don't need to use the old phrase, let the buyer beware. You can go headlong into every contract, and the government will save you from all of the problems that might come from that.

Mr. Bradley: You don't need a high-class lawyer.

Mr. MacBeth: There used to be—

Mr. Foulds: You know what, you're cabinet material.

[5:00]

Mr. MacBeth: I was once but I'm not anymore.

There was once a way of making sure that you didn't get into trouble when you dealt in contracts. You used to deal with reputable people. I don't know whether that word reputable has gone out of fashion or not. I suppose it implies some sort of discrimination, that you should be able to deal with all people as though they were reputable. But there was a day when we used to rely on our own judgement and the people we dealt with to make sure that they would give us an honest and proper deal.

It's amazing to me, when we come to this matter of taking a chance in business, that we say that a member of the public should never take any risks or any gamble when he goes into a commercial transaction, and yet all levels of government seem to be rushing headlong to try to take money away from people by way of lotteries of one sort or another. On the one hand, we're encouraging a little bit of gambling by saying to take a chance in life; and yet, when it comes to this matter of day-to-day commercial transactions, the government should save you harmless in everything you do.

The best protection for people is their own common sense and their own investigation. What we should be trying to do, under our Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is to try to teach people to be on their guard and to be aware, rather than saying, "If you get into trouble, we'll get you out of it." Let's get back to dealing with reputable people.

The thought of this bill is not all that bad. I'm simply saying it's not an important enough subject to run into legislation and to put the businessman, the small businessman or the big businessman, through all the problems of rewriting his contract forms on the particular whim of one member—not that that whim is bad, we're all entitled to our whims.

The minister himself, may have the idea of looking at this bill at some time. The debate that takes place here today and the results of that debate can be viewed by the minister. Then, maybe when he's looking at this bill again in the overall picture, he can put the businessman to the trouble of reviewing this bill once and redoing his forms in a comprehensive way rather than picking up this one little point.

When we're looking at legislation—and, remember, this is what we're doing now under private members' public bills; we have the potential of legislation—we must proceed with it cautiously and make sure that the results we hope to achieve by legislation are not outweighed by the disadvantages that we are looking at.

Mr. Warner: Are you going to guillotine this one too?

Mr. MacBeth: I would suggest to the House that the disadvantages of this bill—the cost of administering it, the cost it puts to the small businessman, the general annoyance to the public and the fact that it would be one more step on the road to government control—are such that this bill will accomplish less in the way of good than the harm it will bring about.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Bill 45, An Act to amend the Consumer Protection Act, the bill presented by the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy).

In my initial comments, I would react in a very brief manner to the comments of the hon. member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth), because at the present time we seem to be in a debate—not only in this province, but I suppose, across the land—on what the role of government should be. I think we're all trying to strike a balance between government intervention on behalf of the individual citizen and the right of the private sector to operate without interference from government.

It seems to me that when it's convenient to certain sectors of private business to have regulations, they're for regulations. When it's not convenient, they're opposed to regulations. So I would agree with the member for Humber that we have to be very careful to look at the ramifications of each piece of legislation, be it initiated by the government or by a private member during this hour.

I'm hopeful the government won't block this bill, because I think it is a common-sense bill, a very simple and to-the-point bill. When we look at the possible ramifications for business, common sense would dictate that the bill might not come into effect immediately. There would be plenty of warning for business, for those who might be in this specific rental business, so that the forms they have to deal with, and the contracts they have to have printed, can be printed in the manner in which this bill dictates. With that necessary interlude between now and then, presumably they would use up most or all of the contracts they have at the present time. Implicit in the passing of this bill, I think, would be a reasonable period of time to adjust to it.

I realize that there are some who think this is unnecessary intervention into the private sector. But surely any honest businessman—and the overwhelming majority of business people in this province are honest individuals who wish to conduct business in an honest way under the laws of the country and in the province. So assuming this, I cannot see why any honest businessman or businesswoman would object to this particular provision in the bill, which clearly outlines to the individual who is receiving the service or the rented product in this case what the implications are in terms of insurance.

As the member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) indicated in his previous bill before this Legislature, the individual is not always cognizant of the exact provisions of a contract, particularly those that are in the proverbial small print, and sometimes in certain contracts requires the assistance of a solicitor. The individual may not have the kind of funds necessary to consult a solicitor every time he or she enters into a contract involving a consumer item and so the consumer looks to government to protect the legitimate interests of that consumer when he or she is dealing in this kind of contract.

So I commend both the member for Simcoe Centre and the member for Sarnia for recognizing this problem that does exist and attempting to alleviate it in the manner which has been prescribed by this bill and the previous bill.

Bold face type I think was referred to by the member for Humber. He suggested that perhaps next week or the week after someone would come in with a bill indicating it should be red type instead of bold face type. I suppose that is something we might have to look forward to, but the members of the Legislature can make a judgement on that particular provision at that time.

I think it's very important to look at who is responsible for the insurance. I think that's one of the major provisions of a rental contract. That's why it is necessary to bring clearly to the intention of the consumer the fact that either the company from whom the product is rented is responsible for the insurance of that product should there be a problem, or the individual is responsible.

I think that has to be clearly spelled out, because for both the individual and for, I suppose, society represented in some form in this Legislature by the government, the consequences are not insignificant.

For instance, a person involved in the rental of a vehicle may find himself in severe personal debt as the result of an accident that takes place if he has to assume the cost of it out of his own pocket instead of insurance. As a result of being unable to pay in this regard that person may end up with a poor credit rating. That person—and I realize we have legislation that prevents discrimination—may then find himself or herself in a position where that person is unable to obtain employment of some kind because people say that he is not a responsible person in dealing with his own debt.

For the public the consequences are great because this government across the floor, and I think members of the opposition, are concerned about how much government involvement there should be in providing funds for individuals who are in dire need. If a person is facing the consequences of a debt of this kind, resulting from lack of knowledge of who is responsible for damage to or loss of a particular item, that person might have to apply for social assistance in terms of welfare or other government assistance that might be available. Or that person in desperation may—and I realize this may be hypothetical—commit a crime which would result in that person being apprehended by the law and being institutionalized in one of our correctional institutions.

All of these consequences are possible and might just in some small way be avoided by the provisions of the bill as proposed by the member for Sarnia.

I needn't repeat the provisions of the bill. I think it must be clear to people exactly what they are getting into when they get into a rental contract. I commend this bill to members of the Legislature and hope that they will vote on the basis of their own personal conscience and their own personal philosophies in this regard and on the merits of the bill, rather than feeling obligated to vote one way or another because of the political party they happen to represent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. Rollins) has asked if he could make a brief announcement. Would the members of the House agree?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed.

BELLEVILLE OFFICE LOCATION

Mr. Rollins: Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce the proposed new locations for the provincial family court and the land registry office in the city of Belleville.

An hon. member: Oh, you're kidding.

An hon. member: You're not serious?

Some hon. members: Order.

Mr. Rollins: The family court will be located at 199 Front Street, in the building known as the Century Place. The Century Place was the successful tender and submitted a firm offer, which has been accepted by the province of Ontario.

Mr. Ruston: That's an abuse of privilege of the House if I ever heard one. Sit down.

Mr. Rollins: The Ministry of the Attorney General will occupy—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Epp: What an abuse of the House!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Eaton: You agreed to let him make an announcement.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is a gross abuse of the House rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As this is private members' hour, I think this is taking away from the time of the private members. I would ask the member to refrain until the end of the debate.

Mr. Foulds: He should issue a press statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bradley: And what announcement do you have?

Mr. Eaton: He's going to resign. That's his announcement.

Mr. Samis: It's about that courthouse in Scarborough.

Mr. Warner: We might not have objected had there been an announcement about the courthouse in Scarborough; otherwise, it is not an appropriate time to make the announcement.

Mr. Lawlor: I have an announcement about a crypt for deceased politicians.

Mr. MacBeth: That's always a good thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

CONSUMER PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to take part in this debate on the bill put forward by the member for Sarnia, who is to be commended for his concern about consumer protection and for his interest in putting forward an amendment to an extremely important Act, that dealing with consumer protection.

I am rather shocked by some of the comments made by the member for Humber, the ex-Solicitor General. Surely, in the way in which he went about trying to perform his duties as Solicitor General, and often in a superb fashion, it was part of his experience that there have been quite a few people defrauded. There have been quite a few businesses not acting in the proper public interest. There have been quite a few people who have been, in the modern term, ripped off. His comments would certainly not indicate that he was aware of those circumstances, yet I know that he must be.

Consumer protection, we should understand, developed because of some very serious problems. The Act didn't just suddenly appear. It didn't spring from nowhere. It didn't come just for something to do. It came out of a real need. It resulted from the fact that consumers were being taken on a regular basis, and in a wide variety of fields and situations. It was being found that, no matter what kind of avenue you pursued in your daily life, you encountered places where you were not being treated fairly—places where, in fact, you were being ripped off.

There was a very strong opposition mounted both by elected members in the assembly and by consumers out there, as well as by consumer groups and persons interested in reforming the laws, so that people could be protected. I am really quite shocked that an ex-Solicitor General could pretend that there isn't a real problem and that it doesn't need to be dealt with in a very firm and direct way.

Mr. Wildman: Of course, he's had sunset applied to him.

Mr. Warner: Quite frankly, I take it that that kind of attitude is pervasive on the other side of the House—

Mr. MacBeth: That is hardly what I suggested, Mr. Speaker. I suggested this matter was not worth a separate bill.

[5:15]

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, this legislation is needed, because it wouldn't be here if this situation was covered in the Consumer Protection Act. That's pretty obvious. It's here for a reason. It's unfortunate that members in the House have to introduce private member's bills which may be guillotined in order to bring about the kind of change which is needed and which everyone understands is needed.

Mr. Martel: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It also lacks specificity. You have some real potential problems that you are not even aware of.

Mr. McClellan: Never mind the two-bit legal advice, Norton.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Speak to the lawyers in your caucus about the possible impact on the common law that you weren't even concentrating on.

Mr. McClellan: Never mind the free legal advice.

Mr. Wildman: That could also be applied to the member for Elgin's (Mr. McNeil) resolution.

Mr. McClellan: How are you going to vote on this?

Hon. Mr. Norton: You are going to destroy relationships among neighbours.

Mr. Warner: Part of the problem is that even if this bill isn't guillotined by the government in its normal fashion and if it does pass and does go to committee—and I haven't seen any of them that have—and is passed and comes back here and gets third reading and royal assent for the first time—I stand corrected, for the second time—that that's happened since we've instituted private member's business, if all of that happens to take place, it may still mean absolutely nothing, because the guiding principle behind the ministry of so-called consumer affairs, but really corporate protection, is that the only kind of thing we use when there's a problem is moral suasion. There are no teeth to government legislation. There never has been because there's no real intention over there. The real problems which we know about, which are spoken about and which are dealt with by many members of this assembly should actually be backed up in law. There's no intention to do that and there never has been.

The Consumer Protection Act has been around for some time now and it addresses several problems in print but not in action. We asked for figures in estimates as to how many people have been fined, how many of those who are not operating in the public interest have been brought into court and have been fined or had some other sanction applied to them. We get back figures that indicate a feeble response in terms of the dimension of the problem. It makes one wonder how long it will take with the present government before it will act.

I'll support the legislation that has been placed before us this afternoon. It addresses one part of a very real problem for consumers in this province. But I know full well that while I support it, the possibility of it being adopted and backed up with some real teeth is pretty slim. That's been underscored by the comments of the ex-Solicitor General.

Mr. Wildman: And by the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Warner: And by the interjections of the Minister of Community and Social Services, who's now conscious.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not disagreeing with the intent. I am just suggesting there are other problems about it.

Mr. MacBeth: On a point of order. I want to make clear, Mr. Speaker, that I am taking part or did take part in this debate as a private member, and that should be clear to the member.

Mr. McClellan: He understands that.

Mr. Makarchuk: There's nothing out of order.

Mr. MacBeth: He was certainly suggesting I was speaking on behalf of the government and I want that to be clear. I'm speaking as a private member.

Mr. McClellan: Everybody knows that. You never did.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere will continue.

Mr. Warner: I understand that the agitated member is speaking as a private member.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Why don't you resign?

Mr. Warner: I mentioned that he is the ex-Solicitor General and—that I felt that his attitudes probably reflected the pervasive attitude over there of non-consumer protection.

Mr. MacBeth: You probably presume too much.

Mr. Warner: The real title should be understood. It's corporate protection. It's not consumer protection whatsoever. I've gone through that so-called moral suasion.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You're totally ineffective. You don't know what it is all about.

Mr. Wildman: Why don't you talk about how much we do know.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It wouldn't take so very long.

Mr. Warner: I believe that the Speaker recalls an item of concern of mine some while back where a constituent had a problem with a car dealer. I asked the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to be involved and to bring some restitution of the problem to the constituent. I trusted that they would do so forthrightly and swiftly. I was told over the telephone, point blank, that the situation had been solved. What I discovered was that their moral suasion had failed.

Fortunately, because I am thorough in my job, I checked back with the constituent who hadn't been given any solution to the problem.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You better send this comment to your constituents.

Mr. Warner: It was then left to me personally to go to the car dealership and to get back for that constituent at least a portion of the money which she had been gypped out of. She had been taken for over $300. I managed to get back $100 of it. But the ministry could have done something, and they didn't. One of the reasons they didn't was because they knew that beyond moral suasion they had nothing more. It is a shameful way to try to protect the consumers of this province.

In conclusion, we need to vote in favour of this bill which is in front of us. It is a bill which reflects the concerns of the member for Sarnia and the concerns of many members of this House. But we need more than that. I am hoping that when we support this bill today—as I am confident that most members of the House will do—that it will be a signal to the government that they need to improve the Consumer Protection Act and they need to put some teeth into it so that consumers can be protected in this province finally.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, I would like at the outset to thank the member for Sarnia for his comments in regard to the present consumer legislation, that it is some of the best in existence.

Mr. Samis: He will learn.

Mr. Eaton: I would like also to make reference to the member for Hamilton Centre's comments in regard to the minister not being present. Certainly he is interested in the legislation as the member for Sarnia well knows.

Mr. Bradley: He is present in spirit.

Mr. Eaton: I would also like to point out to the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. Davison) that he has some erroneous information in regard to the Consumer Protection Act.

Mr. Davison: Because I got it from your ministry.

Mr. Eaton: I did take the opportunity to check out the figures. There is not one of our pieces of legislation which has that particular number of complaints tied to it. I don't know where his figures come from.

Mr. Davison: I got it from your ministry.

Mr. Eaton: I would like however, to relate to you the total figures involved in consumer complaints in regard to a number of pieces of legislation. The total for last year amounts to close to 18,000 of which 140 special investigations were carried out, some 300 charges were laid, some 70 prosecutions were completed, some 15 cease and desist orders were issued. And through the moral suasion you talk about, that settled many cases, we were able to have redress to consumers in the amount of $1.5 million.

Mr. Davison: How much of that was under the Consumer Protection Act? That is from all of your legislation. What about the Consumer Protection Act?

Mr. Eaton: I consider that not a bad record in regard to the consumer legislation that we have.

I would like to go on record as supporting in principle the bill introduced by the hon. member for Sarnia, to amend the Consumer Protection Act.

Mr. Lupusella: Better clean your record first.

Mr. Eaton: I can see no reason whatsoever to oppose a requirement that the owner of an article which is being rented discloses potential liability at the time of consummating a contract.

The common law position in respect to the renter's liability is quite clear. He or she is required to use no more than the degree of care which a normal individual should use in tending his own personal possessions. In any action for damages for the destruction of a chattel, the owner has to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the renter was guilty of negligence, and that his negligence caused the damage or destruction of that chattel.

If the renter returns the property in damaged condition and fails to give an account of the matter, the law authorizes a presumption of negligence, unless the renter shows how the accident happened. The owner needs only to point out the deteriorated condition of the article. By entering into a contract for the return of the property in the actual condition it was in when it was rented, a renter could assume a greater obligation than the law would uphold under the circumstances.

Primarily the bill would require that the owner of the goods advise the renter at the time of entering into the contract as to the extent of the renter's liability for loss or damage. The other provision of the bill dealing with insurance is just a straight disclosure of the provisions. However, whether or not the owner of the goods discloses that he or she has insurance does not necessarily affect the liability or responsibility of that renter.

The principle of the bill could go further than the hon. member for Sarnia may anticipate, because it covers many varied areas, including automobiles. However, the bill does not include provisions dealing with this third party liability insurance that may be desirable in certain circumstances and with certain types of goods.

One thing that is not clear to me is why the member for Sarnia chose this particular area over others which could be considered for disclosure, such as luggage claims household moving et cetera. It is possible to argue that although the member for Sarnia's bill expresses a good sentiment it misses the larger issue. The important issue goes beyond disclosure and addresses the further question which is: Should there be a legislative thrust to reapportion potential liability, either by a mandatory insurance option or by prohibiting owners from extending the common law liability?

There is one other matter I wish to raise. The Consumer Protection Act and indeed the balance of the ministry's consumer legislation addresses itself to dealings between a consumer and a business, rather than dealings between business people.

The hon. member may note that Bill 45 refers to a person, whereas the rest of our consumer legislation in the Consumer Protection Act refers to the buyers. The use of "person" would expand the scope of the Act to include individuals who buy in the course of carrying on business, or to an association of individuals, a partnership or a corporation. This was certainly never the intent of the Consumer Protection Act and I don't really believe that it was intended by the member for Sarnia's bill either.

We are currently subjecting the Consumer Protection Act to an extensive internal review, and the area of consumer leases and the apportionment of liability is one of the priority areas we are examining, among many others.

In order to avoid the expense and confusion of introducing piecemeal legislation, I would certainly recommend that even though we agree in principle with this legislation, its content be merged with other amendments that will result from our own review and which we would hope to introduce within this next year. I believe after speaking with the member for Sarnia the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) has agreed to incorporate this principle into the new legislation, rather than have it given third reading here in the Legislature.

With this preparation of the new Act already well advanced, this will eliminate any confusion and avoid any creation of new forms at the present time. So I would urge the members to support the legislation of the member for Sarnia on this second reading, so we do have agreement in principle and we assure you that it will be incorporated later on.

Mr. Eakins: I want to rise briefly to add my support to my colleague. I want to compliment my colleague, the hon. member for Sarnia, for introducing this bill. I feel it is a good bill and deserves the support of the members of this House providing, as this bill does, forewarnings in rental contracts as to whether or not the loss of or damage to the goods rented is included in the rental fee.

I feel that this is good legislation. I commend my colleague for introducing it and urge the members of this House to give it full support.

Mr. Lawlor: I have just a word on the bill. In voting on it, I believe I would personally vote against the legislation with some regret. While it acts as a stimulus to the department itself in a revamping of the legislation—and there are many defects in the Consumer Protection Act, particularly with respect to matters of privacy—this piece of legislation before us, commendable as it is, is too piecemeal and does not focus in on the widest elements of the issue, with respect to the insurance element there. It should cover a great deal more than simply the rental thing.

I have some misgivings about the bold type. It seems to me there are a great many things that ought to be in bold type. If one puts all of them into bold type, there wouldn't be anything else but boldness throughout. We have to use some form of discretion, some nice discretion as to what we insisted stood out on the page, so to speak, over against what was recessed. Whether this particular matter over against all kinds of other representations, particularly with respect to interest rates or penalty charges of one kind and another or a whole host of things ought to stand out in bold type, would be for the angels and no doubt for the rest of the people in this Legislature who ain't to make in some future determination.

That would be the basis on which I would approach it. I don't flagellate the legislation. It's moving in the right direction. Within our law we have a Sale of Goods Act, which is extremely ancient and very elaborate as to what the range of coverage might be; for instance, sale by sample or sale in five or six different ways and what the ingredients of that sale would be and what the consequences flowing from defective sale in one way or another might be.

The English law, except in the common law, by way of statute hasn't developed with respect to the rental area. We have the whole of the Landlord and Tenant Act. Very often within tenancy there are furniture and other matters that fall within the ambit of the rental itself which again, being chattels, aren't specifically covered within the law. There's mention of it in the Landlord and Tenant Act, but no one has ever really concentrated upon this aspect. When one sees these stores all over the place renting everything under the sun, one would think that a Legislature that was up to date and even partially alive would respond to that.

The member deserves credit in being the first that I know of who has responded to it in terms, albeit too narrow, and not in enough depth with respect to the ramifications surrounding rental agreements of all kinds. To the extent that he has gone and to the extent he acts as a gadfly, bless him. To the extent that he is not a big enough bumblebee, I can't support him.

Mrs. Campbell: I rise in support of this bill. Let me say that it may well be a fact that the bill is a narrow bill, but surely, the intent of this bill is an important intent. To deny it the opportunity for discussion in committee seems to me to be defeating the whole purpose of the private member to bring forward in this House his or her concerns for the deliberation of a committee. Surely the principle of the bill is not in any way negated by reason of the fact that in some members' opinion it is too narrow in its concept. I believe that everyone in this House can accept the fact that it is an important step forward. Surely it is open to the committee to go over the bill, to amend it, to enlarge it or to do whatever the committee feels ought to be done with it. But to deny or negate the principle today, it seems to me, would be self-defeating, not just of the bill but of the entire principle, which I think is generally accepted in this House.

I would urge the member for Lakeshore to give consideration to approval in principle so that it may be allowed to go to a committee for consideration. At that point in time one may then debate the merits or whatever of the bill, and there can be amendments. Otherwise, it dies.

In this House I have been very saddened by the fact that so many of the private members' bills, and in my view many bills that had merit, have died because they are not perfect. You know, Mr. Speaker, there aren't too many government bills that are all that perfect in the first analysis. And the government with its staff, does have so much greater opportunity to develop a bill to a point where perhaps it would be acceptable to everyone in the House.

The principle of the private members' hour truly has been eroded in this House, and I would ask and urge all of those who are concerned with the right of the private member and the fact that this bill is a step forward, if not perfect—and I'm not suggesting it isn't perfect; I'm simply saying if others say that—to let it go to a committee so that it can be made perfect by an all-party committee.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with the response we have had in the House today to Bill 45. I don't for one minute want to say that I think the bill is the answer to all the problems of the consumer in Ontario or that it is a perfect bill. It is a bill that is being proposed to plug a loophole that is not covered by the Consumer Protection Act now and one that I believe should be plugged to protect the consumers of Ontario. That is the reason for it.

Mr. Bradley: Does it cover the rented suits I see in the family section of the Toronto Star?

Mr. Blundy: I don't know if it covers the rented suits my colleague is talking about—the ones worn by some of our friends on the other side of the House, in today's Toronto Star.

In winding up the debate on this bill I want to note that the member for Hamilton Centre took exception to the fact that I had said the Consumer Protection Act in Ontario probably was as good as its counterpart in most jurisdictions. I still say that, but I think that consumer protection in all of the jurisdictions is not as good as it should be. I think there is room for very many improvements. I was very pleased to hear the member for Middlesex say that the minister is planning a number of amendments to the bill and that, hopefully, when that bill is amended, this motion would be included.

The member for Humber said: "We are used to dealing with reputable people and you shouldn't have to pass legislation to cover all of these things." The problem is that everybody with whom we deal in Ontario is not the reputable merchant or reputable shopkeeper that we all would like to think is so prevalent in our area. The government does have to pass legislation to deal often with the minority group in our province. So I am not detracting from the reputation of many of the businessmen in our province who are making a living out of the rental of tools and equipment to the people of Ontario.

I am very pleased to have had this opportunity to present a private bill. I do hope that the members of the House will see the merit in the bill and see what it does mean to the consumers of the province. We would like very much to have this bill given second reading and, if considered necessary, to go to a committee of the House so that it may be more refined to give further protection to the people of Ontario. It would certainly make it very worthwhile for me.

Mr. Speaker: Do any other members wish to participate in this debate? There are about eight minutes left and we can't put the vote before 5:50.

Mr. Nixon: Let's ring the bells.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, if there aren't any others to participate may I use this time to give the business statement to the House for next week? Would the House agree?

Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I could read it slowly.

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't be too provocative either.

Mr. Speaker: We've always said if there's a void you can always find somebody to fill it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: These interjections are really disturbing.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the rules may I indicate the order of business as follows:

This evening, when we come back at 8 we'll take into consideration Bills 7, 8, 9 and 11 in that order, following which we do Bill 31. Then, if time permits, we'll do Bills 26 and 28.

Mr. Conway: What about my budget speech?

Hon. Mr. Welch: On Friday morning the House will be in committee of supply to carry on with consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

On Monday of next week, in the afternoon, the House will be in committee of supply carrying on the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

On Tuesday, being legislation day, we will carry on where we leave off this evening in so far as legislation dealing with those bills which I have already listed is concerned. In addition to that we will then do Bill 48 and, in the evening, Bill 19.

On Wednesday, the House does not meet in the chamber but there will be committees, and we're indicating at this time that the resources development committee and the general government committee may meet Wednesday morning.

On Thursday, in the afternoon, we'll have private members' business with private members' Bills 46 and 47. In the evening, we will set aside that session for the first order, namely, the budget debate. On Friday morning, the House will be in committee of supply concluding the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

Other committees, of course, are meeting to consider estimates as they are set out on the order paper.

[5:45]

Mr. Foulds: It would be my understanding that Bill 48, if not dealt with on Tuesday afternoon, would not be called on Tuesday evening because the resources development committee is meeting on Tuesday evening. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Welch: That's right. Depending on where we finish tonight on those bills to which I have already made reference, we can only devote Tuesday afternoon to Bill 48 and we can't start Bill 19 until 8 o'clock for the same reason in reverse, if you know what I mean. So if we haven't finished Bill 48 by 6 o'clock, then we can't carry on until the following Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to call a five-minute recess and all members will be in a position to hear the motions put at 5:50.

The House recessed at 5:46.

On resumption:

PURCHASE OF AGRICULTURAL LAND

Mr. Speaker: Mr. McNeil has moved private member's motion No. 4.

Resolution concurred in.

CONSUMER PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Blundy has moved second reading of Bill 45.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

SECURITIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 7, An Act to revise the Securities Act.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to put our party position on the bill but I know we intend to support it. My colleague, the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt), is expecting the bill to be debated this evening and if you would recognize it as being, let's say, close to 6 o'clock, perhaps the debate could carry on at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Nixon moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. Newman: You just want to get to that dinner early.

The House recessed at 5:56 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

SECURITIES ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on second reading of Bill 7, An Act to revise the Securities Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the member who is about to begin, the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt), I did want to put on record the fact that this Friday in the weekly summary which is distributed throughout the securities industry, the members of this House will see some information which is headed by the words "Amendments to Bill 7," the bill we are currently considering. Those are proposed amendments which we are currently considering putting before the committee when it meets to deal with this legislation.

Mr. Nixon: That is a breach of our privileges.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In order to meet the anticipated comments of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, I wanted to take this opportunity to point out that we have been following the practice of publishing in the weekly summary notices of all our intended pieces of legislation, amendments and so on, so that we may get a full and complete response from the securities community prior to making a final decision on what amendments to make; and also so that the community will be in a full position to respond at the time we reach committee, rather than find out when we begin at committee that we suddenly have some amendments and they then have a limited time to appear before the committee and respond.

In the interests of that full and complete open process of consultation with the public which I spoke of just last Tuesday night on another matter, I wanted to point out to the members of the House that we weren't trying to get around the ordinary procedures nor to announce things to the public which we weren't making available to the House or its members. Accordingly, I am sending copies of these proposed amendments—not definite amendments—to my friends across the floor right now. I should add that none of them affects the principle of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk defers to the hon. member for Kitchener?

Mr. Nixon: I do.

Mr. Makarchuk: And they lived happily ever after.

Mr. Breithaupt: I am pleased to present at this time my views with respect to Ontario's new Securities Act. We will later then deal with the companion legislation. It is indeed gratifying to see this proposed legislation, which has finally come to second reading after its sixth introduction in as many years. In 1972, it was Bill 154; in 1974, it was Bill 75; then it became Bill 98 later in that same year. Finally, in 1977, it was Bill 20 and then Bill 30. I must say that after all of those drafts and the receipt of more than 50 briefs, we should be looking at the finest example of securities legislation ever presented in Canada, or perhaps in the world. Perhaps the only improvement which might come to mind would be if the bill was introduced by a Liberal administration.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We can hardly wait that long.

Mr. Nixon: You wouldn't then be fooling around with amendments.

Mr. Breithaupt: The minister says we can hardly wait. I don't think it would have taken all that much time. The curious thing is that after six goes around we now have further amendments today. I suppose it is a never-ending process. However, I will take the minister, obviously, at his word when he says that these amendments will be dealt with further in committee. In spite of the 23 pages just handed to me—

Mr. Nixon: Rather voluminous.

Mr. Breithaupt:—they do not, presumably, deal with particular matters of principle within the legislation.

Mr. Nixon: They were put in our hands at the very moment we rise and comment. That's completely unfair, if not irresponsible.

Mr. Breithaupt: If it is only lawyers' stuff, as the minister says, then perhaps we can indeed proceed to refer to the bill itself and not worry about them.

The government has had the benefit of time, certainly, in this first draft, which went back to 1972. The government has had representation from the industry in the form of numerous briefs. Fortunately, it has also had the benefit and expertise of two very knowledgeable men in their respective positions as chairmen of the Ontario Securities Commission.

Having watched the progression of these bills, I do feel that the new Act, as redrafted and reintroduced under the overview of Mr. James Baillie, our new superintendent of the securities commission, is really quite fair legislation. It would appear from the comments which we have received that the industry as such, those who are involved particularly with the administration of the securities market within the province, are also generally quite content with the legislation.

I would like to impress upon the minister that I think this does demonstrate the value of seconding one of the most credible persons within the securities industry, namely our new chairman, Mr. Baillie, to look over the proposed legislation and to give it the benefit of his own personal experience. Many of the smaller items in previous drafts which had concerned us have been patched up and corrected. I commend him for his involvement in this.

However, at this point I would like to briefly comment on some of the main areas which still remain points of concern that are no doubt going to be dealt with at the particular stages when this bill goes before the standing committee on justice. The proposed registration of financial institutions, such as banks, loan corporations and insurance and trust companies, with respect to their involvement in securities transactions, has definitely been clarified in Bill 7. The registration is now only going to be required where a financial institution buys or sells to a client, as a principal, from its own inventories; or secondly, if it is an underwriter. Banks and other financial institutions, however, may continue to transmit unsolicited orders on behalf of their clients to registrants for execution. This is vitally important because it provides a service for the public in areas of the province where there simply is no alternative but to deal through the local office of a bank or a trust company in a smaller community.

But at this point I think we should appreciate the nature of a bank's role in a small town in the province, that it plays a very key role in the financial affairs of such a community. If that role is such that a bank might deem it desirable to be registered, then we would have to consider some of the problems which would arise from this registration. Not only would the situation have to be registered, the personnel dealing in securities would also have to conform to the basic educational requirements as set out by the Investment Dealers' Association in order to be registered representatives. The problem here is that banks have a very mobile population, each member of which would have to become registered; which would make the whole procedure, in effect, unworkable.

More important, however, if this concept was to be made law and some financial institutions had to become registered, we would still have some distance to go in attempting to adopt the OSC regulation system as it presently stands to this new category of registrants. It appears there will have to be some further discussions on that particular section.

The continuous disclosure program provisions have been clarified to specify when the responsibility is triggered to make such a disclosure, and this was a concern previously. Another detail that has definitely been corrected is the replacement of the term "trade" with the words "purchase or sell" in respect of an underwriter dealing in the securities of a reporting issuer.

This, hopefully, will rectify a situation that could have involved breach of that section 75 by the mere act of the trading department of an investment dealer dealing in securities of a reporting issuer, for which the underwriting department of that investment house may have been aware of a material change without disclosing it. I'm confident that the discussions on that particular section, as they will deal with the in-house difficulties, are going to be interesting when this matter goes to committee.

The new list of exemptions from prospectus requirements has been structured on the expanded timely disclosure provisions. This new pattern of exemptions is detailed in the Act to replace the term "to the public," which previously had to be defined whenever it was referred to. I suggest this latter is a more logical approach and is one which is to be commended.

I do feel that the financial disclosure requirements of the registered advisers and dealers have been clarified to some extent in this new legislation. However, there is still some room left for discussion on the onerous reporting that may result for this group on circulars, pamphlets, advertisements, letters, telegrams, or other publications issued by them.

If we are dealing with the reporting of inventories held by dealers, there is a danger of misrepresentation of those holdings. Dealers maintain inventories in order to better service their clients and their stocks are constantly changing. To have to report a position of financial interest on one particular day would be superficial in nature, since that position in all likelihood will have changed by the following day and therefore would involve constant revision.

Obviously, the intent here is to catch some who would like to dump a large inventory of a particular security, but surely we can come up with a better way to handle this than to overburden every dealer with a tedious reporting job such as the one which may result from this type of proposal.

In this portion of the Act, section 40 particularly, a technical change may be desirable in that the definition of underwriter goes back to the definition at the beginning of the Act, as opposed to the sectional definition. This would prove to be far too wide in nature, since "underwriter" would then even include members of a selling group. Would it really be worth the benefits of the extra disclosure from so large a group and would the information be useful if we did get it?

In the same section 40, a technical change may be desirable in that further definition could be developed; particularly as I said, in relation to the problems which may arise because an overburdening of additional information may simply not be worth the result.

Many of the proposed changes for the mutual funds industry have been deleted from this bill. This is because the entire mutual funds industry has contracted, having experienced many changes itself in the past few years. Previous changes that would have imposed excessive administrative costs for this industry have been removed. I feel that the new proposals are much more in line with the present operations of the mutual funds industry.

Perhaps the most major renovation of this bill is in the area of takeover bids. The private agreement that had been removed from previous drafts has been reinstated in Bill 7. This is a very important element because there has been a general feeling of uneasiness about the government's removal of the public's right to do something. That private deal with fewer than 15 shareholders is once again being permitted, with the trailer that where there is a change of control at a premium over market prices, the purchaser must make the same premium available to minority shareholders within 180 days. This may not be the ultimate solution for the protection of minority shareholders in take-over bids, but it is an attempt at a workable compromise for everyone affected in a take-over situation.

We are concerned at this point at a number of the details contained in this trailer that should be clarified. For example, is the offer to purchase all of the additional securities of the same class intended to include an offer to holders of securities that are convertible into securities for which the offer is made?

Secondly, does "consideration for security at least equal in value to the highest price paid" necessarily mean that the value is to be reflected only in the dollar price being offered, or could it in fact be reflected in another way, such as additional holdings of the companies shares?

We feel, therefore, that while there is a definite need for the protection of the minority shareholder at all times, we would like to be certain the specific details of the proposal in this section will guarantee that all parties, both majority and minority shareholders, will be treated fairly and equitably.

I believe that this new Securities Act is coming into force at a good time for our economy. All three levels of government are said to be practising restraint in their spending. This should free up more dollars for private sector investment. The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has announced his intention of redirecting some government pension fund surpluses to the open market-place, which will open up an entirely new source of funds for investment in Canadian securities. Indeed, even the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) has received certain press coverage in this last while, encouraging various of our insurance companies to do the same in their development and changes with respect to their investment policies.

Our economy will be greatly strengthened if we can direct the savings of so many Canadians into the market-place and redirect as well a portion of those government-supervised pension funds or those pension funds available to our insurance companies through our new Securities Act.

In 1976, gross new financing by Canadian governments and businesses through securities markets amounted to some $24.5 billion. This was made up of $15.6 billion from Canadian savings and some $8.9 billion from non-resident sources. This proportion undoubtedly reflects our ability to save, to create new capital, and to attract capital from foreign sources. However, the application of these funds is still a somewhat disturbing factor.

Sixty-nine per cent of the total amount was used to finance the three levels of government. Twenty-eight per cent went to debt and preferred financing, and a mere three per cent was directed to new equity for new businesses. That latter figure is down from 11 per cent a decade ago and it simply must be increased for a healthy growing economy.

It may be that government should play a role in the education of the public towards investing. What people don't understand they tend to shy away from, and this is certainly reflected in the vast amounts of money Canadians will deposit in bank accounts, whether savings or even in some cases current, before they will in effect invest in securities markets. If we are to have a healthy, functioning Canadian economy, then that role of the government to educate the public in investing may well become a necessary role for this ministry in the future.

The Securities Act also comes along at a time when the investment industry has experienced a great deal of adjustment from the painful stock market situation of the last five years. The personnel involved have now shrunk by some 20 per cent and the number of investment firms is down by almost a third. However, as a result of this, the president of the Investment Dealers Association last year said, "We are now leaner, better managed, more innovative and smarter than ever before." And that industry is in a good position to grow and face the challenges of some of the major financing that lie ahead, particularly with respect to energy-related projects.

There will be a great need for capital in the near future and there is a job to be done by the investment industry in directing the flow of capital to the desired growth areas of our economy. We certainly hope that this bill will play a role in fostering the investment climate necessary for the future prosperity of our economy.

We are committed, in this party, to the high standards of disclosure and investor protection which will be afforded through this new Act. We're especially interested in encouraging and protecting the small investor, and we certainly look forward to the ensuing debate, and the amendments which will result when this bill goes to the justice committee.

Mr. Renwick: I have a strange sensation. I feel I know this bill backwards and forwards since it's been around for so long in draft form. Perhaps with tongue in cheek, I want to congratulate the minister for having disgorged this piece of legislation finally and having it before the House for actual debate. I think the major drawback has been that it has been such a continuously long-drawn out, in-house discussion among the ministry, the industry and the commission that one has a sense of immobility in the commission and in the ministry with respect to matters affecting the securities markets.

If one were, for example, to look at the bill which is presently before us, the predecessor of the bill and the predecessor of that bill, even for a few minutes, one would recognize that the provisions which were necessary for the protection of the markets in securities, assuming that they were necessary, have been missing from the marketplace for a long period of time. I think that raises extremely serious questions about the entrenched nature of the commission and about the entrenched nature of the vested interests represented in the securities industry.

I don't think there is anyone using any indices with respect to those markets who can today objectively evaluate whether or not they are serving the public interest at a cost consistent with the benefit we derive from this type of overall regulatory authority. I am quite aware that the securities industry has a long history of requiring supervision by government. I know there is a long history involved in the development and evolution of the Securities Commission in the province of Ontario. I know it is bolstered by a very competent staff who have a very real interest in extending the authority of the commission in the field of regulation of the securities market. I know there is a kind of a love-hate relationship between the industry and the commission that prevents the industry from making any onslaught on the commission because they are constantly involved with the commission.

We all know that the industry itself, particularly the special pleaders through my profession, the accountancy profession and others, have long since in the pressure of day-to-day business, lost any sense of an objective reappraisal of what role the commission is supposed to fulfill. It does seem very strange to me that a government which professes now to embrace a fashion of the day related to sunset laws and deregulations should, in a ministry fraught with regulations and with wide powers of regulating all kinds of industry, introduce to us tonight this bill and also Bill 8 dealing with the commodities futures market, which represent an immense extension of the power and authority of the Securities Commission.

I understand that they will tell me that it's really a rationalization of the process, that the whole purpose of it is to make the impact on the industry less, that the whole purpose of it is to remove the hindrances which the commission imposes on that industry. But when we examine historically the nature and structure of the Securities Act, which is again before us tonight, we can see very clearly that through a combination of regulatory requirements with respect to registration and with respect to disclosure, an approval of the existence of the Toronto Stock Exchange in a supervisory role in connection with the rules and regulations of that exchange in the way in which that market accomplishes its purpose, as well as the wide power of regulation granted in the latter provisions of the Securities Act and the power of exemption in various areas related to the securities industry, we can see that the Act is devised in such a way to make the securities industry in Ontario beholden day in and day out to the commission. They are either there trying to find that they fit within the requirements of the registration provisions or that the prospectus meets the requirements of the regulations and the forms which are required by the commission, or they are there seeking to expand and enlarge upon one of the areas of the exemptions so that they can see whether they can escape the net of the Securities Commission, or they are there begging the Securities Commission to exercise the extremely wide discretionary powers vested in that commission.

I just want to say that I am glad the bill is here. I am glad it is going to be passed. It's late; it's too late in relation to the evils which many of the provisions were directed towards. It will be helpful in the future, I am not denying that, but I am saying that I have the sense that many people in this ministry and in the commission feel that this is somehow the culmination and the end of the road and that we now have a fine Securities Act which is going to guide us for a long time into the future.

I want at least to implant in the minister's ear, and in the ears of those members of the commission and its staff who may have occasion to hear or read what I have had to say, that I have a strange suspicion that there are so many questions left with respect to the securities markets in Ontario that it may well be that it is time for an independent body—not the advisory body; an independent, carefully selected, small group of persons, either as a task force of the ministry or as a commission of some kind—to investigate it and to ask a number of very pertinent questions about the commission and its role.

I have tried to make some effort to write down what I think that body should try to direct its attention towards. The questions I would like to ask are these: Is it not now time to redefine the purposes and objectives of a corporate disclosure system? Is it not time to assess the present system in the light of those objectives? Is it not time to assess the costs of the present system? Is it not time to weigh those costs against the benefits it supposedly produces? And is it not time now to think about recommending any changes which may be necessary or appropriate in the light of the answers that may come out of such an objective consideration of the role of the commission?

I am not particularly sanguine about any commission, let alone this commission, that has such a wide ambit of authority, a continually expanding ambit of authority and one almost consecrated in the history of Ontario by its existence for at least more than 40 years if not longer. It does seem to me that the minister has an obligation to require the kind of study of that commission towards which I have, at least in very general outline, directed my attention.

I am always struck, when I have occasion to compare the kinds of lucid statements which are made by way of annual reports, releases and other documents by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States. They seem to justify their existence by being right up to date. I don't mean that they've solved all the problems in security transactions, but they certainly appear to be current with the problems that require their attention. They are not bogged down in dealing with the routines of the matters which can be dealt with by an efficient staff in the commission. The commission is directing itself towards very real evils.

For example, I have not seen anything—and I may be wrong—from the commission dealing with the question of the disclosure by issuers of any illegal or questionable corporate payments. I don't think any of us, now, in Canada, after the events which were disclosed in Ottawa, are so sanguine as to believe that Canadian industry escaped the very kind of illegal and questionable corporate payments which were made by corporations in the United States. A very real facility was provided through the Securities and Exchange Commission for those corporations to come forward and acknowledge the kinds of payments which had been made, what their purposes were, and to in some way or other exonerate themselves for the future. I know of no such questions which have been raised by the Securities Commission with regard to disclosure for prospectus purposes or for timely disclosure purposes by the companies which are listed on the exchanges.

I know, for example, of no consideration which has been given as to whether or not any pressure has been brought to bear on any of the securities dealers in the province of Ontario with respect to the Arab boycott. I have no knowledge or no idea about those matters, other than what I read in the United States press. There were instances, not within the United States but references with respect to issues abroad. I don't know whether or not those are matters to which the commission here has ever addressed its attention. I certainly haven't seen any such current matters.

It is quite fashionable, of course, to say that white-collar crime is very difficult to detect, and very difficult, once detected, to prove in a criminal court. But I do not see any indication that there is any correlative program in the commission here in Ontario, such as there is with the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States, of an organized crime program to make certain that fraudulent practices do not creep into the securities industry in the province of Ontario.

We have seen no public statements, in any event, of the extent to which this commission co-operates with other enforcement agencies within Canada or abroad in respect of the detection and elimination, to the extent possible, of white-collar crime in the securities field.

I know of no list published in Ontario which is equivalent to what is called the "foreign restricted list" which is published in the United States. I find on that list a number of companies which are designated as Canadian companies and which have been listed for evading United States securities laws.

I have no sense, if I may say so, that there is a vitality and life in that commission which is consistent with the obligations which it has if it is to justify its continued existence and its continued role.

It may well be, and we will have an opportunity in committee, as we go through the various parts of the Act and the various specific provisions of the Act, to touch upon some of these matters. Tonight on second reading of this bill my overall concern and that of our caucus—the stock exchange is not at the core of socialist philosophy but our caucus certainly is not going to oppose the legislation—is that it appears essential to us that some group of competent people stand back, take a cold, hard look at the Securities Commission and decide whether or not the cost is equal to the benefit which it contributes to the industry.

I have no problem in recognizing the need for disclosure provisions. I have no problem in recognizing the need for honesty in the marketplace. I have very real problems in deciding, as I read, or try to read, from time to time the weekly summaries and the monthly bulletins of the exchange, the extent to which the commission is alive and alert to the threats that may exist in the marketplace.

I have gone on sufficiently on that particular issue as I know the minister will recognize that perhaps there's some modicum of thought and necessity in the point which I have tried to put forward. It does seem to me that whether one views the securities market in Ontario as an off-shore adjunct of the United States or whether one views it as part of an expanding and national system of securities regulation, whether it's done under the aegis of the federal government or whether it's done by very close and intimate co-operation between the securities commissioners in all of the provinces is not a particularly relevant concern as to how it is done. But if it is going to be part of a national system or if it is going to be simply an off-shore product of the United States, as many people perhaps think it is, then it does seem to me there has to be an awareness and an alertness in the commission to the problems which are involved; and an obligation to publish the areas and to announce the areas in which they have concerns or in which they're carrying out their investigations.

I think in some ways the commission is at fault. I repeat what I said at the beginning. I quite understand that it is a competent commission. There is no problem about that. I quite understand that it is proud of its history as a protection to the investing public in the province. There is no difficulty with that. But like all people who are closely involved on a day-to-day basis with an industry which has been regulated in a particular manner and for particular purposes over a long period of time, it may well be time to stand aside and look at that commission.

I do not think it would be possible to ask the Wiseman committee to look at it. I would say to them that if they could find some way of dismantling the Securities Commission of the province of Ontario, we wouldn't have to have any other boards or agencies or commissions of government. This particular commission is in a very special position, next to, side by side with if not ahead of, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission as an agency of government which is vested in with its interests to such an extent, and with such a pride in the work which it does carry out, that one no longer has any real sense as to whether or not they are alive and alert to the problems which must be existing in the securities market.

We'll have an opportunity, I trust, in committee, to go through the various clauses one by one and see what wonderful changes have been wrought in this bill which has taken so long to come before the assembly.

Again I congratulate the minister for at least having got it in front of us so we can deal with it in the hope that it will become law.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge the remarks of the member for Kitchener. He has well highlighted some of the important changes and conceptual turnarounds that have occurred, particularly over the last period of time. I appreciate both his acknowledgement of those and the importance of those. We look forward to the committee stage for deliberation of these items because, as evidenced by the series of amendments that we are still considering at the present time, we acknowledge the complexity of it and the need, now that this bill has finally got this far, for input and dialogue with all members on the committee in order to finally come up with a scheme which is as current as possible.

The member for Riverdale began by noting the fact that we finally disgorged the bill. I feel obligated to note, especially in the presence of my predecessor, the member for Carleton, that but for the election that occurred last year, regardless of who may have been responsible for same, no doubt my predecessor would have had the pleasure of standing in his place last year and having a bill—I guess it was Bill 30 at that time—passed last spring; however, here we are today.

Mr. Foulds: That was an unnecessary election, wasn't it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course it wasn't.

In any event, I listened carefully to the remarks of the member for Riverdale. I noted his comments with regard to the fact he was concerned that there had been too close a relationship between the commission, the ministry, and the industry, to permit the full open type of—to use his words—"onslaught against the commission" in order to find out the relevancy of the commission or its aggressiveness.

I have heard his challenge put to me this evening to have a committee get into the study of the role of the commission and its place. I say to him that if I, at the conclusion of a lengthy period of time, share those concerns, then I might consider that. However, I think it would be very premature at this time; for a couple of reasons.

First, I think the bill we are discussing this evening, Bill 7, will begin to open up a new era in terms of the relationships between the public at large, the industry, the investors—small and large—and the Securities Commission. I think we ought to let that develop before we jump to any conclusions that there is too close or too much of a "love-hate relationship"—to use the words of the member for Riverdale—between the industry and the commission.

I also want to say it is premature for a second reason, and that is that we now have on board a very fine new chairman of the Securities Commission. He is someone who comes, as the member for Riverdale well knows, from the streets, from practising law on the other side of the counter, having dealt with, as some would see it, the problems of dealing with the commission, having fought with the commission indeed over a period of years, knowing the administrative problems that have developed.

Mr. Foulds: That proves a love-hate relationship, does it not?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is in government and taking this job—not forever as he will be the first to admit—but he reminds me very regularly that he is on a short-term proposition to see just what he can do.

[8:45]

Mr. Breithaupt: Of course you may be too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Before he and I are both finished, we are quite seriously determined to make a very careful and detailed study of the entire regulatory process through the Ontario Securities Commission. In other words, I am quite prepared to accept the challenge put this evening by the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), and together with Mr. Baillie, I can assure him that we are doing that type of scrutiny to ensure that, in the member's words, the cost-benefit angle of it is assessed and noted; and that we are sure that the cost, as he would have it, of the entire process, is worth the benefit we get out of it.

I must say that I think the member, probably mistakenly, referred to the benefit as being the benefit to the industry, when in fact the Securities Commission is structured, and its rules and regulations are structured, to provide the major benefit, of course, to the consumer, the small investor who needs the protection of the registration procedure, and the continuous and timely disclosure procedures, in order to make fully-informed wise and careful business decisions. On that count, I have no hesitancy in saying that the cost of the current scheme is well worth the consumer protection that the Securities Commission and Bill 7 together provide.

The member for Riverdale noted, Mr. Speaker, that he thought it was strange that in this period of time a Conservative government would be bringing in legislation that creates an immense increase in the authority and power of the Ontario Securities Commission. I say that, quite the contrary, I think that the thrust of the new bill is to regularize procedures, to remove some of the arbitrary powers of the Ontario Securities Commission and to take some of the guesswork out of the entire industry. We want a situation where investors, businessmen, their lawyers and advisors, are not sitting in downtown Toronto trying to guess what is about to happen with the particular new issue they may have or the particular transaction they have in mind. Rather than having to guess, and risk guessing wrong, rather than have to come, cap in hand, to the Ontario Securities Commission on a regular basis, making a submission for permission to carry on a transaction, this bill would turn things around so that as much as possible in this very difficult field, the rules and regulations are codified. So that the industry, the people affected, can know what the ground rules are, as much as possible, and so that they may know that whatever the Securities Commission does it will be bound by a certain set of codified rules and there will be consistency out there and predictability. At this point in time the economic problems faced out on the marketplace, and in the economy at large, have been noted by the member for Kitchener, and one of the key problems continually identified by all areas of business and the economy at large, is the need for some consistency, some reliability, some predictability with regard to what rules are in place and what the future holds.

We think this is what is done in this piece of legislation, and we think that is a very important concept.

The member for Riverdale has reflected that he is concerned that this is treated by us as the end of the road. Indeed, I think I ought to share with the House some of the concerns that I and Mr. Baillie had—I hope that is not another globe falling from the top.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It's the light-shattering speech you made.

Mr. Breithaupt: Somebody doesn't like you.

Mr. Lawlor: It's your halo.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's not slipping again, is it?

The member has reflected that it is not the end of the road, and I wanted to go over what has happened in the last few months with Mr. Baillie and myself. When I first came on board in September, obviously we were just about the stage at which the Legislature was reconvening for the fall session, and I gave some careful consideration to commencing immediately with what was then known as Bill 30—obviously it would have had another number had we introduced it last fall—and trying to get it passed last fall. I consulted with Mr. Baillie—who hadn't yet joined the commission, he was to join on January 1 of this year—at that time we had rather extensive discussions as to whether we would go in-tact with what was then Bill 30 and worry about amending it and updating it at a later time in accordance with what he and I thought about the philosophical changes that ought to be made in the bill, presuming we could get them through cabinet; that is, to do it in a two- or even three-stage process.

After extensive discussion with Mr. Baillie, he and I reached the conclusion that it would be better to hold the bill off to the spring, until today, in order that we might carefully assess all of the matters referred to by the member for Kitchener this evening, and other matters which are reflected in the bill and in some of the amendments members have received this evening. We thought it important, precisely because we don't treat this as the end of the road, but precisely because we treat this as an ever-changing situation requiring careful and immediate attention and modernization on a day-to-day basis. Rather than being bound with a lot of sections that had first been written in 1972 and pretending we were doing the world a great service by finally passing that into law, we thought that as the bill had gone through a couple of changes since that time, it was now necessary to make sure that it reflected current economic conditions, current market concerns, current consumer concerns and current investors' problems. So we held it off to this spring.

I want to tell all members of the House that while I can't report for the processes carried on in drafting each of the predecessor bills to Bill 7, I want to tell them we have spent an extraordinary amount of time assessing each and every part of this bill. We are pleased with the way it is today, but we are also determined to continue to modernize it, check it out, see how it works, and not to treat this by any stretch of the imagination as the end of the road.

I think proof of that is in the series of amendments I sent across to my friends a couple of minutes ago. Rather than live with a bill, hope that we get it through and then clean it up next fall or next spring, we are determined to continue to follow our consultative process with the public at large, and the industry specifically, and to have the best possible bill we can have at each point in time. We have followed the process right through since the time I came on board, and Mr. Baillie came on board—

Mr. Foulds: What's with these nautical metaphors?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —of publishing in the weekly summaries all of our current thoughts so that everyone could know exactly where we were. We don't want to close off future options, and we are never going to be in a position in which we rule out any further amendments or changes just because of the hassle, as some would have it, of putting bills through the House. We are going to continue to make it relevant and modern.

Rather than take the time of the House this evening to respond to each and every comment made by the member for Riverdale, many of which will be more appropriately dealt with at estimates when the role and day-to-day activities of the commission ought more properly to be discussed, I did want to close by referring to a couple of things in passing. We want to emphasize at this stage that efforts are in progress now to expand the scope of self-regulation. Draft regulations regarding self-regulation in the area, for example, of portfolio managers' activities are currently outstanding.

The question of illegal payments was raised by the member for Riverdale. I want to tell him right here that that matter is currently under study by the Securities Commission.

Finally, there was some suggestion that the Securities Commission really is not on the ball, as it were, in terms of investigation. Needless to say, members of the police forces are in constant contact with our staff and our staff is in constant contact with securities administrations, provincial, federal and state administrations, throughout North America. There is close co-operation on a daily basis at that level. Whenever the assistance of local police forces and provincial police forces are required, they are very much available to us.

In closing, I want to refer back to a couple of remarks of the member for Kitchener, because I didn't acknowledge them and deal with them at the top of these remarks. He referred to the matter with regard to banks in smaller communities, and I want to assure him that we have been discussing this problem with the banking community—and these active discussions are under way now—to find a way in which banks can continue to play that important, effective role in smaller communities and still meet whatever the requirements of Bill 7 ultimately are going to be.

Finally, the member for Kitchener also raised some problems with regard to section 40 of the legislation. Right now, I can't say what we might propose at the committee stage, but we acknowledge that some problem may exist with regard to section 40. Discussions are currently under way between the members of the industry who would be affected and the commission in order to see if we can improve that section somewhat while retaining the amount of consumer protection the section is all about.

I might add that I appreciate the co-operation of the House, at least at second reading stage, in order finally to get this piece of securities legislation through second reading and on to the important committee stage.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing committee.

COMMODITY FUTURES ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 8, An Act to regulate Trading in Commodity Futures Contracts.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is a fairly straightforward and reasonable piece of legislation. There is no doubt that this newly developing type of security transaction requires some basic regulation. The bill before us is not unduly complicated and it reflects the changes which the commodities futures markets are now being seen to have within the Canadian context.

I am confident that as this market matures over the next decade or so there may be more revisions brought in. There may indeed be revisions that the minister will give to us tonight; I don't know. But at least this new kind of securities requirement is going to require some basic ground rules, and no doubt we will have bills over the years to come which will also deal with this particular subject as the practice becomes somewhat more refined.

We do share with the persons who are involved in this portion of the securities market a concern over the definition of the word "hedger," particularly in the light of the fact that the American authorities have had very complex legislation on this particular matter for years and they still seem to have definition problems with that word. Perhaps we may be able to come up with some sort of a better and more workable definition in committee; and for that, no doubt, we will have the opportunity of having comments from the members involved in this futures trading operation in the securities market.

There are certainly other mechanical changes which I need not refer to at this time and which can be dealt with at the committee stage. We no doubt will look forward to receiving input from various members of the industry when we have the opportunity to deal with this in the justice committee. We will certainly support the bill on second reading.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, we in this caucus are certainly not opposed to this bill on second reading. I don't pretend to have any special or particular knowledge in the field of commodities futures marketing, but I do, as always, find it eternally fascinating when any market is run as an auction market. [9:00]

The bill itself, so far as I can understand it, is modelled for practical purposes on the Securities Act which has just had second reading, and again is part of an immensely extended grant of jurisdiction to the Securities Commission. It's immense in the sense that, as I understand the bill, it will do about half a dozen things. It will require the registration of any commodities futures exchange as a condition precedent to carrying on business in Ontario and will provide for a continuing control over such an exchange when it is established, with the ultimate sanction in the commission of revoking that legislation. It will require the registration of any person that's a dealer or a salesman or floor trader as a condition precedent to trading in futures contracts. It will require the registration of any person as an adviser as a condition precedent to acting as an adviser in these markets.

Although it's worded as a prohibition, it will require all trades in contracts to be on a commodities futures exchange registered by the commission or recognized by the commission. It will provide for the recognition of commodities futures exchanges outside Ontario for trading purposes. It will require an acceptance of all the forms of contract as a condition precedent to being traded in Ontario and a continuing control over the form of those contracts. So, in a sense, it is modelled upon the Securities Act and is a very extensive grant of jurisdiction to the commission.

I would appreciate it if the minister, in the course of his remarks, would advise the assembly of the intentions of the industry and of the commission with respect to the establishment of the exchange in Ontario, both as to its physical location and the time at which it is anticipated that it will be established.

I had occasion to look at some of the remarks which were made by the president of the Chicago Board of Trade before the House committee on agriculture in the United States and the subcommittee on conservation and credit at the recent hearings. The establishment of that exchange in the United States was done on the basis of a sunset law and the commission has been required to justify its continued existence and its objectives before any further funds will be provided for it.

I did want to quote very briefly from those remarks, because it is clearly the desire of the Board of Trade in Chicago—which, after all, if it is not the oldest is certainly one of the oldest of the commodities exchanges in the United States. He believes that it's not an appropriate function for the Securities and Exchange Commission to regulate this particular industry but that there should be a separate, independent commission having exclusive jurisdiction with respect to that kind of business. In his remarks he said:

"First, let me reintroduce the Chicago Board of Trade. We are the largest of the 10 domestic commodities exchanges and 130 years old."

They say in parenthesis that this is from the evidence which he gave before that committee on February 22 and repeated in some substance when he reappeared before the committee towards the end of March.

"The 23 million futures contracts traded on the Chicago Board of Trade was 54 per cent of all futures volume in 1977. On some days trading in particular commodities occurred at a rate of five contracts per second; and of the eight most active commodities in 1977, six were Chicago Board of Trade contracts.

"About five million futures contracts of the 23 million traded on our exchange in 1977 were by the ordinary public trader. A similar part of the 1977 volume came from commercial companies hedging in our market.

"But let us not overstate the size of the futures business, as in reality it is a fairly small one, at least in terms of regulatory burden. There are only 10 operating futures exchanges today and all futures contracts, about 60, originate and must be traded there. Clearly the futures business is infinitely more centralized, more easily and inexpensively regulated, than an industry like securities.

"On the other hand, the regulatory task is sufficiently large, and so highly specialized, that it should not become a sideline for another regulatory agency—"

If my colleagues would let me have the attention of the minister, I would really appreciate it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If you'd let me have the attention of your colleagues for 30 seconds, they'll be through.

I'm all yours, thank you.

Mr. Renwick: I just want to repeat it because of the point which is being made.

"Let us not overstate the size of the futures business, as in reality it is a fairly small one, at least in terms of regulatory burden. There are only 10 operating futures exchanges today and all futures contracts, about 60, originate and must be traded there. Clearly the futures business is infinitely more centralized, more easily and inexpensively regulated, than an industry like securities.

"On the other hand, the regulatory task is sufficiently large, and so highly specialized, that it should not become a sideline for another regulatory agency, as the SEC has proposed. As the exchange most likely to gain from sound regulation, or to suffer from poor regulation, we offer some observations as well as some specific recommendations concerning the activities of the commission over the past three years."

Well, obviously, because of the study which was made, the choice was made by the government that this should become an adjunct of the Securities Commission. There is some indication that one of the commissioners will be a person knowledgeable in this field, but that in a very real sense it is the belief and intention of the government that this particular industry, distinguishable very clearly in its essential features from the securities industry, is going to be managed by a commission which does not purport, as I understand it, to have any specific expertise in the field.

I quite understand that the study director for the report of the interministerial committee on commodity futures trading, which was presented in 1975, is with the commission. I do understand that of the interministerial committee that was dealing with it, in their foreword to the report they indicate quite clearly that the only continuing knowledgeable person available to them was from the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

It is true that Dr. Mohide, from the Ministry of Natural Resources, was available for consultation from time to time, but in fact there is a very clear acknowledgement that the commission does not hold itself out to be knowledgeable in the field; and I would certainly ask the minister to comment again about the point which has been made by the president of the Chicago Board of Trade, that it should be a separate and independent commission.

The next point I would like the minister to perhaps comment on is why, if the ministry would decide that it could be a separate and distinct commission, and because the great bulk of the commodities futures traded on that exchange are going to be from the underlying agricultural market, why it is not possible in some way to relate that commission to the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, even though there are non-storable items which will be traded on that exchange because of the expanding nature of the market for future contracts.

Nevertheless, it is essentially a device for relating and keeping under control the present cash price and the future price of agricultural commodities from month to month. I would like to have some clear indication as to why it is necessary for the government to feel that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, through the securities and exchange commissions, believes that it should be involved in the regulation of the market-place, where the basic control and stabilization factor of agricultural prices appears to take place. And I emphasize again some of the sense I have that it may well be, as was the case in the United States until quite recently, that the Ministry of Agriculture and Food has an extremely important role to play in connection with such a commission.

Hon. W. Newman: We're allowed to look after the agricultural people so that can be balanced off from the process of this bill. No problem.

Mr. Renwick: No, I think the Minister of Agriculture and Food, as so often, misses the point. He sees that agriculture at the one end is the product of the farm and the food at the other end is what the consumer buys and in between is the process by which the prices are established for the basic commodities in the market-place.

I am not asking the government why the Minister of Agriculture and Food doesn't want the responsibility, I'm asking the government why it doesn't see fit to establish a separate, independent commission for the purposes of regulation of this particular industry, and establish it under the aegis of the most appropriate ministry, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

Hon. W. Newman: I appreciate that.

Mr. Renwick: That was the case in the United States until quite recently with the independent commission which has been established. There were substantial representations, again made just this year by the president of the Chicago Board of Trade Clearing Corporation, that from their point of view it should go back to the Department of Agriculture as the appropriate place for the regulation of that market to take place, despite the fact that there is trading in futures with respect to currencies and with respect to mortgages and all sorts of new gimmicks that have come into that market. But the basic underlying part of that marketplace is in fact the agricultural commodities from which and within which it had its origin.

I would hope, perhaps, that the Minister of Agriculture and Food would indicate why he doesn't want to have that responsibility, and I would like to have a clear explanation, which is not available as far as I could tell in the report of the interministerial committee, as to why the appropriate place is not under a different ministry rather than, if I may use the phrase, cluttering up the Ontario Securities Commission with this new responsibility so far as that particular market is concerned.

[9:15]

I was, of course, very interested to look at the figures as I tried to get some sense of the size of the market. The latest figures I have on the 10 commodity exchanges in the United States show something of the volume and the range of the commodities which are subject to trading in those exchanges: The Chicago Board of Trade, about 19 million contracts traded; the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and International Monetary Market, about six million; the Commodity Exchange Incorporated, about 5.5 million; the Mid-America Commodity Exchange, about 2.2 million; the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange about 1.175 million; the New York Cotton Exchange, the wool associates about 7,000-odd, and the citrus associates about 1,958, for a total of something over one million contracts. The Kansas City Board of Trade Incorporated about 688,000 contracts; the New York Mercantile Exchange about 640,000 contracts; the New York Cocoa Exchange about 334,000; the Minneapolis Grain Exchange about 228,000 and the Pacific Commodities Exchange about 1,512.

The total of all the exchanges in 1976 was some 37 million contracts. Presumably, from the evidence of the president of the Chicago Board of Trade in 1977, there was a substantially higher number of contracts in 1977.

It does seem to me that with the experience and the expertise in the United States there may well be a good reason to establish a separate commission. From the point of view of the adequacy of the marketplace to protect not only the person who enters that marketplace, but also to protect the ultimate interest of the consumer in the price of agricultural products, as they reach him through all of the various intermediaries in the agriculture business, at his table, perhaps the proper place is to repose the responsibility in the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

There are a number of other matters which undoubtedly we can deal with in the committee, but I would appreciate the minister's comments on those particular points which I have raised.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think it's fair to say that the essence of the member for Riverdale's remarks relates to the reasons for not following the route of having a separate apparatus entirely for the regulation of commodity futures contracts. I think a good point of beginning is indeed the Report of the Interministerial Committee on Commodity Futures Trading, 1975, to which the member referred. I'd refer him to page 85 of that report, paragraph 8.21. I think a reading of that section directly is relevant because it sets out quite straightforwardly the reasoning which went into that committee's deliberations, and which we have adopted and accepted.

Starting at 8.21, and we'll read all of it, it says: "Three briefs, including that of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada, recommended regulation of commodity futures trading through a separate Ontario commodity futures commission. The OSC itself recognized that the Securities Act was not the vehicle to bring this type of trading under regulation. However, it is questionable that the size and scope of the problem, particularly in the absence of a commodity exchange in Ontario, coupled with the fact that much of the trading is presently done by existing security dealers, warrants a completely new bureaucracy."

Paragraph 8.22 goes on: "We have concluded that the task of establishing and supervising this regulatory scheme and administering the new legislation should be given to the OSC, utilizing, so far as possible, their present staff. The proposed legislation involves a scheme of registration and supervision. Many of the potential registrants and advisers presently hold registration from the OSC as securities dealers and salesmen. The commission has in place administrative machinery which, it might be suggested in light of the existing securities market, has the capacity to undertake additional licensing tasks."

I go on then to paragraph 8.25.

Mr. Renwick: I take it that the government has accepted the report of the interministerial committee holus-bolus without any independent consideration of the problem.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My friend, the member for Riverdale, then presumes that because we have accepted paragraphs 8.21 and 8.22 and 8.25 out of a 127-page report it means we have accepted the entire report, holus-bolus.

Mr. Renwick: I am asking the minister is that what he has been telling us? Is that government policy?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Specifically, I am pointing out that we have accepted the reasoning set out very well in the three paragraphs I am referring to; and I am picking those three paragraphs specifically because those emphasize the pattern of reasoning which we have accepted and followed in our legislation.

It goes on, in paragraph 8.25: "To duplicate the administrative machinery available through the Ontario Securities Commission's existing registration program would seem wasteful. The commission and its director would be charged with the administration of the new Act . . ." and so on.

That is the essence of the case. We feel that in view of the scheme we feel is necessary at this time for the commodities futures contract business in Ontario, that the Ontario

Securities Commission is the best and least expensive and least bureaucratic type of system we need at the present time.

The member for Riverdale has referred to the United States' example. I should point out to the member that in the United States the scope of regulation over futures trading—and by the way cash transactions—is much greater than is intended in the bill before us this evening.

The sphere of regulation in Ontario, on the other hand, will be limited to areas in which the OSC has a vast store of experience, such as registration of dealers and advisers.

That is the thrust of the legislation tonight and that is the exact area in which the OSC has its confidence and experience.

Mr. Lawlor: You should develop a commodities market.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As to the regulation of the most important exchanges in the United States on which contracts are traded, this is left to the CFTC, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, a federal regulatory body in the United States.

Mr. Lawlor: I am only interested in one thing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The scheme we have opted for on the other hand avoids the establishment of yet another level of bureaucracy when we feel the job can be done by an existing body.

The member has also questioned why the Ministry of Agriculture and Food is not handling a commodities future exchange. First, the emphasis in this legislation, as is the case in our securities legislation, is protection for the small investor, the person who is going to go into the market and buy and trade these contracts. That is the proper role for the Securities Commission, whether it is dealing in the securities as we've always known it or commodity futures contracts.

Hedgers as defined in the legislation are the people who genuinely need the advantage of this sort of market in order to level out fluctuations in prices and to have some consistency and reliability with regard to what their future position is going to be in the very commodities and products which they grow and make their living from. They are properly the subject matter of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, whether it be through marketing boards or whatever. They are taken out of this legislation, hedgers are not in it. This legislation deals with those people, essentially, who are advising and participating in the speculative angle of commodities transactions.

Mr. Lawlor: You notice the minister has left. He thinks hedger is somebody who jumps over a hedge.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, he thinks a hedger is an opposition party which jumps on both sides of every issue.

Mr. Warner: Look who's talking. Claire Hoy's favourite.

Mr. Samis: That's not what Claire Hoy said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case we see our role as very important as the ministry, and as the vehicle—that is the Ontario Securities Commission—which has historically protected the small investor when he is dealing in securities as we've known them or an item called a commodity futures contract. We think that this is the appropriate point at which the regulation should occur.

I acknowledge and note the support, at this stage in any case, in this assembly for the need to regulate the commodity futures market.

I urge this bill upon the House as a very efficient, simple, easy mechanism to provide consumer protection, to look after the people who really need disclosure, full information and the protection of the Ontario Securities Commission type of scheme. We think it will work and we think it will do the job without another layer of unnecessary bureaucracy; indeed without the type of duplication that the member for Riverdale was concerned about in the previous bill, Bill 7, without the type of cost benefit concern that may emanate if we set up a separate regulatory scheme on top of the Securities Commission scheme. I urge this type of system on the House.

Motion agreed to.

Order for standing committee.

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 9, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, the Business Corporations Act is being amended in a number of ways.

First of all, all elements of investor disclosure, the matters of insider trading and reporting, and the other things which I referred to in my comments with respect to Bill 7, have been deleted from this Act and are now incorporated in that Bill 7.

There are some other changes, such as certain provisions with respect to contents of financial statements for corporations offering their shares to the public, which are as well deleted from the Business Corporations Act and will be incorporated into the Securities Act. We think certainly it is most appropriate to have those particular items all in the Securities Act, where we believe they belong; we certainly support the bill as a companion item to Bill 7.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, just as a complementary bill, we would support Bill 9.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, there is obviously nothing to add to this. It's a complementary piece of legislation. We'll deal with it in the package in committee.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing committee.

VITAL STATISTICS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 1, An Act to amend the Vital Statistics Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, we had a lengthy statement from the minister on February 28 when this bill was introduced. It is certainly an interesting item of legislation, particularly as it proposes to deal with several items that have developed concerning registration under the Vital Statistics Act.

The minister has commented with respect to the hyphenation of certain names. I presume there are persons who wish to do that. It is difficult at times to understand how people do get the names they receive; and as I had suggested to the minister, to think of some child having to suffer with a hyphenation such as Grossman-Breithaupt or Breithaupt-Grossman, would be almost cruel and unusual punishment I would think for any small innocent young person.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Unless they got Renwick in the next generation.

Mr. Warner: Perish the thought.

Mr. Cassidy: I've heard of a marriage of convenience, but it is happening between your parties right now.

Mr. Breithaupt: Well at least it doesn't have the incestuous relationships which are seen in the third party.

Mr. Renwick: It is like Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Cassidy: Right; Liberal Conservatives.

Mr. Breithaupt: In any event, Mr. Speaker, the legislation is, I suppose, useful with respect to those persons who wish to enter into this hyphenation situation.

Mr. Cassidy: A bit of a bastard union, I would say.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How about CCF?

Mr. Cassidy: Now you are talking.

Mr. Breithaupt: So far as the second item is concerned, with respecting to completing certain proposals as a result of medical changes, that certainly appears to be entirely in order and most proper.

We certainly will support the bill. I note that an amendment is to be placed by the New Democratic Party with respect to a change in the bill, and that also appears to be in order as a reasonable modification in wording to that particular section.

[9:30]

Mr. Davison: Bill 11 contains in it two separate and completely different sets of changes to the Vital Statistics Act. Section 1 of the amendment deals with the question of hyphenated surnames, as the Liberal critic has pointed out, and section 2 deals with changes resulting from transsexual surgery.

In regard to the first half of the bill, which resolves a problem with surnames, I would like to extend both my support and my party's support to the principle. The amendment arises to a large extent out of recommendations made by the office of the Ombudsman and, as such, stands as evidence of that office's capacity to influence government to act on behalf of citizens with problems.

In October 1976 an individual complained to the Ombudsman's office because the Registrar General had refused to register the name of a newborn child in the hyphenated surname of both the parents, with the name of the mother preceding the father. On page 533 of the Ombudsman's report, the complainant's status is described as follows:

"Upon her marriage in 1974, the complainant had chosen to retain her maiden name and incorporate it with her husband's surname preceded by a hyphen. In the ensuing year, her name had been recorded in that manner in the deed as co-owner of a house with her husband, on her social insurance card, driver's licence and transfer vehicle permit." Knowing the government's fine relationship with big business, I might have suspected that if it was good enough for Chargex it would be good enough for the government. But at the time, of course, it wasn't.

The child was born in January 1976 and the appropriate forms were submitted in March of the same year. The couple was refused in April and they secured the services of a lawyer and finally, in October of that year, of course, went to the Ombudsman's office. The then director of research at the Ombudsman's office reviewed the legislation in Ontario, the new legislation in Alberta, the debates of the Ontario Legislature and the Ontario Law Reform Commission report on changes of name.

In November 1976 the Deputy Registrar General was advised of the complaint and then the Registrar General informed the office of the Ombudsman that they would not object to a change in the legislation. Consequently, the Ombudsman recommended that an amendment be made so that the choice would be optional in Ontario.

In December 1976 the Deputy Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations advised that both he and the then minister agreed with the Ombudsman's recommendation and proposed to introduce legislation in the next session. The legislation, however, was not forthcoming.

On September 27, 1977, the Deputy Registrar General, Mr. N. A. Vetere, appeared before the select committee on the Ombudsman, and after questioning Mr. Vetere explained that the amendment had not gone forward saying that he felt it was a matter of priorities and that it was his understanding that the legislation had received priority from the ministry now and expected that the legislation would be coming forward in the upcoming session.

On November 25, 1977, the select committee tabled its third report with you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Legislature, recommending on pages 50 and 51 as follows: "The committee perceived some urgency to amend the Vital Statistics Act in this way. Accordingly it recommends that the minister table during this current session the amendment as described by the Deputy Registrar General to the committee."

By December 15 of the same year the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations had still not vet tabled the legislation. That night in the House, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, we debated the select committee's third report. The minister addressed certain comments to the recommendations of the select committee. If I might quote them from Hansard of the day on page 3060, he said: "Those reports raised issues of concern to my ministry and I wanted to inform the House of the action taken to date on these recommendations and to assure the hon. members of the House of the continued concern of my ministry. At various times, the ministry has made its position clear on the issues raised. I would like to summarize the commitments we have made to the recommendations outlined in both the recent third report and the earlier second report of the committee which I was pleased to sign, I might add. One major set of recommendations concerns changes to the Vital Statistics Act. My ministry has indicated it will proceed with amendments to this Act."

With the session scheduled to end in only a number of hours, the minister had rejected the select committee's recommendation that the amendment be introduced in that session. However, we all have the legislation before us now in spite of fact that the ministry committed itself to the legislation of December, 1976, and it has taken us until April, 1978, to get it into the House for debate. It's also hard to understand that delay because this particular amendment is a rather uncomplicated, half-page affair, so I really can't see why it has taken so long to bring it forward.

Now that we finally have it before us, I think it does show one thing that is quite useful, that is that the Ombudsman institution, the Ombudsman process, can work effectively in the province of Ontario when all parties make an effort to make sure it does so. Perhaps in the future, the process can be speeded up, though not all the speeding, it is clear, needs to be done at the Ombudsman's office. If this ministry and other ministries of the government would move a little more quickly and keep up with the commitments they freely make in terms of bringing in legislation, then the process can work even better for the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They can operate as efficiently as the Ombudsman.

Mr. Davison: The Ombudsman finished his investigation in remarkably short order and brought forward a remarkably good recommendation. If the ministry had worked with the same speed, we would have had this amendment before us, debated, voted on and passed some long time ago.

Mr. MacBeth: Maybe the House should move at the same speed.

Mr. Breithaupt: Even half an hour ago.

Mr. Warner: It is too reasonable.

Mr. Davison: The second half of this bill, sub-entitled Changes Resulting from Transsexual Surgery, is a matter on which I am a bit more concerned about the ministry and the minister's approach. This part of the amendment also arose in the Ombudsman's office and from the Ombudsman's work. It is a case which has evidenced even greater delay and that has caused much more severe and direct hardship to a rather small number of the people in our province.

If I might, as I think it is important, I would like to take some small amount of time to outline the events involved in this issue, as I recall them. The question personally came to my attention only in January, 1977, when I read the Ombudsman's first report, where it is referenced as a complaint, complaint 31 on pages 403 and 494. This particular man was trying to get a birth certificate which would show his sex as it had been changed by surgery. The individual had been successful in having his name legally changed from a female name to a male name but had been unable to obtain the birth certificate that he sought.

I imagine that all members of the House can quite easily see the difficulty that not obtaining that proper birth certificate presented to the particular individual involved. At the time of the Ombudsman's report, the Ombudsman pointed out that four provinces in Canada had already moved forward with legislation that permitted these changes in birth certificates. The Ombudsman's findings were as follows:

"We concluded that since there was no provision in the Vital Statistics Act which would allow a change in the sex designation on the complainant's birth certificate to bring it into conformity with his present sexual status, the ministry had acted properly and in accordance with the law when it refused the complainant's request. However, in our opinion, it was apparent that the decision not to change the sex designation on the birth certificate was made in accordance with the law or Act that, in the words of section 22(1)(b) of the Ombudsman's Act, was unreasonable, unjust, oppressive or improperly discriminatory."

The Deputy Registrar General and the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, at that time agreed to the suggestion of amendment being put forward by the Ombudsman's office and the Ombudsman then took it upon himself to write to the Deputy Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. The deputy minister, by return mail, informed the Ombudsman's office that a policy submission was being prepared for the justice policy field, and if approved an amendment would be drafted. These events took place prior to the end of the year 1976.

During the early months of 1977, the select committee on the Ombudsman looked into this matter. The Deputy Registrar General informed the committee that there was at present proposed legislation within the ministry providing for sex designation changes by a person on application, accompanied by proof from a duly qualified medical practitioner that the sex change operation procedures had in fact been successfully completed. The legislation is the bill we of course now have, more than a year later, before us in the House.

On March 28, 1977, the select committee on the Ombudsman reported the following recommendation to this Legislature in this matter:

"The committee therefore recommends that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations introduce legislation as soon as possible to amend the Vital Statistics Act to provide authority to the Registrar General to make such a sex designation change containing the appropriate safeguards to ensure that the effect of the sex designation change not be retrospective."

On July 14, the Ombudsman submitted to the Speaker, and to the assembly, his second annual report. The Ombudsman took that opportunity, because he thought, I guess, that it was a very important and serious matter, to further reference developments in the case. In his report, he quoted in total from his earlier report and he quoted the full comments of the select committee. He then concluded his restatement by saying that:

"As of this report there has been no change in the legislation to the Vital Statistics Act, and the fact that there has not is working a continuing hardship on the complainant mentioned above because he wishes to marry but is prevented from doing so until the necessary amendment is presented to the Legislature and passed."

As members will recall, the select committee had, in March asked the minister to introduce legislation as soon as possible, and therefore when the committee met again in September to consider the Ombudsman's second report, the matter of the Ombudsman's recommendation and the committee's recommendation again come up for debate and consideration in the select committee on the Ombudsman.

On September 28, 1977, Mr. Vetere again appeared before the committee, on behalf of the ministry. Ms. Cooper appeared before the committee on behalf of the Ombudsman's office. At that point, she again informed the committee of the individual's further problem as he was trying to get married and could not because of the sex designation on his birth certificate. The Ombudsman's office had not considered provisions of the Marriage Act other than that of the sex designation on the birth certificate, and Ms.

Cooper said that there may be further legal problems which would have to be dealt with. [9:45]

Mr. Vetere reported that it was intended to bring the amendment forward at the upcoming fall session which, by the way, also did not happen. This perhaps was because of a conflict in attitudes on the issue between certain people and the minister and the then Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, because on July 27, 1977, the then minister had written to the hon member for Carleton East, who had been involved in the original complaint—

If I might, Mr. Speaker, it's a rather short letter, and I would like to read it into the record of this debate.

Mr. Lawlor: You know it takes so long you could change their mind faster than their sex.

Mr. Nixon: Which are you working on?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Or for your member to make his point.

Mr. Davison: It's addressed to Ms. Evelyn Gigantes, MPP. It reads:

"Thank you for your letter of July 20 in connection with our proposal to amend the Vital Statistics Act to provide for recognition that an individual has undergone transsexual surgery. The legislation is ready for introduction. Scheduling is of course a matter for the government and will depend greatly on the agreement between the House leaders as to the time allotted for the legislation in the fall session. I understand that only 25 hours will be set aside for the debate on legislation. If that is the case, it is hardly likely that other higher-priority legislation will be set aside in favour of minor amendments to the Vital Statistics Act. Your comments would be appreciated."

Mr. Vetere, still on September 28, 1977, and again at the request of the committee members, outlined the situation in regard to the legislation from the ministry's point of view. He was asked if the ministry had given any thought to whether it would be possible for the person concerned to marry after the sex designation on the birth certificate had been changed. The Ombudsman, in his second report, had put forward the information that in this particular case, from which the recommendation had arisen, the individual did, in fact, want a new birth certificate so as to be able to be married.

Mr. Vetere replied that the position of the ministry was that if they were aware that an individual who had had a sex designation change was making an application for a marriage licence, they would refuse the licence.

I can recall that at least myself, and I think most or all of the members on the committee, were shocked or at least quite surprised by the information as it was put forward by Mr. Vetere, because in the entire process this was the first we had heard of this position on behalf of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Vetere, under rather close questioning, said that the change in sex designation was simply to accommodate the needs of the person for documentation, but that it was impossible for the person to legally marry as the change was considered to be anatomical but not biological.

I and other members of the committee argued that there was a substantial change not being recognized by the ministry, that in effect a third sexual category of people in Ontario would be created by the provision of these proposed changes to the Vital Statistics Act.

These people, in this third sexual category in Ontario would not be allowed to marry among themselves, would not be allowed to marry women and would not be allowed to marry men. In short they would not be allowed to marry and in that sense they would be denied some of what I consider to be basic human rights in our society.

Therefore, in my opinion, the proposed legislation did not either meet the needs or solve the problems of the people concerned and in the process limited their rights.

On November 25, 1977, the select committee in its report to this House wrote and recommended as follows:

"The Deputy Registrar General informed the committee that legislation satisfying the committee's recommendations and the concerns of the Ombudsman, would be tabled in the current session of the Legislature. However, the ministry does not intend the legislation to grant a person the status to marry in any circumstances. In the committee's opinion, this legislation will create an undesirable result by establishing a third category of individuals who, at least in the area of marriage, have no status in law. The committee has not considered any further ramifications of this legislative change. However, it is certain that the legislation will place the legal status of such persons in doubt in other areas.

"Accordingly, this committee recommends that the minister introduce legislation clarifying and defining the status of persons affected by the sex designation change so as to avoid the creation of a third category of persons in the province of Ontario."

On December 15, 1977, the Legislature, as I have said earlier, debated that select committee's report and that particular recommendation of the select committee, and the minister's response is found on page 3060 of the Hansard from December 15, 1977. If I may I'll partially quote areas that I have already quoted, so that we can get the full sense of the minister's response; it's rather brief:

"At various times the ministry has made its position clear on the issues raised. I would like to summarize the commitments we have made to the recommendations outlined in both the recent third report and earlier second report of the committee." Which I was pleased to sign on my part.

"One major set of recommendations concerns changes in the Vital Statistics Act. My ministry has indicated it will proceed with amendments to the Act to allow for sex designation changes."

A bit further down the page we find this sentence from the hon. minister, "We feel this flexibility will deal with the concerns raised by the report and will assist individuals in having the records they desire."

I thought that the minister had said that the legislation would deal with the concerns raised by the report. But having had some experience in this House, I knew that things are not always as they sound or seem. A short time later that evening, when I was participating in the debate, I asked the minister for clarification, or what I in my mind considered clarification. I'd like to read that short exchange from Hansard of that night, from page 3066:

"Mr. Davison: In regard to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, I hope the minister when he responded favourably to recommendation No. 18 understood the committee's concern about the proposed legislation and the possible consequences of creating a third category of people in the province of Ontario when he responded favourably. I hope he responded with that in mind." The record of that night then shows the Hon. Mr. Grossman saying, "Have we ever let you down before?"

Mr. Foulds: Every time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Four bills tonight; have we ever let you down?

Mr. Davison: Have they ever done anything right?

Mr. Davison: "Have we ever let you down before?" I guess in my lack of experience, I understood that to mean that the minister understood the recommendation of the committee and agreed, and was not going to let us down. I didn't think at the time that it would have been possible that the minister may have been involved in some kind of gamesmanship—

Mr. Davidson: No sensitivity.

Mr. Davison: —twisted or otherwise. To this day, although I have often disagreed with the minister, I have always found him to be a decent human being who has always been, with me at least, straightforward and strictly honest—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Have I ever let you down?

Mr. Davison: Now we have Bill 11 before us; and I really wonder what all that work was worth and all that talk was worth and about, in the past several months in regard at least to this aspect of the bill. It was to me as if they had never existed.

In my opinion, this bill should not be before this House in its present form. All things considered, the minister should not put before this House this amendment to the Vital Statistics Act containing this second section. While I'm going to support it on second reading, when this bill, and particularly this part of the bill, goes to the committee stage, I will at the very least make sure, as well as I am able, that the minister in all fairness to the recommendations of the select committee will do something to clarify and define the status of people affected by sex designation changes.

I'm quite concerned about this matter. I have given notice of an intention to move two amendments to the bill which I believe, without the benefit of a constitutional lawyer or an historian on common law, may—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You should have asked Renwick; he'd tell you.

Mr. Davison: I don't want to engage in a discussion with the minister. My opinion of his credibility has suffered somewhat in the past 24 hours.

Mr. Swart: It was pretty low before that.

Mr. Davison: In my opinion, those amendments to this bill will, if they do not solve the problem for the people who will now find themselves in this unfortunate position, at least be a recognition on the part of this House that those people do in fact have a real problem and that some members in the House aren't interested in playing games with them.

As chairman of the select committee of the Ombudsman, I don't think that this case shows a particularly useful relationship between a ministry of the government, the Ombudsman's office and a select committee of this Legislature. I think this is an example that we should not be very quick to follow and it's an example of behaviour I would personally not like to see again.

I think the minister in this case has shown an unfortunate attitude towards the select committee. I think perhaps he misunderstands the way in which the people of Ontario will best be served by an Ombudsman institution that works with the Ombudsman, the committee, the Legislature, the ministry or the government agency to give people in this province the kind of Ombudsman institution they have every right to deserve and expect.

As an individual member of the House I am offended by the games-playing of the minister. Finally, just as a man and as a member of the human race, there are times when we're saddened and sorrowed by some people's disregard for human rights. This, Mr. Speaker, is one of those times.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to participate in the debate? If not, the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that the member would have been a little more thoughtful as he wrapped himself in purity on this piece of legislation. The relationship between the member and myself —up until right now, as a matter of fact, I didn't become disillusioned with him in the last 24 hours but just in the last few minutes —has been pretty good, but when he gets into the junk that he got into in the last few minutes with regard to his corner on the market with regard to human dignity, virtue and human decency, that is, I think, where I became a little bit offended by his remarks.

He may suggest that we are playing games with this legislation. Of course he knows that is not true, he was in the House for the estimates last fall, he knew that the dialogue was going on and that it was a general exchange of views with regard—really it was a question asked whether we were going ahead with the legislation, and I responded.

He may have refined what he now understands to be the full scope of the Ombudsman committee's recommendation in one way and more completely, after he has obviously had a chat with some people, than he did last December, but that wasn't my problem. My problem was that I was always aware of the constitutional powers that the province has and doesn't have, and where the common law goes and where it doesn't go, and what the role of the Registrar General is. No one ever held out anything different to the member.

He can talk about the delays in bringing in this legislation; and you know, Mr. Speaker, that is fair politics, he can play that game and I am not going to tell him that the election that his party and the other party caused last spring held up the legislation.

Mr. Swart: Who caused? That is the end of your credibility.

Mr. Renwick: You were doing all right until then.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Far be it from me.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are out of your cotton-picking mind.

Mr. Foulds: You just blew it, Larry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But I do think it is fair with regard to the role of my predecessor in the saga that the member felt obliged to roll out should be pointed out; and that is that he, like a lot of ministers on this side of the House, was faced with some problems with regard to timing.

Obviously last spring there was that election; whoever caused it there was an election—

Mr. Makarchuk: Now you are backing off.

Mr. Rotenberg: We know who caused it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—therefore, it couldn't have been legislated last spring, I don't care whose fault it was.

Mr. Makarchuk: It cost $5 million to get you elected, so shut up.

Mr. Swart: Could have started the fall session a month earlier.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And to move you over there.

Okay, look, I don't care whose fault it was last spring. The fact was there couldn't be legislation last spring, we didn't sit long enough.

Last fall my predecessor quite properly pointed out the problems in estimates, and my House leader, together with the other House leaders, co-operated in providing a maximum amount of time for estimates; no question about it. One of the functions of that decision is that some legislation simply had to be put over. That is the pure truth and those are the facts of the matter.

This happens to be one piece of legislation that was put over, and I have no apologies to make for that. I wish all of my legislation could have been dealt with last fall: indeed where I did see a need that couldn't wait another day, such as the conditional amendment, I did get that through last fall, with the co-operation of the opposition. Where I saw a need for the tax discounters, I did get that through last fall, with the co-operation of the opposition.

I don't have co-operation on the Vital Statistics Act, and members opposite are quite entitled to their point of view. The fact is that one of the decisions made when the opposition wants a lot of estimates hours, this government agrees to that request, is that some legislation doesn't make it.

Mr. Swart: The government could have started the fall session a month earlier.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Members can argue that amounts to political gamesmanship, and that is part of the political process, and they are entitled to make that argument. I, for my sake, just want to read into the record the facts of last year so that my predecessor's role in this can be shown and mine can be shown.

Mr. Makarchuk: The matter wasn't even raised at the House leaders' meeting. Don't give us that sanctimonious claptrap.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Brantford may have some more patience than I, in listening to the attempts of the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. Davison) to bootlick the Ombudsman to show that this legislation, like everything else we do, is purely an outgrowth of the Ombudsman's responsibilities and what he says. I sat here and listened to it, and so be it; if he does a really good job, maybe he can become his driver by next summer. But I don't care; he can do that role, he can play that number, I don't care.

But, Mr. Speaker, where the member moves on to suggesting that we take this matter lightly, that we don't care about the implications, that we don't care about the human dignity elements of this legislation, that is where I draw the line. All the other numbers he has been playing on us tonight are the usual political things, and I forgive him for that; that is the way he sees his role, okay.

Mr. Foulds: You are doing quite a number yourself, Larry, quite a number.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He can do the Ombudsman number, he can do the gamesmanship's number, he can do the House time number, I don't care.

Mr. Swart: Who do you think you are? God, to forgive him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, you are holier-than-thou over there. The idea that only the member for Hamilton Centre or whatever it is cares about the human rights involved in this issue—

Mr. Nixon: Oh, you are holy too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —I just want to reject totally and completely. If he had stopped for one second in his knee-jerk desire to make an amendment to any piece of legislation that comes out of this government and chatted for a moment with his adviser, or I would have hoped his adviser, the member for Riverdale, he perhaps would have got a bit of an education into the BNA Act. The BNA Act specifically reserves to the federal government, in section 91, subsection 26, the subject of marriage and divorce. Nothing I can do in my capacity as Registrar General can change that. I can't permit people to marry, I can't forbid them from marrying. All we do is the registration aspect which shows what the registration is. This legislation now permits someone to go in and change the registration. But changing the registration in my ministry, through the Registrar General—I emphasize the word registrar—does not by itself change the legal status of the person making that change.

The common law prevails here. The federal government has seen fit not to legislate on top of the common law to change the situation. There has been litigation resulting from matters such as this, litigation which has confirmed that in the present situation it is up to the courts in most cases to decide whether the change that has been gone through has amounted to a valid change in legal status under the common law. I can't and my Registrar General can't do anything that changes that situation. He registers a piece of information, and whether one carries around a blue card signed by Norm Vetere and Larry Grossman saying one is of whatever sex one has been able to obtain registration for doesn't help one when one goes to get married.

I can't make an amendment to the Vital Statistics Act that helps one do that. I can't amend any other Acts that I have that would help one do that. I never said I could and my predecessor never said he could.

Mr. Lawlor: You can work on the solemnization of marriage under the Marriage Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is the plain, simple fact of the matter. It is reserved under section 91 subsection 26 of the BNA Act.

Mr. Lawlor: It is not quite so simple.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member for Lakeshore will calm down and speak to the member for Riverdale, who is really silent in this debate, he'll find out that that consistently constitutionally pure member—

Mr. Lawlor: If you would just stop talking for a few minutes and listen for a while.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —would have no part of this discussion on his side of this argument.

Mr. Foulds: Nobody is speaking on your side except you.

Mr. Rotenberg: We are with him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and I know he will back me up on constitutional arguments.

Mr. Foulds: You are all alone.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And he rarely, if ever, loses.

Mr. Foulds: But when he loses he loses big.

Mr. Swart: When he loses he really goes down hard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawlor: Don't get carried away.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The bigger they are, the harder they fall. In any case, the point is that our interpretation, very strongly backed up by the common law, by case law and by the BNA Act, indicates there is nothing I can do to change the situation. We never held out we could. Whether all of my personal legal background, the government's legal background and the history of this case and all the resources I have referred to—and I know I have the member for Riverdale on my side as well—

Mr. Foulds: No, you don't.

Mr. Lawlor: Just because he is quiet doesn't mean he agrees.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And when is he ever quiet? Where we are all right or all wrong is not—

Mr. Foulds: Even you are known to be quiet on occasion.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You two can't get through to the middle of that sandwich to say anything. Whether we are all right or wrong is academic.

Mr. Foulds: That is a very bad image, a very bad analogy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He feels that way I am sure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sure he is very happy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. minister address the Chair?

Mr. Foulds: You were doing better on the nautical metaphors when we were on the Securities Act an hour or so ago.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Whether we are all right or all wrong, Mr. Speaker, is not the point I wish to make.

Mr. Foulds: That's true, you're all wet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's a sincere, consistent, understanding and legal opinion we have held and we have never varied from that. To suggest that because that very strong legal position is held and never been wavered from we suddenly don't care about the human rights or dignities or concerns involved in this legislation doesn't lie well in the mouth of the member for Hamilton Centre. I reject it entirely and completely.

It's a totally different story than to disagree and to have a fundamental understanding of the BNA Act and the difference of jurisdictions and powers that lie in us, and in my Registrar General who's our registrar. That's a totally different situation and I'll sit here on many occasions and listen to the opposition suggest that this government is unfeeling, that it doesn't care—all sorts of allegations like that happen daily in the course of political exchange—

Mr. Davidson: No sensitivity at all.

Mr. Lawlor: Even worse than that. You hide behind the BNA Act.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and we understand that, because we have even been known to accuse the opposition of those same faults.

Mr. Lawlor: More devious than ever.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But when it comes to a sensitive matter such as the one we're discussing tonight, I'm just not going to treat it as in the same area of political give and take, because it isn't. We could have let this matter lie if we didn't care about it, suffer through a couple more reports from the Ombudsman committee—whatever. But we cared about it and we brought it forward and went as far as we are able to go within the BNA Act, within the common law restrictions and everything else.

This isn't one of those times when the opposition ought to be posturing, wrapping themselves in the flag of civil liberties, human rights and human dignity. We all care about it. I respect the member for Hamilton Centre's interpretation, mistaken as it may be, and I respect his concern for the issue. I really do. We're entitled to the same respect from him though, and that has nothing to do with legal interpretations one twit.

Ordered for standing committee.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, if there is a minor amendment to be placed with respect to this bill, could it not go to committee stage in the House? We're certainly agreed to it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer it to go to the committee on justice. Perhaps the member for Hamilton Centre wishes to look carefully at the constitutionality of it and perhaps withdraw it. He may not, but I'd like to give him that opportunity.

MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Henderson moved second reading of Bill 31, An Act to amend the Ministry of Government Services Act.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to regularize the procedure that's presently being carried out by the Ministry of Government Services.

Section 16 of the existing Ministry of Government Services Act requires delegation of the minister's powers under the Act to be in writing and approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. As a simple example, the minister cannot legally instruct his secretary to purchase for his use a pen or stationery article unless the delegation of the minister's power is by order in council.

During the year the Ministry of Government Services makes thousands of purchases of commodities and services for the needs of the Ministry of Government Services and other ministries as follows:

1. In the fiscal year April 1, 1977, to March 31, 1978, one branch will have issued 11,000 purchase orders in respect of commodities like furniture, furnishings, clothing, police uniforms, business machines, paper and envelopes.

In the printing service division, for the consolidation of statutes, regulations, budget books, and other ministry publications within the Ministry of Government Services and other ministries in 1977-78, purchase orders issued: 6,000 for print, ink, paper, plates and other articles; 1,000 for duplications; 3,000 for government stationery.

In the property management branch, in the fiscal year 1977-78, 24,500 purchase orders were issued by this branch for building materials, moving, repair and maintenance services.

[10:15]

In the same fiscal year, the Toronto head office of this branch arranged 339 contracts—for example, fuel oil, moving and others—of which 207 were signed by the minister and 132 by other officers of the branch. In addition, there are contract awards by regional offices of the branch. In a year's time, the minister would need to sign approximately 40,000 contracts varying from a few cents to several hundred dollars.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the bill is to regularize the present procedure that is being carried out.

Mr. Ruston: We would have no objection to this bill, Mr. Speaker. From what I gather, it will kind of streamline some of the work and allow the minister or the deputy minister to delegate authority to sign contracts and so forth.

We all know, of course, that the minister is still responsible for whatever happens in his ministry, and this is a known fact in all government legislation. I think I read in the past year or so that some minister in Ottawa tried to avoid some responsibility for someone in his ministry, but the fact remains that the minister as an elected official is still responsible.

Mr. Makarchuk: They're trying to avoid responsibility for the whole country.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Be nice now, Mac.

Mr. Ruston: That's probably one advantage that our democratic system has over the system in the United States, where the officials appointed by the President to his cabinet are not elected and yet they have the authority granted to them to conduct the business of the day. Our advantage, of course, is that those officials must be elected. I suppose our system is a little more political and may at times have some disadvantages, but I think it is a pretty good safeguard in our democratic system.

I do notice that a few things have been added in the bill. One of them, in section 1(2)(iii), relates to "collecting fees fixed by the minister for parking in any area set aside for parking in, on or under any public work, and the minister may fix such fees . . ." In the past, they have made some arrangement for this under orders in council, if I am not mistaken.

The proposed change allows the minister to contract out parking areas if he so wishes and to approve the fees that may be charged in these parking areas. I suppose it could have an effect on areas where parking is or may be supplied for employees in some public buildings but, with the parking situation as it is in many cities, I think I would have no objection to this provision. If it includes employees, I am sure they have the bargaining power to make their agreements and so forth, so I have no objection to this part being added to the bill.

There is some very minor wording in section 6 of the present Act and, to compare it to subsection 1 of the new bill, it reads: "It is the responsibility of the minister and he has power, in accordance with section 8, to acquire, lease and dispose of public works . . ." In the present Act, it is the responsibility of the minister and he has the power, so this is just a little tidying up in this case. We will support the bill.

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, this in all probability is going to be one of the most important bills that comes before this session of the Legislature. I say that not because of the content of the bill itself but because it is the first bill, I believe, that has been presented by the new Minister of Government Services. Because of that, the importance becomes very obvious.

Mr. Foulds: It may be the last.

Mr. Makarchuk: It must be a sizeable bill because the minister isn't.

Mr. Belanger: Great man, great minister.

Mr. Davidson: We, in this party, have had a very serious debate about this bill, believe it or not. There were several things in it that gave us great cause for concern and we had to sit down and debate it most seriously before we could decide that we would support it on second reading. I say this because there are certain sections of this bill that do create serious doubts in the minds of people. What we are doing, even though it is under the direction of the minister and his deputy minister, is giving to clerks and servants of the ministry the right to negotiate and sign contracts.

I had to look at that very seriously and I sought some very expert advice as to whether or not this, in any way, could lead to patronage or pork-barrelling. I'm quite sure the minister is well aware of those terms, being one of the politicians from the old school.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Lorne Henderson would never do that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Never heard that term before.

Mr. Davidson: For that matter, I'm still not clear in my mind as to whether or not it could lead to pork-barrelling and patronage. I could very well see that even though the minister does have to administer the order, some clerk in some office away up there in the northern part of the province who is the only representative of your ministry may negotiate a contract with someone in his given area and phone the minister and say: "I've got a good deal, boss; here it is; can I have your authority to sign it?"

The minister, not even knowing who he or she is talking about, may very well say, "Yes, it sounds good, go ahead, sign the agreement. I give you the authority to do so."

Mr. Foulds: And what's his party affiliation?

Mr. Davidson: It does lead one to think that perhaps this bill and the amendments that are being made to the existing legislation could be abused. I'm not suggesting that it would be, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite sure that knowing the minister, and in his new position, he would look at every item that comes before him with the greatest of sincerity and diligence and would not allow that kind of thing to happen if he could, in any way, possibly get around it. But the possibility does exist and it was one of the things that caused us a great deal of concern in consideration of this bill.

We did seek some expert advice on the matter and they assured us that even if that was the case and that lonely little clerk up there in northern Ontario got found out, the responsibility would fall back on either the minister's shoulders or those of his deputy minister—

Mr. Makarchuk: And they are broad shoulders.

Mr. Davidson: Recognizing the fact that the minister has the capability of handling that kind of situation, we thought, "Okay, let's allow that part of it to go through."

There are other things in this bill that we have given further consideration to. Section 1(2)(a) speaks to "design, construct, renovate, service, maintain, repair, furnish, equip, manage and administer premises, buildings, and structures that are public works." We had to look at that very closely because we were thinking about this building itself. I'm quite sure that this building is one that all of the people in Ontario are very much concerned about. Certain sections of this building fall under the control of this ministry while others are in the hands of the Speaker—

Mr. Foulds: They should all be in the hands of the Speaker.

Mr. Davidson:—and we were almost prepared to come to the minister and negotiate some kind of a deal whereby he would turn his portion of the building over to the Speaker in order for us to give the minister support on second reading. As a matter of fact, I might even take that into consideration at this moment. If this building should be in anyone's hands it should be in the hands of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: In fact, we are going to move an amendment to that effect.

Mr. Davidson: But having had a few moments to discuss the matter with the minister privately, I'm quite sure he is of the same opinion. I'm sure he would far rather have the responsibility taken away from himself and placed in the hands of the Speaker, because the minister would take the hassle for all the other 124 members in this House when that problem arises. I am quite sure the minister would gladly sign an order tomorrow, if necessary, turning the building over to the Speaker, which is the proper place for it to be.

We considered that kind of a negotiation but, knowing the minister and knowing full well his capacity as minister and his own personal feelings on the matter, we thought that would come about without having to negotiate that kind of a deal. We are quite sure that the minister in his capacity as minister will make sure that that does happen. If not, we will be after him again, let me assure him. But overall, in looking at it, it is in fact an excellent piece of legislation that amends the existing Act.

The minister says it regulates the existing legislation. I say it legitimizes something that his ministry has been doing outside of the law.

Mr. Foulds: Illegally.

Mr. Davidson: The ministry has been allowing clerks and servants to sign contracts and documents, though certainly under the minister's control or under the control of his deputy minister. The minister has been allowing that to happen. I don't lay the blame on him because he is the first minister who has had the foresight to recognize that the government was operating outside of the law and has brought in a piece of legislation to legalize it.

Interjections.

Mr. Davidson: Having said that, we in this party support this bill on second reading. If we find any serious defects in it, we will reserve the right to raise those on third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere seems to want to comment.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Resign.

Mr. Warner: Do you have a better offer? Is that what you said?

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: I might consider it but the people in Scarborough-Ellesmere would be deeply disappointed.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Oh, no, they would be entirely elated.

Mr. Warner: Along with my colleague from Cambridge, I would appreciate very much some comments from the minister with respect to section 1(2)(a) and how that applies to this building.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Sit down and let him comment then.

Mr. Warner: The Speaker may be interested to know that some members of this assembly take the matter of jurisdiction for the building to be quite a serious one and an important matter.

Hon. Mr. Maec: That is not part of the principle of the bill.

Mr. Warner: In fact, this morning in the members' services committee there was a motion that the building be turned over to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rotenberg: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Makarchuk: The original motion was to condemn it.

Mr. Rotenberg: The building or the Speaker?

Mr. Makarchuk: The minister.

Mr. Warner: I will wait.

An hon. member: They are going to have the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) tear it down like the Don Jail.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have any further comments?

Mr. Warner: Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker, and I intend to make them when the chamber is in a more sombre mood.

Mr. Nixon: You have every right to speak but we don't have to listen.

Mr. Foulds: We have at least six more speakers lined up. You don't have to worry.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You've got to be kidding.

Mr. Warner: For a couple of reasons, I believe this bill should end up going to committee and it may be necessary to amend part of the bill. It certainly needs to go to committee and we need some explanations.

As I began to say, the motion that was put forward this morning in the members' services committee, which deals directly with this, was that the entire building should be turned over to Mr. Speaker. That motion was tabled for one week.

What applies to the building is section 1(2)(a) which is pretty explicit in what can be done to those sections of this building which at present come under Government Services. What is disturbing to some members of the assembly, and certainly to myself, is that those kinds of changes could take place irrespective of whatever wishes the Speaker has for the portions of the building which come under his responsibility—

[10:30]

Mr. Nixon: What section is this in?

Mr. Warner: —and that surely would not be in the interests of the members of this assembly.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Which section?

Mr. Warner: The other part of the bill which concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is section 2. I really think we need a clear explanation as to the lines of authority that are going to be followed. It's rather vague: "Officers, clerks and servants of the ministry—"

Mr. Speaker: It being 10:30, would the hon. member care to move the adjournment of the debate?

On motion by Mr. Warner the debate was adjourned.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is the most productive thing I have heard the member say today.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Grossman, the House adjourned at 10:31 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 1978

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

BEEF CALF INCOME STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. W. Newman: I am pleased to announce that details of the 1978 beef calf income stabilization program have been finalized for the coming year. Last year the program paid out $12.1 million to 14,400 producers. Ontario beef calf operators registered nearly 350,000 cows in the plan. This year the support price for calves will be 51.5 cents per pound, as it was last year. The enrolment fee per cow remains the same at $8. Enrolment forms will be mailed this month to producers who participated in the 1977 program. Additional copies will be available from the offices of the agricultural representatives throughout the province.

There was a federal beef calf stabilization plan last year, but it seems very unlikely there will be a federal plan in 1978. Ontario's beef calf income stabilization program is now four years old. It has proven extremely successful in evening out the income of our producers and is helping to ensure a viable beef industry in this province.

ORAL QUESTIONS

INCO VACATION PLAN

Mr. Nixon: I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in her capacity as a member of the special cabinet committee dealing with the short-term and long-term problems in Sudbury connected with the nickel industry.

Was she aware that Inco Metals was going to announce an extension of the summer vacation of two weeks, which is going to mean a further loss of $20 million from the pay packages of the regular employees? Was there nothing that either she or her cabinet colleagues or this special cabinet committee could have done to mitigate this further serious loss of income?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is my understanding from the information which I have been given by the company that there will indeed be a minimal loss of income during the extension of the two-week vacation. The plan which Inco has, related to the increased vacation pay availability for Inco staff members, is one that can be utilized by almost all of those who will be given the extra two weeks' extension and they will be receiving full pay for the extra two weeks of vacation if they choose to take it.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Does the minister mean that the union officials are incorrect when they predict there will be a $20-million loss in pay and that there is an alternative for those people who will have their vacation extended by two weeks so that they will not be losing any money? Since you permit only one supplementary in this connection, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would indicate the status of the special cabinet committee dealing with these matters?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The hon. member is correct in his assumption that those individuals will have vacation pay available to them and the amounts of money which were announced as potential losses for the community, I think, are grossly exaggerated at this time.

Mr. Wildman: The whole thing is gross.

Hon. B. Stephenson: If all of the steelworkers who are capable of achieving this extra two weeks' pay at vacation time do not take advantage of it, then the loss to the community may be $20 million, but if most of them do take advantage of it it will be very much less than that.

Mr. Nixon: Where does that money come from?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It comes from a fund established during their negotiations by the company in collaboration with the union. The special cabinet committee on the mining communities is continuing its efforts. As a result of the visit of the chairman of that committee and the Premier (Mr. Davis) to Sudbury today, I think there will be statements made regarding some of the deliberations and conclusions which the committee has reached. We have not limited ourselves, as the member I'm sure very well knows, to the Sudbury area only. We are looking at a number of other communities as well.

Mr. Germa: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister if this further curtailment in production at Inco is as a result of the Treasurer's new approach to the foreign processing allowance? Has the committee delved into that aspect of it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: We have most certainly looked at the budgetary factors which might influence the situation in mining areas. I would have to say that it is my understanding it has nothing to do with the Treasurer's approach. It has to do with the market for nickel at this time.

Mr. Foulds: I have a supplementary. Had the committee been made aware of the impact that the cutbacks were going to have with regard to the Shebandowan mine? I believe they're reducing to one shift for a loss of 50 jobs all told. Had she been made aware of that?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The Shebandowan mine will not close down for the extra two-week vacation. It will continue to function. The plan is, as the hon. member has suggested, to reduce the number of shifts to one and to allow attrition to take care of the extra staff which is there and which will not in fact be necessary. There will be no layoffs at Shebandowan.

Mr. Foulds: Didn't the minister say that the market was a problem? Wasn't there a price increase in nickel some 10 days ago and wouldn't that have a positive effect on the mining in Ontario?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am informed that it has had a temporary effect, the effect of which on the long term for this year can certainly not as yet be judged with any degree of clarity or expertise. At the moment it would appear that the program which the company has established will result in a minimal impact on the community; that is that indeed there are to be no more layoffs from Inco, a matter which I think was concerning the Sudbury community very severely.

As an alternative to this, they have developed a program which they feel will have a lesser economic—

Mr. Cassidy: No more layoffs; they go on permanent holiday.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —impact on that community and will maintain the company's capability to retain whatever competitive position it has in the world market at this time. But indeed the impact of that price rise has been beneficial over the very short term. It has been a very short-term period since it occurred and it is hoped that eventually it may have some effect; but it has in fact skewed the market slightly at this time and they don't apparently have enough experience with this to know precisely what the long-term effect is going to be.

Mr. Cassidy: You screwed the workers as well.

SALE OF DIPLOMAS

Mr. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Did the minister read the article in the Globe and Mail this morning that reports on an organization called the Association of Commonwealth Universities in London indicating that there are six university degree mills operating in Canada and that the most effective and lucrative ones are operating in Ontario with such impressive names as the National University of the Dominion of Canada and the Royal College of Science and the Earl James's National University College; and is the jurisdiction of Ontario going to take action to stop the fraudulent issuance of university degrees, such as a PhD upon the payment of $300?

Mr. Lewis: How much for an ordinary B.A.? What is the cost for an ordinary B.A.?

Mr. Nixon: The former leader of the NDP might finally achieve his academic goal.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wish the member who asked that question would show the same amount of respect for real law degrees, as we are entitled to—

Mr. Worton: They're not worth very much.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —rather than categorizing us with the ones that are purchased.

Mr. Nixon: They cost more than $300, and they give a bigger return too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have to learn the difference between real law degrees and purchased ones.

Mrs. Campbell: What is the difference?

Mr. Wildman: All lawyers are unreal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hope the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) heard that.

Mr. Breithaupt: Like beauty, it is in the eye of the beholder.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There have been two specific cases where my ministry took some action. The first case involved a firm in Mississauga, as it happens, and as soon as we—

Mr. Nixon: Why is the minister pointing to the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones)? Is he a graduate?

An hon. member: He is well dressed. It doesn't matter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because I was protecting his constituents.

Mr. Breithaupt: Well, someone does.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the case in Mississauga our investigators got in there and as soon as they started to nose around, the firm closed down and disappeared. The other case was a so-called sex therapist who had a wall full of the phoney diplomas and was treating patients. I don't want to say my investigators started to "nose around" there—as soon as my investigators started to investigate around there, those people also closed down.

The fact is that in the case of an actual sale of these phoney documents—the whole endeavour being rather sleazy, in my opinion—if a person is going in and buying a piece of paper to display on his wall to kid his friends with or whatever, then that may not amount to a fraudulent transaction—that is the transaction between the person selling a joking piece of paper, as it were, to a person buying it, knowing it to be that.

In the specific case in which someone is selling a diploma suggesting that it has more behind it or carries more authenticity than it in fact does and thereby gets money that he or she is ordinarily not entitled to because the goods aren't what they are held to be, then there's action that we will take; and we are investigating each incident brought to our attention to see if that's the case.

[10:15]

The other area where we may come in is when a person has foolishly purchased one of these bogus diplomas and then goes out and misrepresents himself to another consumer as being qualified, for example, to perform some therapy or to deliver some quality-type of product. In that case, in holding out to another consumer that this diploma makes him qualified, then he would be guilty of an unfair business practice under the Business Practices Act and we would prosecute that specific case.

Above and beyond all of this, of course, is this whole type of sleazy transaction is replete with instances of probable fraud—

Mr. Warner: But you haven't done anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and in those instances, of course, charges should and would be laid under the Criminal Code of Canada.

Mr. Warner: The toothless tiger attacks again.

Mr. Nixon: Is the minister aware that his director of investigation indicated that no action could be taken unless there was evidence of fraud? That is a safe thing to say, but surely there is evidence of fraud if, as it states in this article, the degrees, while they may not be of much use in Ontario, are of use in other jurisdictions. It is indicated, for example, that there is a great trade with the United States and Italy. It says, "Usually Canadians buy degrees from Singapore and Australia." So I suppose if they get them far enough away they mean something. Where is the minister's degree from?

But my point is that surely there is evidence of a probable fraudulent activity here, and we should not be permitting these organizations to be selling these pieces of paper. They may be useless here, but evidently they are of some use elsewhere where the great reputation of our education system is highly respected—probably more there than here.

Mr. Breithaupt: They will be looking into honorary degrees next.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I might consider a study mission to Singapore over the summer break in order to look into that aspect of it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is the wrong time to go.

Hon. B. Stephenson: A terrible time.

Mr. Breithaupt: The Ombudsman's committee will cover it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No doubt, no doubt.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier is due for another trip to Italy. Maybe he can look into it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I may go and study that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can only repeat that the facts very much depend on what the purpose of the transaction is in each case.

To take an analogy from the Criminal Code—a person can be walking down the street with a screwdriver and provided he is just going to fix his house rather than break into yours, he is not breaking the law.

Mr. Nixon: There cannot be any facts that substantiate that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But if that screwdriver is in his pocket as he breaks into a house and he uses it, that—as my friend from Kitchener will tell the House—then becomes possession of burglary tools and becomes a criminal offence. And it's not that much different—I might say I'm giving the member this legal lesson with my real law degree—that same item may or may not become a subject matter of a criminal offence. So very much depends on what the transaction involves.

Mr. Nixon: The minister is not going to do anything about this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Specifically, I want to assure the House that those instances—there were two of them in which we had very real evidence that the fraud was occurring here in Ontario—our investigators got in on the act and simply by turning up on the scene the people disappeared. Where there are any other instances of a fraud occurring in Ontario, then I can assure members we will be on the scene. In fact, we are investigating each of those instances to see if any of them are fraudulent transactions or offences under the Business Practices Act. Where they are, we are there and will be there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Aren't you sorry you asked the question?

Mr. Nixon: Point of clarification: Did the minister finally say that they are investigating each of these institutions listed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I couldn't talk about each one of those institutions listed. I know that where specific ones have been drawn to our attention we have been looking into them.

Mr. Bolan: Why don't you investigate them all, Larry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have looked into each specific complaint.

Mr. Nixon: The minister will consider them all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: These having been brought to our attention in the last 24 hours, I have asked my people now to go in and investigate the others that have been brought to our attention. Where there is the slightest shred of evidence that they are carrying on a fraudulent endeavour—

Mr. Mancini: Don't tell us any more than you have to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —we will be there.

FOREST REGENERATION

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources: According to the ministry's figures, there is going to be a 20 per cent increase over last year's figures in the amount of Crown timber harvested this year. In fact, this year's will be the largest harvest since before the First World War. Can the minister tell the House what, if any, the corresponding increase has been in the amount of Crown land receiving regeneration treatment?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I had the opportunity last week to meet about 150 foresters in Thunder Bay for three days on that very topic, and had perhaps one of the best meetings I've seen. I think the NDP critic, who was there for part of it, would say we made no attempt to hide any problems we had. In fact, we allowed the press to sit through the whole thing and listen to our problems.

In the years since the government got involved, I think from 1962 until this year, we've gone from virtually zero to about 170,000 acres a year regenerated. That still is nowhere near good enough, and the purpose of last week's meeting was to find out what, in fact, were the limiting factors in improving that rate. Currently, it's more likely to be our ability to produce seed and trees from our nurseries than anything else.

In the last two years' budgets—last year's and the one I'll be discussing with members very shortly—we've been given all the moneys we asked for for improved regeneration, simply because that was all that could be meaningfully spent improving the base in the operation. We can't suddenly plant trees until we have nurseries in place, and that's where we had to focus our attention first.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the minister agree that, in fact, the ministry is shifting more and more to aerial seeding rather than the use of seedlings and that this is, in fact, a less effective means of regeneration and, therefore, the prospects of getting forests on those lands which he counts as being regenerated are less than they were before?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I wouldn't even agree that seeding from the air is necessarily less effective. We drop about 20,000 seeds per acre when we do aerial seeding. They tell me nature drops about 80,000 seeds per acre under its own mechanisms when it does it, but before we do aerial seeding we generally do something that nature doesn't and that's site preparation. The seeds are dropped in and have somewhere to root a little better than they would if we simply dropped them on the top of the soil and they were subjected to the usual problems of taking root or animals eating them, for example, birds and so on.

I would suggest one of the things that came out loud and clear last week was the emphasis that any one route of regenerating the forests will not work across Ontario. We have to adapt our techniques to suit the site we're dealing with.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that there has been a recent study by Environment Canada entitled Forest Management in Canada, which found that the forest resources inventory in Ontario has serious weaknesses and that it over estimates the volume of available timber by as much as one third, has the ministry made any effort to determine if the allowable cuts now being permitted are not too large and to ensure that this year's record harvest won't result in over-cutting that is too great to sustain for the future?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would welcome the member to come along some time, because he's repeating some of the things that I even came into this ministry with as beliefs. It takes a little experience in talking to the foresters to discover, for example, that one of the major problems we face is over-mature stands in this province, which if not harvested are not only going to be worthless but are also an impediment to future regeneration.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: The minister has indicated that perhaps the hon. leader of the NDP should come along with him on one of those trips. Does the minister not agree that there may be a number of members, including myself and many others in this House, who have not had a recent opportunity to look at the programs that he is bringing forward—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Sorry, Bob, you can come too.

Mr. Foulds: Why didn't you send your critic to Thunder Bay?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that you at least would be interested in this, because there are many matters of urgent public policy, including the blooming trees or not-blooming trees. For example, my colleague here says that if they are preparing the ground why don't they plant the trees while they're doing it? Why doesn't the minister use his eminent position and his influence with his colleagues to make an occasion when this Legislature can go into northern Ontario for the first time in four or five years as a non-political body?

Mr. Havrot: Will you pay your own way?

Mr. Nixon: Let's look at the Reed tract. Let's look at Onakawana, and for heaven's sake let's go to Moonbeam and do some fishing.

An hon. member: I want to go to Minaki.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would be happy to. I am willing to do anything that would educate the chaps opposite.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One of the things I think we seriously should consider is the statistic I recently saw that says it now takes four and a half hours to catch a pickerel instead of four.

Mr. Nixon: We are going to cut that down.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister has thought through the proceedings of last weekend enough to give us an idea when he can expect the ministry and/or the companies involved to achieve a sustained yield basis of forest management in Ontario. Would he not think that the first step in getting his own credibility solid with the forces at that conference would be to repudiate the silly and irrational promise of the Premier of two trees for every one?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is not as silly as a lot of people think it is. The truth is we plant a lot more than two for every one cut, and that is a statistic we can justify.

Mr. Foulds: They don't survive though.

Hon. F. S. Miller: People like to make fun of catch phrases. I would suggest to the member that one of the problems I face was evidenced by the fact that the only members of the press who were there listening to a discussion about a vital resource in this province were those from Thunder Bay.

Mr. Foulds: It got regional coverage.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That justifies then, from time to time, the use of a phrase that is easily understood by a lot of people not normally connected with the forest.

Mr. Foulds: Not if it is misleading.

Mr. MacDonald: It is like 28 acres an hour of lost farm land.

Hon. F. S. Miller: If those who want to make fun of it, make fun of it, then fine. We are trying to get a message across to people who like to talk about other things.

Mr. Lewis: We have tried that ourselves. We are not beyond using the same tactic.

Mr. Cassidy: We will pursue this question of forestry again.

SALE OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to raise with the Minister of Housing which follows up on some questions which we exchanged yesterday on the HOME mortgages which are now being sold off by the government. I want to pursue this because it appears, from what the minister said inside and outside the House yesterday, the government intends that every OMC mortgage holder will have to move up to paying market rates at the end of the mortgage, and that this could apply as well to those people who took mortgages back in 1974 at 8.75 per cent and who will then be forced, it appears, to go into the private market—

Mr. Speaker: Is that a question?

Mr. Cassidy: —at 10.5 and 10.75 per cent at the termination of their mortgage in 1979. Can the minister confirm whether that is what the government intends or whether the government will honour the moral commitment made to those borrowers four years ago when the term of their mortgage expires next year?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The leader of the third party should start to realize that there is a difference between amortization and a term. The amortization period of some of the loans or mortgages is for a period of 25 or 35 years, but the terms have been set in five-year phases.

Just to clear the situation, the government very clearly said at the time that the mortgages were being put out, when we were trying to be helpful in supplying mortgage funding, which the federal government as well as the private sector had refused to do at that time, that there would be some mortgage interest advantages for five years or the first term. We expected that, as a result of increased income and as a result of increased equity positions in housing, people would be in a position to move back to market interest rates.

So that there is no misunderstanding, in the first $40 million that is presently on the market by Ontario Mortgage Corporation the interest rates vary, if I can correct the leader of the third party from yesterday, from 9.75 to 10.25 per cent. There is no one who will be affected in going back to the private market position for a minimum of two and three-quarter years and the lengthiest period will be about four and a half years from this point.

It is very clear. The government has said that the mortgage will go back to the free enterprise system, to the mortgage companies in this province, and that the terms and conditions, as we have entered into them, will stand. They will negotiate the terms of interest that will come in the second five-year term of their mortgage, if that happens to be the case, with the private lender.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that the government has made a decision to renege on the moral commitment that had been made to those families when it helped them to get financing in the last five years since OMC, the mortgage corporation, was set up in 1974, did the government give any thought at all to the impact on the families concerned by this budgetary sleight-of-hand before it was implemented in the course of the budget? [10:30]

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First of all, let me just correct the leader of the third party: The government has not reneged on any of its promises or obligations under the mortgage corporation, to any of the people of this province.

Ms. Gigantes: Read the fine print.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We have honoured the five-year commitment—

Mr. Swart: Five-year?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Yes, that's correct. Most of them were for five years and the amortization was over a period of 35 years.

Mr. Germa: The old shell game.

Mr. Foulds: Did you say clearly in the fine print that after five years they were going to get gouged by the private sector?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Very clearly, we have not reneged and we are putting these back on the free market. There has been some assessment made, as I have already said in the first portion of my answer. We have taken into account, as they have under AHOP and various other programs where the loans have been made through government agencies, the equity factor in the real estate held by the individual and the rise in his income position over the next few years; and, I suppose taking into account that the federal government's financial and monetary policies work out as they say, there should be no difficulty in these people meeting the new obligations.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since it now appears that the government put a hooker in the fine print of the contracts in order to attract people in the same way as a used car salesman or something like that—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: A hooker?

Mr. Eaton: There's no hooker; that's what the contract says. Every mortgage has that.

Mr. Cassidy: —can the minister say whether the government is taking any steps at all to inform the families who have OMC mortgages that it is breaking a commitment to lower their market financing that helped to entice them into home ownership in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First of all, there is no hooker. It was very clearly spelled out, and I am sure each mortgage holder understood exactly what he or she was entering into.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is right in the Mortgages Act.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Secondly, the mortgage holders will be advised of the transfer of their mortgages in this case as they would be in any other private transaction.

Mr. Handleman: The same as anybody else.

CLOSING OF SCHOOLS

Mr. Bradley: My question is of the Minister of Education and it deals with declining enrolments and the closing of schools.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How many children have you got? I did my bit for declining enrolments. Have you people done your share?

Mr. Kerrio: He wants to be prepared.

Mr. Ruston: He hasn't started yet, Bill.

Mr. Kerrio: He could do something about it.

Mr. Bradley: Taking into consideration the fact that trustees in many boards of education feel that the amount of money being provided by the provincial government in this particular fiscal year is less than perhaps they anticipated, and taking into consideration the fact that schools have to be closed in many areas to meet the obligations of declining enrolment, is the minister giving active consideration to permitting the boards of education to realize the profits—call them that if you will—from the sale of these buildings? I understand they get the profits from the sale of the lands, but I'm talking about them getting the complete profits from the sale of these buildings so they can channel these moneys back into the education system in that area.

Hon. Mr. Wells: My friend is quite right; we have made the arrangement where they can get the profits from the sale of the land. I would be happy to look at the matter of whether they should get complete profits or complete moneys received from the sale of the buildings. In a lot of cases, of course, the money comes back to the province. We pay a very large grant towards schools and towards sites, and we feel that if those facilities are sold that the taxpayers of all Ontario should really enjoy the proceeds, and not just the taxpayers of one particular area. But we have made exceptions in the case of sites for specific purposes, and we'll look into the other.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Recognizing that what the minister has said it true to a great extent, but also recognizing the cost of relocating students and of transportation—because they are taking many students from the schools that have closed and then perhaps transporting them by bus to another school—and taking into consideration the fact that there are certain fixed costs no matter how many schools you have, when the minister receives the report of the Jackson commission and if this is one of the recommendations from the Jackson commission, would he give consideration to making those payments retroactive to this particular fiscal year?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would doubt very much that we would be able to make them retroactive to this fiscal year. I don't know what would be involved. Of course, we could take a look at it, but I just caution the hon. member that it would probably be very difficult to make them retroactive.

FORD LAYOFFS

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Minister of Labour: In view of the minister's statements of December 5, 1977, concerning layoffs at Ford Oakville, is the minister aware of the continuing additional indefinite layoffs at Ford? Can the minister report, for example, on 33 additional indefinite layoffs two weeks ago on a Thursday, when on Friday the employees were required to work a 16-hour shift in the truck plant, or on the 30 more who were laid off indefinitely last week with the 48-hour work week still intact? Does the minister not agree that there's something wrong with industry requiring overtime and 48-hour weeks against the wishes of both the union and employees while there is a weekly decline in the work force occurring? What does the minister intend to do about it?

Mr. Makarchuk: Nothing.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that I can say I agree with that. We are attempting to get the detailed information from Ford about the requirements for overtime.

Mr. Germa: He just gave it to you.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There are, of course, as the hon. member knows, two lines there, and apparently there is not sufficient flexibility to permit the shifting back and forth between the two lines, which might overcome some of the problem. I am still trying to get the detailed information for the hon. member, which I shall pursue and which I shall bring forward in the House.

Mr. Warner: He just gave you the details.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: On December 5, the minister was asked what portion of the 6,000 Ford Oakville workers were working the 48-hour week, and she has never responded to this, other than to snarl back that only 4,000 worked in the doggone plant. Is it the minister's intention to respond to this and correct her statement, or does she intend to wait until it's down to 4,000 so she can say she was right?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The hon. member knows that I am the soul of sweetness and light, and I never snarl.

Mr. Foulds: The soul, but not the body of.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am aware of the fact there is a discrepancy in the two figures which we have mentioned, and the computation of the figures obviously was different from the member's point of view than it was from the information which I had received. I do not intend to wait until there is a decreased staff at Ford. We are trying diligently—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, God.

Mr. MacDonald: You've waited three months already.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—to get the accurate information, which is very difficult to get.

Mr. Warner: How many more months?

Ms. Gigantes: Four months?

Hon. B. Stephenson: As soon as I have it I shall report to the House.

Mr. Lewis: They toy with you; you let them.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Would the minister consider the large numbers of unemployed in a community and the index of unemployment in that community; and ban overtime in communities where the index of unemployment is beyond a given number?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would have to tell the hon. member we are looking at a number of factors related to overtime in a number of areas.

Mr. MacDonald: You've been doing that for years.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I haven't been doing it for years, if I might say.

Mr. Lewis: Oh sure you have.

Mr. Cassidy: You and your predecessors.

Mr. Foulds: You have been minister for quite a long while.

Mr. MacDonald: We were raising this issue 10 years ago.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Because of the situation at the present time, we have already made some recommendations regarding overtime for government employees, and we're hoping that indeed we will be able to sell this kind of idea to the private sector as a means of improving the present unemployment situation.

Mr. MacDonald: What do you mean, sell it?

Mr. Swart: Go cap in hand.

JAILING OF YOUTHS

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, in absence of the Attorney General, I will direct this question to the Solicitor General. I noticed, from an article in the newspaper and correspondence I have received, that two young lads in the Bradford area were sentenced to 30 days in the Barrie jail for what was a charge of mischief flowing out of egg throwing on Hallowe'en. Would the Solicitor General—

Mr. Mancini: What do you think of that, Frank?

Mr. G. Taylor:—be instructing his law officers to appeal that decision, since the boys have no money to afford lawyers to appeal?

Mr. Ruston: What is the matter with Legal Aid?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, the information which I received from a newspaper report is that the complaint is the length of the sentence rather than the conviction. I wouldn't want to comment about a report of the trial in a newspaper article.

Mr. Bolan: Was the judge a defeated Tory candidate?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: However, I'm quite willing to get a copy of the transcript and any information about this matter. I understand that both young people had counsel at the hearings. As the hon. member knows, there is the right of appeal, but I will get what information I can and get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Bolan: Frank, why don't you give them a pass?

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: Could the minister confirm to the House that there were undoubtedly actions in his own youth on Hallowe'en night that would have put him in jail in the same way?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: More than eggs, too.

Mr. Bolan: He'd still be there.

FRENCH COURSES

Mr. Conway: My question is to the Premier and it concerns the recently issued report of the federal Commissioner of Official Languages. Given the commissioner's comments about our universities and secondary schools, and I quote very briefly from one of his comments, that these institutions "should reflect on their responsibility to provide their students with the best possible tools with which to enter future careers, and at this time they are doing their student population a great disservice by not insisting on the acquisition of some fluency in the second official language of the country"; and the accompanying chart which demonstrates that in Ontario in the past eight years enrolment in French-language courses has dropped from 48.9 per cent of the secondary school student population to 34.5 per cent, which gives this province, Ontario, the second lowest percentage of students taking French-language courses in Canada; what are the Premier's responses to that kind of statement and what is he, on behalf of his government, prepared to do in so far as reversing what appears to be a shocking trend?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As far as it relates to the universities I think the hon. member is fully aware of the responsibilities of those institutions. If the hon. member is asking me in general terms, do I feel there should be more French being taught in our schools, the answer to that is very simply yes. The Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) has already made that point quite clear. If he would like to find out in a more definitive fashion what the Minister of Education might have in mind, I would suggest the hon. member might ask him.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary to that, I would prefer to deal with the Premier since he has had certain relations with the Ministry of Education in his time. Considering that the federal government is phasing out its program of teaching its employees French, is the government giving consideration to making French a compulsory subject at the secondary level in order to assist any students coming from Ontario's educational system in seeking jobs within the federal civil service?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know there are some who would recommend that French be made a compulsory subject in the secondary schools. I will revert to my brief experience as the Minister of Education and point out to the hon. member, while I fully support increases in French in the secondary school program, to suggest that as of September 1, 1978, we would have compulsory French in the secondary schools throughout the five-year period really would mean we would have many thousands of youngsters moving into grade 9 who may have had a variety of French in terms of the amount at the grade 6, 7 and 8 level. We also face the somewhat difficult problem, for instance here in Metropolitan Toronto, where traditionally we have had young people moving into the school system from other countries, say at the grade 11, 12, or even 13 level, with no facility in French. Would it be expected that this would become compulsory for somebody who has had no former experience in the French language?

I think this is something the universities, too, consider when they determine their admission requirements, because of the great mix of the population. I would say to the hon. member he should also assess this as we discuss what should be and should not be compulsory, particularly for university admission. One can have students—and I have met some in my limited career, as perhaps the hon. member has—who have had great ability in science and mathematics but who have some, shall we say slight disability even in English as it relates perhaps to their mother tongue, because they are fairly recent Canadians. Do we prejudice them by saying they must have certain academic requirements when they show a really great facility in some subject areas?

I think there still has to be a certain measure of flexibility. We can't become too rigid. We can't say everybody must do something, necessarily. I think this applies to French. The member will not get me saying I don't think students should take French. I try to encourage my own children, even though they have some difficulty. One has to be careful before one says: "Sure, this would be a great thing. Let's have compulsory French for everybody in the secondary school program." That might not be the right thing to do as it relates to their own academic abilities or experience or future.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary to that, would the Premier comment then upon government policy as it relates to the university situation, since that does seem to be very pertinent to people coming onto the job market. Has his government given any consideration to making some French compulsory for people who are going to graduate in, let us say the arts field, having full regard to the problems that might be confronted by people in a science area; has the government any policy on making some fluency in the French language a requirement for graduation in university at the arts level?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really haven't time this morning to refer to the volumes behind the Speaker's chair, but I think I could get the member some very relevant statements made by his former leader and now House leader. I could get some very relevant statements made by the member for York South (Mr.

MacDonald) in the days prior to the present discussion, which reminded me with great vigour, with great relevance, with enthusiasm, and almost some knowledge, of the need to retain the autonomy of our universities. They spoke about how this was crucial in terms of the functioning of the universities of this province.

Mr. Nixon: I feel another one coming on.

Mr. Conway: But there is no language policy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't speak for the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott), but I don't think that we have decided to pass legislation that would say to any university of this province, "before you grant a degree, you must give to a student a particular qualification in a particular subject area." I think it is also true that this is the policy in most democratic societies; but if the hon. member has information that would change this, I'd be delighted to hear from him. I hadn't heard, prior to this morning, that the Liberal Party of Ontario wants us to legislate the degree qualifications for our great universities in this province.

Mr. Breithaupt: Can the member ask a question? The Premier hasn't heard it today either.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I don't think I did.

BEEF IMPORTS

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In light of his statement this morning, is the minister aware of the exchange that took place in the House of Commons this week, when apparently the federal Minister of Agriculture was unable to give a definite assurance that the import restrictions on oceanic beef would remain to protect the beef industry in Canada?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I'm well aware of everything that he says, and I'm well aware of the fact that we've asked for a beef import law in this province. We have been pushing for it for three years. We have said that we should do the same thing that the US has done. All they do is by negotiation at this point in time. If we had appropriate legislation in place we could deal with it much better.

Mr. Wildman: A supplementary: Has the minister, since that exchange this week, had any contact with the federal minister to again put the position of the Ontario government and the argument that the Ontario beef producers need protection through legislation?

Hon. W. Newman: The hon. member is saying that we need protection through legislation and I'm just saying that the legislation should be in place. No I haven't contacted the federal minister, but I can tell him that I brought it up in three federal-provincial conferences. I guess there's a file that thick. I don't think I have to say any more to him than I've already said.

Mr. Mancini: You are a weak Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the fact that producers were asking for a greater guaranteed price this year—and going back to his statement of this morning he indicated that he is not prepared to do that—can he tell us, at this time, what the total payout has been from this program over the past three years by this government; and secondly by the federal government?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The total payout by the province of Ontario to the cow-calf producers in the last three years—1975, 1976 and 1977—is approximately, give or take a few dollars, $55 million. The payout to the province this year by the federal program is approximately $1.4 million.

Interjections.

Mr. MacDonald: That was a nice setup.

Mr. Riddell: A supplementary: Just for the sake of curiosity, why will there not be a federal subsidy this year?

Hon. W. Newman: Quite obviously the member didn't hear my statement this morning. I said that it is unlikely that there will be a federal program this year.

Mr. Nixon: Why?

Hon. W. Newman: Because the price of calves is up. The hon. member knows the answer to that. Why does he ask?

Mr. Nixon: Because the price is going up. Does the minister regret that?

Hon. W. Newman: Not a bit. So it should be up. There's nothing wrong with that at all. Why doesn't the hon. member buy a few calves?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the minister's question, I'm in the business of selling them and I just sold them at a good price.

Mr. Havrot: And that's a lot of bull.

Hon. W. Newman: As long as you don't have a conflict of interest.

Mr. Nixon: What do you think about Gene Whalen? Gene Whalen is doing a darn good job. The farmers think so whether you do or not.

Interjections.

An hon member: The only way he'd get into trouble is if he listened to you.

METRIC HIGHWAY SIGNS

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes), I would like to ask the Minister of Transportation and Communications a question. In our desire to increase tourism in Ontario, and to create good public relations with our American friends, what action is his ministry taking to alert the people in the United States as to the change to kilometers per hour from miles per hour?

Mr. Kerrio: There's a sign in Niagara Falls.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I recall we had some lengthy discussion on this at the time we passed the legislation changing to the metric system. We do have signs at all the border points entering from the United States to advise people that the road signs and speed limits are metric in the province of Ontario. All our road distance signs have for a period of time contained the small km sign tagged on to remind people that it is kilometers.

The new road maps that were developed last year are all in metric measurements. The 1978 map, which will be available in a few weeks' time, is also modified to more adequately show the metric system.

So I think we have done about all that we possibly can do. What the Minister of Industry and Tourism is doing in addition to that, I can't say.

Mr. Eakins: I have on my desk a copy of a summons which one of the distributors at the Sportsmen's Show received because he was not aware of the change and I just want to ensure that the minister is working closely with the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, especially at the shows which Ontario is represented at in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am not aware of any presence that we have at those shows, but I will certainly discuss that with the minister.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Education: What precise plans does the minister have to deal with the transfer of children who are in the special education program at Surrey Place Centre; and what undertakings is he giving to the several hundred families who now feel dislocated, since he has indicated termination of staff at Surrey Place, but absolutely no specifics around the alternatives?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am sorry there appears to be a misunderstanding about the situation at Surrey Place Centre. What is happening is that the services available at Surrey Place Centre are going to continue to be available. They are going to be provided by teachers based in Thistletown; there will be at least three or four teachers who will be available on the same basis.

There seems to be some misunderstanding about exactly how that service is going to be provided. I have told my people that the same kind of service that was available before, service that involved not only assessment but also visitations, with in-classroom programs that could assist teachers to develop those programs and help them to carry them out, will continue to be available. We all agree on that and we are now working towards that kind of accommodation there.

So that really the service at Surrey Place Centre is not being phased out. It is going to be handled in a different way; and although there will no longer be a complement of, I think it is nine teachers attached to the Surrey Place Centre, there will still be educational teachers available to do the job with the patients and people who come into that centre.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask why it is that the person in charge of special education at Thistletown has had nothing in writing from the ministry, has had no consultation about the cases to be transferred, has as yet formulated no program, and that all the families involved have not as yet been given any direction as to where they should turn? A number of these children being in quite intensive contact with the counsellors at Surrey Place, is there no way of doing these things without leaving everyone in limbo?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I agree with my friend. I think that some of the things that he said may have occurred. If they have, they will be corrected and they will not occur again.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you.

FARM LABOUR SUBSIDY

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food: In view of the unemployment and the need for jobs, and because of the amount of energy or man-hours required to harvest the fruit of our soil, and because prices for many farm products have not risen since 1975—in fact some products have decreased rather than increased—and because the cost of input has increased; would the minister consider reviewing the guidelines to get assistance of $1.25-an-hour student help for the farming industry?

Hon. W. Newman: I am not exactly sure of the question. Is the hon. member suggesting that more than $1.25 an hour should be paid by the province to those who hire students?

Mr. Nixon: It should be easier to get.

Hon. W. Newman: If that's what the hon. member is suggesting, the program has been announced by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) whereby there will be assistance of $1.25 an hour for any of those people who hire students this summer.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: I was wondering, does the minister realize that many employers in the farming industry have to stretch the truth to qualify for that particular $1.25 an hour and that I am asking the minister to review it?

Hon. W. Newman: The hon. member is talking about the form that was sent out by Manpower last year. I believe—maybe the Treasurer could correct me—that the program will be run by the province this year. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Makarchuk: If the minister is giving away money, I'm sure the Treasurer will correct him.

Hon. W. Newman: I have already looked at the forms from last year, and I realize there are two parts of those forms that do create problems for farmers signing them. We have looked at them and I believe that is going to be corrected. But that question more correctly should be directed to the Treasurer.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: The minister has more or less led me into part of the supplementary I wanted to ask; that is, has some of the ambiguity been taken out of the questions on the application form, such as "the jobs outlined above would not have been created without the funding under the program"? Surely the minister is aware that practically every job conceivable exists already on the farm, whether it be this year or 10 years down the road; and that the farmers, in giving an honest answer to this question, were denied funding under the program.

Secondly, will farm family labour be eligible for funding under the program this year? In other words, can farmers hire their sons and get the $1.25-an-hour subsidy?

Mr. Conway: So much for the family farm.

Hon. W. Newman: That question more properly should be directed to somebody else.

(Laughter)

Mr. Deans: Anybody else!

Mr. Ruston: Why not the Treasurer?

Hon. W. Newman: I understand the question. No, I cannot hire my daughter, or my son or my other daughter under this program.

Mr. Riddell: I am not asking whether the minister hires; I want to know whether they can.

Hon. W. Newman: No, the member can't either. Okay?

Hon. Mr. Davis: You can hire his son.

Mr. Nixon: I just want to ask the minister, in this whole matter about the grant being payable only to jobs that would otherwise not have existed, is he not aware that many farmers, when they look at that, think: "What are we supposed to do? Go out and plant sunflowers in the fence row? Because that's the only job we otherwise wouldn't be doing"? Doesn't the minister agree that money would be extremely useful to the farm community if that requirement were removed? Surely it would be a subsidy to the young people in this province, and to the farmers, to get them working in an area where we need them. What's the matter with the word "subsidy"?

Hon. W. Newman: What the hon. member is saying, I believe, refers to the form's last question about a new kind of work—and on the farm there is no new kind of work; it's all a new kind of work.

Mr. Nixon: That's right. We do everything from sunrise to past sunset.

Interjections.

Hon. W. Newman: I have drawn that to the attention of the member; also, that anybody who hired students last year can hire them again this year. I think this program will be much more flexible since we are running it ourselves without interference from Ottawa.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, well. That's certainly some guarantee. You're running it? That is some guarantee.

Interjections.

TEACHERS' SALARIES

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Education. Is the minister aware that the administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, by order dated February 3, 1978, rolled back the salaries of the secondary school teachers of the Niagara South Board of Education by $264,000 to just under a seven per cent increase; and that he levied a fine of $100,000, payable to the federal government? This order has now been confirmed by the federal cabinet.

Does the minister know that the $100,000 fine was levied against the teachers for the reputed overpayment between the seven per cent and the eight per cent, and the eight per cent had previously been set by the Anti-Inflation Board in April 1977; and that the teachers and the board had complied with it, although appealing it to the Anti-Inflation Board administrator in July 1977?

Because this fine is the only case of its kind in Ontario, because the Niagara South teachers are among the lowest paid in the province and because the fine will come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of Niagara region, will the minister make representation to the Anti-Inflation Board and the federal government that the fine be waived or, if it has already been paid, turned back?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would be glad to look into this matter. I must say I have not heard about it and I am happy that I have now heard about it from the hon. member.

I would suggest that the teachers and he, and all concerned, should make very vigorous representations to their federal representatives from that particular area, particularly if the federal cabinet was dealing with the matter and upheld it.

[11:00]

Mr. Swart: By way of a short supplementary, could I ask that even if this unjust fine against the teachers is not waived, would the minister not agree that the $100,000 should come back to the board, rather than go to the federal government; and urge that this be done. I presume the minister will be willing to meet with the teachers and the board relative to this matter.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't want to give any assurances that I will become involved in it, because as I say no one has made any representations to me.

Mr. Wildman: He just did.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm not sure that it is particularly a matter we should be involved in as a ministry or as a government, since it involves actions of a servant of the federal government in carrying out his duties. However, I'll look into it and I'll let the member know after I have a chance to look into it. But I reiterate that if it's gone so far and as high as the federal cabinet, representations should probably be made in that particular area. The federal cabinet perhaps could by some device of its own decide that the board should get the money rather than the federal government.

FOODLAND ONTARIO PROGRAM

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In answer to a question by the member for Welland-Thorold, regarding advertising under the logo of Foodland Ontario, the minister answered that he was nitpicking and that there were some mistakes. Is the minister aware of an ad that was in the Niagara Falls Review Tuesday last under the Foodland Ontario logo that advertised PEI potatoes, Arizona oranges, Washington apples, California pears and Florida celery? I want to tell the minister they are six for six. If he thinks that's nitpicking, I'd like to hear his answer.

Mr. Nixon: And nothing else! Is Mr. Wheeler responsible for that?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, you know, I don't read all 600 or 700 newspapers. We do some monitoring across the province. I would appreciate having that, by the way.

Mr. Swart: The minister said there were only four mistakes.

Hon. W. Newman: I said only four that I knew about in the Toronto papers.

Mr. Warner: You're not very knowledgeable.

Hon. W. Newman: I want to answer this question. I think it's very important. We have a foodland promotion program and it has been very successful in this province.

Mr. Conway: Successful for Florida.

Hon. W. Newman: You fellows always want to knock success, don't you?

Hon. Mr. Davis: How much apple juice do they drink?

Hon. W. Newman: I want to keep the co-operation of the food chain, from the producer right through to the final selling person. I will be meeting with all the heads of chain stores this coming Monday night.

Mr. Warner: You tell them.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: Is the minister considering—

Mr. Nixon: Resigning.

Mr. Kerrio: —regulations and possibly penalties for the misuse of the logo?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm not planning any legislation now. I'm planning on co-operation and co-ordination, which we have had, by and large.

Mr. Nixon: Try to get it right.

An hon. member: What if they don't cooperate?

Hon. W. Newman: If the member would send that over I will make sure I will deal with the appropriate people who did that, whatever it was or whatever store it was.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you tell the newspapers they just can't do this?

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that perhaps even more serious than the misuse of the logo—and that is serious—is that in the advertisements and in the display of many Ontario farm products the logo is not used, perhaps in the majority of them? Therefore, this has caused the logo to be discredited and is doing very little to help the sale of the Ontario farm produce. Will he adopt regulations or a program which will provide that the logo be used on all Ontario farm produce?

Mr. Warner: And only on those products.

Hon. W. Newman: As I said, there may be a few mistakes. The member said it's discrediting the sales.

Mr. Swart: It is the misuse of it.

Hon. W. Newman: I'm going to read something into the record. I've had this in my pocket for two weeks and I've been waiting. I'd like to point out on our winter vegetable promotion program—

Mr. Foulds: Is this a ministerial statement?

Mr. Cassidy: Is this from your campaign literature?

Hon. W. Newman: —chain store number one sales during that promotion period for onions were up 121 per cent, carrots, 46 per cent; potatoes, 40 per cent; rutabagas, 40 per cent; parsnips, 50 per cent, and mushrooms 12.5 per cent.

Mr. Swart: Are these from California?

Mr. Conway: Idaho potatoes?

Mr. Warner: How about oranges?

Hon. W. Newman: Just listen.

Ms. Gigantes: Where are they from?

Hon. W. Newman: In chain store number two, onion sales in 10-pound bags increased 1,200 per cent; carrots in five-pound bags—I'm talking about Ontario produce—increased 614 per cent. I could go on and on and on. I have other figures for you.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, you certainly can.

Hon. W. Newman: Don't knock success. You want to save the farmer and then you want to destroy farm land.

COCHRANE-TIMISKAMING RESOURCE CENTRE

Mr. Foulds: I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. I wonder if I could ask the minister what happened to his plan, announced in Timmins on the weekend of December 18, to take over two-thirds of the Cochrane-Timiskaming Resource Centre by Monday, December 19? Did he run into a road-block from his colleague, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton)? Did he run into opposition from the local member?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the difficulty we have in northern Ontario—and I made this quite plain before—is that we do not offer all the facilities to inmates of the correctional centres in northern Ontario that we do in southern Ontario. They are not entitled to assessment and classification.

Mr. MacDonald: Penalizing the north again.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, that is why I am changing it. In order not to strip the resources of the north, and bearing in mind that there are no locked facilities in the two psychiatric institutions at North Bay and at the Lakehead—and I am sure the member is aware of my difficulties in Thunder Bay because of locked health facilities—for the past four months, and as late as Wednesday, we in our ministry have been trying to develop with the federal Solicitor General a program that would allow for assessment classification, partial treatment for our northern Ontario inmates.

Bearing in mind that we are aware of the priority needs for those professional resources by other areas of the community, my friend, the Minister of Community and Social Services, does now have specific plans for some of that building and the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) has plans for it. We are maybe going to tag in on a building—I think it is the old nurses' residence—and we will use inmate labour for whatever conversions we need to bring it up to the professional standards we want.

LIBERAL NOMINATION MEETING

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. I wonder if over the weekend, sir, you could give consideration to allowing backbenchers and other members to ask questions of former ministers of the government, because I would like to ask the former Minister of Revenue (Mrs. Scrivener) how she enjoyed the large Liberal nomination in Rosedale last night.

An hon. member: Doesn't mean a thing.

Mr. Ruston: Some people follow the winner.

ORDERS OF THE DAY
ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

House in committee of supply.

On vote 802, provision of accommodation program; item 4, real property acquisition:

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex North.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments for the minister. Yesterday he was kind enough to supply me with a notice of some new locations that were opened up in the city of Belleville, one for the provincial family court and the other for the land registry office. I understand that the member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. Rollins) tried to make this announcement in the Legislature yesterday. I wonder if I could have some clarification on it.

I think the minister is aware that some time ago in the Legislature I asked a question concerning the tendering for space, and I know that we discussed it briefly last evening, but I wonder if I could possibly have it on the record. At that time I expressed my concern that sometimes when his ministry is looking for rental space in a certain location, the property may not always be tendered for. I think at the time my concern was that if it was under 5,000 square feet it was not always tendered for; and I wonder if I could get some explanation of that, because it is my feeling that no matter what space is tendered for—whether it be 1,000, 2,000 or whatever the amount—a public tender should go out for it.

The announcements were made by the press last evening and this morning concerning this space in Belleville, and I have had a call from one of the other people who tendered on the particular family court space, saying that there were five tenders below the price that was awarded to the Century Place people for the family court space. They were questioning this and I wondered whether the ministry could supply that information for me either today in the Legislature or some time in the future so that I can get back to these people. When the tenders were put out they were asked to supply 25 exclusive parking spaces and it has been questioned whether or not the people awarded the tender could supply that.

I realize the minister was away yesterday afternoon when this announcement was made and he did mention that the circulars concerning the awarding of the space had been set out to me. Sometimes it can be a little embarrassing for the member of a certain area—in this case Belleville and the Trenton area which I represent—when the announcement is not made to me prior to it being made by another member in the Legislature. It is a matter of courtesy. I know the minister is new in the portfolio but it is something that I would like to see him consider, even though he was very considerate last night in getting it for me.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Firstly, I explained to the hon. member last night that I had to leave my office at 25 minutes after 12 yesterday. The people sitting here in front of me were in my office at that time. They were preparing the statement that I gave you last night. At that time I instructed Mrs. Smiley, my executive assistant, to prepare the statement, to finish it and to take your announcement and the announcement for the member for Hastings-Peterborough to the post office so that you could both pick them up. Following that, at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon they were to be distributed to the press gallery.

I have checked with my executive assistant—and I think you were there last night, although she didn't recognize you, I'm sorry—and I asked her if your copy was put in the post office; she certified that she had carried out that responsibility. I realize what happened after that. I spoke to Mr. Rollins. He informs me that he went down to the post office, saw the letter in his box and got it, and as you tell me and as other people have told me, an announcement was made here in the House. I was some 200 miles away at the time.

Taking them to the post office is the usual way of notifying the members. I would agree that I could easily have picked up the phone and phoned either one of the members—

Mr. Wildman: Or come and heard Clarke make the announcement in the House.

Hon. Mr. Henderson:—but then I am sure you would suggest that I would likely phone the Tory member first. You would suggest that. So I felt this was the easiest way, to give it to both of them through the post office and leave it up to the post office to decide.

[11:15]

To get on with answering your other question, I have had calls from three different people who advanced tenders. The lowest tender on this was from an area that was not within the prescribed area. I'm sure the hon. member is fully acquainted with the area that was defined in the most recent tender. When we sized up all the other tenders, and everything being equal—parking building, main floor, fourth floor and what have you—the tender we chose supplied all the services that were requested and it was the cheapest to tender.

Two or three weeks ago—I don't have the actual date—the hon. member did question me about this. At that time I was not aware that it was this particular project he was questioning me on. I had several in my mind that day. But I answered him at that time that any projects of this nature and of this size were tendered.

The policy of the ministry is that when space of this nature is required, staff are sent out to investigate the supply in the area. When it's found that there is sufficient supply, at that time tenders are called for the supply that has been requested by the ministry concerned—in this case, as the hon. member knows, the Ministry of the Attorney General for the family courts and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations for the registry office.

I believe that answers the question. If there are further questions, I'll try to answer them.

Mr. O'Neil: Yes, I have some further questions for the minister for clarification, if I might ask them. As I say, I know he is new in the ministry, but I do believe that the minister and his ministry should provide further guidelines for those people who go out looking for space in the different communities.

The minister mentioned that if they go out and find there is sufficient space, they will then tender for that space. What I am suggesting is that I don't believe it should be left up to those individual people who go out into the areas, whether it may be for one reason or another. I would suggest to the minister that what should be done in these cases is that all space should be tendered for.

It is my understanding that when one of these locations was questioned, that it was originally—that the people from his ministry were looking—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member may continue.

Mr. O'Neil: I just wanted to make sure that the minister did hear me. When these people went out looking for the space, originally they had asked for space of approximately 4,000 to 5,000 square feet; therefore, they did not tender for it. It was awarded for this specific location. Then this space grew from 4,000 or 5,000 square feet to approximately 9,000 square feet, and that was never tendered for until I raised a bit of a fuss with people from this ministry.

I would say to the minister, as a protection both to himself and to the government, as well as to the people of this province, that any space being looked for by this ministry should always be tendered for, and not awarded on the basis of whether or not some of the people from this ministry feel there is sufficient space. As to whether or not it should be advertised, I do believe, as protection for everyone, that it should be advertised to the public so that all people can look at it.

As the minister has received several calls this morning—and I understand there has been a great deal of lobbying of his ministry on behalf of some of these people who are looking to be awarded this contract—and so that I will have some of this information available when they call me, I would ask whether it would be possible to have some of his ministry officials supply me with information about the basis on which these particular people were awarded the contract rather than the other people, so that I can have a look at it and judge for myself, and relate to these people the basis on which it was awarded.

I should also make it very clear that I have no axe to grind whatsoever with the people who were awarded this particular contract. I think I know most of the people who have applied for the two spaces in particular. I have no axe to grind with the ones who were awarded the contract or the ones who weren't, and I don't intend to solicit support on behalf of any of them, because I am a firm believer in the tender system where everything is put out for tender and is awarded to the people who supply the best terms and conditions for the government to award that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, let me make it clear that I did not know any of the people tendering. They are all strangers to me. I personally looked on the tenders on the basis of their likelihood of completing the job and on the services that were supplied. I believe I misunderstood you, or my staff informed me that I must have misunderstood you. Did you make the statement that when it was down below the 20,000 square foot mark they did enter into an agreement? That's what I was questioning when you were speaking. You left me with that.

Mr. O'Neil: It was my understanding when I spoke with people from your ministry that in some cases where they were looking for under 5,000 square feet they did not always tender for that space, yes.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That clarifies it for me, because you left me with the impression that my staff had entered into an agreement and then had to cancel. That was not the case? No, well, then let me clarify it again.

Our people did go to Belleville, did look around with the thought that there would be 4,000 feet required. But after they got into it in more detail it was found out that additional space would be needed, and you know what happened in the tendering system.

We'll accept your recommendation and we'll look at your proposals. However, there are times when it is a small building and there is only one building available in the town and let's say it's an old building and you can rent it at $4 a foot, and if somebody is going to build a new one that's going to cost $7 or $8 a foot, I am sure it would be a waste of money to tender. But we will look at your proposals.

Mr. O'Neil: Again, Mr. Minister, with all respect, I realize there could be a delay and there might be some small cost, but I believe that no matter where it is that your ministry is looking for available space—whether it is new or somebody might come up with something in some other store or upstairs, or they might be able to build a building—that in all cases it should be on a tendering basis. It should not be awarded by people from within your ministry, sometimes even without your full knowledge that this has been done. There could be certain repercussions both to you, sir, and to your ministry and to the government.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, let me correct that. I sign all the leases. None of them is done without my knowledge. The minister signs all leases and the minister makes himself aware of what's happened on all these leases. The minister does have a statement—similar to what I am holding up here at this moment respecting Belleville. When he signs the lease he is aware of all the tenders and knows all the facts, so it is not done without my knowledge.

Mr. M. Davidson: I am given to understand, Mr. Minister, that on real property acquisition your ministry does not normally purchase property without having a definite program for which it is to be used? I am wondering if there are on board at the moment any large property acquisitions taking place. If so, could you tell us which ministry you would be purchasing the property on behalf of?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Our largest purchase recently—I am speaking since I became minister and I think I could refer back for a year or two years, maybe three years—has been the parkway belt, the green belt around the city of Toronto that we purchased for the highways division of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications—I think we went over that last week did we not, or Monday of this week? We mentioned that we are also purchasing for Hydro in the parkway belt.

Mr. M. Davidson: The point I am trying to make, Mr. Minister, is that Mr. Thatcher during the last estimates made the statement that we don't normally hold land indefinitely without having a specific purpose, without having a schedule to put something on it. I am referring to the Edwardsburgh tract of land and also the 3,000 to 4,000 acres that are north of Cambridge and Highway 401. Those parcels of land have been sitting there for quite some time. They are in the hands of the government of the province of Ontario and yet I see nothing specifically being designated as to what, if anything, is going to happen to those acres. Could the minister give us some idea of what may take place with those parcels of land?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the Edwardsburgh site was purchased for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism with long-term thoughts of an industrial park.

I do have answers to several questions that were asked the other day. One of them was: "Has the Grandview School in Cambridge been declared surplus by the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea)?"

The answer is: "Not entirely. Of the approximately 69-acre parcel, the Ministry of Correctional Services has only declared a seven-acre parcel, without buildings, fronting on Highway 24 as surplus. As most of this site is now vacant, this ministry is studying alternate uses with all interested ministries and will make recommendations on completion of the study."

Mr. Chairman, could I have your consent to answer these other questions that we had during the estimates last week? I have five or six.

Mr. Chairman: Certainly, I'm sure the committee would agree.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The next question—is this the one the member asked me about right now—is: "Are the Ontario Housing lands north of Highway 401 in Cambridge, south-east of Kitchener, surplus?"

Answer: "We have checked with the Ministry of Housing and OHC and have been advised that these lands have not been declared surplus."

The next question is: "Why does the hospital at Aurora require all the land presently owned by the Ministry of Government Services and why is it not developed to a higher usage?" I believe that was one that was asked of me Monday of this week.

The answer: "The total property of the Aurora Hospital consists of 107 acres and is divided into three areas. The front 60 acres is used by the Ministry of Community and Social Services, which administers the institution, and is required for servicing the main institution as well as the recreational facilities. The 24 acres to the immediate rear of that is used for sewer lagoon purposes. The remaining 25 acres at the rear is at present not being used. This remaining 25 acres could not, at the present time, be used for development because of the lagoon site located adjacent to it.

"The setbacks from the lagoon site for the Ministry of the Environment would have left approximately only five acres to the rear which could be redeveloped. It is hoped that in approximately 1990, when the hospital will be serviced by municipal services, it may be possible that the rear 50 acres, including the lagoon site and the portion not being used, could be available for alternate uses."

The next question is: "Why is the government building in Windsor now only six storeys when it was rumoured that it was originally planned to be 11 storeys?" I believe Mr. Newman of Windsor-Walkerville asked that question.

Answer: "The new government building in Windsor was designed to a maximum height of six storeys or 75 feet as per the city of Windsor bylaw covering the urban renewal area in which the site is located. The building was originally planned to go to a site closer to a tourism bureau which was leased to the city for a park site. If this site had been used, because of the smaller area of property, the building may possibly have had construction higher than six storeys. However, with the arrangement with the city of Windsor regarding the exchange of land, the larger land area acquired allowed for a larger floor area building to be of a lesser height to comply with the city of Windsor bylaw."

[11:30]

The next question dealt with the Richmond Hill provincial lease: Are we going to lease space there to be used as a traffic court? The member for York Centre (Mr. Stong), I believe, requested that information. In the new lease program for 1978-79 for the Ministry of the Attorney General, there is a request that new leased space be found for the Ministry of the Attorney General to be used as a traffic court. Investigations are well under way and it is proposed to occupy space in midsummer.

Question: "How much land does the province of Ontario own?" Answer: This ministry can only advise on how much land is owned by the Ministry of Government Services. At the present time, the ministry owns approximately 3.8 million acres. There are other ministries and agencies which own land and which would have to be contacted for the estimated amounts that are owned by them, mainly Transportation and Communications, Natural Resources, Ontario Hydro, Environment, the Ontario Land Corporation and several agencies, boards and commissions.

Those are the questions that were asked but I did not answer earlier this week.

Mr. M. Davidson: With your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up on the last answer the minister has just given us.

It was my understanding that the Ministry of Government Services was in the process, during consideration of the last estimates, of getting all of the land owned by the government or the province of Ontario on a computer and that that program was supposed to take some six months. We were told at that time that this was being done and that it would take about six months to complete. Are we getting anywhere closer to getting all the land owned by the government on the computer or are we still waiting for that to happen?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The answer I gave—3.8 million acres—is the land that is owned by the Ministry of Government Services. I am not sure what answer the hon. member was given previously. The answer I have given relates to land owned by the Ministry of Government Services and came about as a result of the fact that we have that information in the computer. The figure of 3.8 million acres is for the Ministry of Government Services—not any other ministry, because I can't answer about their land assembly.

May I go on and reply to the other question now? You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that on Monday someone questioned me about the Bronte sports complex—I am not sure who it was, but maybe you will remember. Anyhow, the answer comes through the Ministry of Culture and Recreation. The Ontario sports training centre, phase one, has involved the following expenditures as of April 4, 1978: 535 acres of land at a cost of $5,818,000, legal fees associated with this of $19,100, surveyors' charges of $26,100, for a total cost of $5,863,200. Other items are preliminary site services, access roads and parking lot, $219,000; architects' fees of $1,314,700 for the drawings that we have; supervision, $13,000; and inspection and testing, $1,900. Total expenditures on the complete project to date are $7,412,100.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister some questions relating to the courthouse and courtroom facilities in North Bay. I am quite certain that the minister is aware of the problems which exist there or, if he's not aware of them, that he has been or will be made aware of them shortly. Briefly the situation, if I might go back into history a bit before asking you the question, Mr. Minister, is that around 1960 the courthouse facilities at the city of North Bay were number one on the list as far as obtaining a new courthouse was concerned. At that time the building was some 60 years old and was in constant need of repair. Since then, I am told we have gone from number one to number two to number three; and that as of last year we were down to around number 10. There are those who are facetious enough to say we don't have our courtroom yet because since 1959 we have continually elected a Liberal member. I for one don't accept that argument of course; I think it is very wrong, and it certainly is not in keeping with the good taste of the Progressive Conservative government over the past—well, since 1960.

In any event, the situation which we have now is quite deplorable. Up until the time the grand jury system went out in the province, every grand jury report condemned the courthouse facilities. This was over a period of some 16 years. These reports were made twice a year. It was the same litany time after time—courthouse facilities were atrocious, working conditions were atrocious. It reached a point where in 1960 the magistrate's court, as it was then called, used to be held on top of the old city hall—in fact, in the city hall chambers.

They changed that in 1970, and the provincial court is now being held in a building outside the courthouse. The courthouse itself has very inadequate courtroom facilities; in fact, it has only one courtroom. When, for example, the Supreme Court is in session and there are other court matters which have to go on, such as in district court or small claims court, the court is transferred to a room on top of a beverage room in one of the local hotels. That, of course, adds an awful lot to the feeling that not only must justice be done, but it must be seen to be done.

It certainly has come under much criticism over the past number of years. In addition to this, the provincial court facilities are rather inadequate. I was involved in a rather notorious murder case some three years ago. One of the accused was the infamous Donald Kelly. I was not acting for him; I was acting for one of the other accused, who incidentally was eventually acquitted.

Mr. Nixon: Naturally.

Mr. B. Newman: Good lawyer.

Mr. Bolan: However, during the course of the preliminary hearing, something very unusual happened—this is for Mr. Drea's benefit as well. During the preliminary hearing the accused Kelly as well as the other two accused were in the district jail. They were there in custody pending the determination of the trial. During the course of the preliminary hearing, somebody broke in the provincial court and stole the exhibits which had been filed.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Was it your client?

Mr. Bolan: Of course, they couldn't blame Mr. Kelly, because he was in jail; although what with his Houdini-like methods of getting out of jail over the past three years one would not have put it past him to have done the break-in—or break-out, whatever the case may be. This, I think, reflects quite badly on the government when it tolerates a situation like that.

There are also a large number of drug trafficking cases in North Bay which seem to have developed there over the past number of years and I prosecuted a number of those drug cases. At the end of the day we're left in the unfortunate situation where we don't know what to do with about 30 or 35 pounds of hash, because there is no proper place to put it in a lock-up.

Mr. Nixon: Take it home.

Mr. Bolan: Well, the judge has suggested that on certain occasions, but we have managed to dissuade him from it. The end result of it is that the investigating officers who are in charge of the case have to take drugs to their own lockup. This can create some problems in the event of anything happening to something which is already entered as evidence.

I point these things out to you, Mr. Minister, to apprise you of the rather sad situation we have in North Bay.

Some time around 1967, I believe, a positive move was instituted by the ministry at that time to acquire the necessary land to build the new courthouse, about 10 years ago. As a result of this, the province then spent large sums of money in acquiring about 10 or 12 houses in a block adjacent to the courthouse facilities. All of these homes were torn down and the land right now is more or less lying fallow while the government decides when to build the courthouse.

There have been considerable moneys expended on the existing courthouse over the past 20 years. I don't know the amount of money which has been spent, but I can assure you that it has been quite considerable, and it's reached the point that there is no safety in lockup for an accused person who is in the court room or in the courthouse during the trial. As a result of this they've placed bars on certain windows and a certain part of the building to prevent anyone from escaping. All in all, it certainly is very inadequate.

My question to you, Mr. Minister, is what proposals does your ministry have with respect to the construction of the new courthouse in North Bay? When can we expect this to get under way? What proposals do you have with respect to improving the court room facilities in the event that you don't proceed with the building of a new courthouse? I would appreciate your comments on those points which I've raised.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Firstly, in response to the hon. member, I'm glad that he cleared up his position. I was beginning to become concerned at his involvement with the court. May I first tell you that some seven years ago the Ministry of Government Services acquired a site for a courthouse. Second, may I tell you that the estimated cost of this courthouse that I have here is $6.2 million. Third, we do have drawings in the process.

When I get down to the real punch line I would have to remind the hon. member again that it is the Ministry of the Attorney General that schedules projects of this nature. It is not this ministry. This ministry carries out the work, once the Ministry of the Attorney General puts it in the time slot. The hon. member did refer to slots A, B, and C.

He said some of the people in the area suggested there should have been a member of another party elected in that area.

Mr. Bolan: No.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Oh, you didn't agree there should have been? Oh, I thought you were agreeing that another party should have been represented from that area.

Mr. Nixon: There isn't another party up there.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I misunderstood that part of the question. That was my understanding of the hon. member's statement and I was ready to agree that a member of this Party should have been elected to that area. But of course—

Mr. Bolan: We have more faith in the government than that. We don't believe in blackmail, Lorne.

Mr. B. Newman: The people there can read.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I was just looking at the area and I note, maybe not completely but within the last few months, we have completed a Ministry of Transportation and Communications building at a cost of $1.27 million. We have completed a material testing laboratory at a cost of $580,000. We have completed many other projects. There was one completed in February 1976, $12,000.

Mr. Bolan: We deserve it.

Mr. Nixon: Brant is the only one you don't spend a nickel on.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Correctional Services—under construction, $31,000. The Culture and Recreation one, January 1977, $33,000, and I could go on and read—

Mr. Bolan: I am not complaining.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I have four or five pages I can show the hon. member. But if he is interested in projects that we have completed, I'd be very happy to supply him with that information. Have I answered your question? Fine.

[11:45]

Mr. Bolan: One other question: I take it the minister has had no direction from the Ministry of the Attorney General with respect to following up on the implementation of the plans for the building of a courthouse in North Bay, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly part of the cabinet, but it is up to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) to bring his recommendations to cabinet before I have input on the priority of this building. At that level I will certainly have my input, the same as 25 other members of the government.

Mr. Bolan: I take it then as a member of the cabinet, as a member of the government, you are not aware of anything brought forward to cabinet by the Attorney General with respect to the implementation of the new courthouse in North Bay?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: My only response, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Bolan: Yes or no.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: My response is this. The Attorney General has many projects.

The Attorney General has spoken to me privately about them. It is not one that he has on this year's priority.

Mr. Bolan: Thank you.

Mr. Bradley: My question to the minister deals with some land that has been acquired by his ministry already in the city of St. Catharines for a courthouse. The land known as the Wright property was purchased first from private sources and, secondly, a property on which the public library was located in the city of St. Catharines was purchased when that old library was demolished. It was expected that commencement of construction of a courthouse on that property would begin almost immediately.

I know the minister is very much aware of this. As he indicated to me in the House the other day he has received a lecture on the very great need for a courthouse from the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch), who also represents a portion of the city of St. Catharines. I won't go through the same speech I went through for the Attorney General. I must say to the Minister of Government Services the Attorney General sat and nodded as I went through the description of the old courthouse in the city of St. Catharines, and the fact that it is absolutely a disgrace in terms of a justice facility.

The reason I am asking whether you are going to put this property to use in the very near future by commencing the construction of the courthouse this year is that besides the obvious need for a reasonable justice facility in the city of St. Catharines, a need which has been known for many years, there is also the fact that the unemployment rate in the construction industry is perhaps relatively high compared to some other areas. This would be a distant boost to the construction industry.

Last, it would also indicate—and I think the province has done this in other ways—the faith that the province has in the city of St. Catharines in its desire to boost the revitalization of the downtown area, not only through the excellent program the province is providing, but also through the construction of this courthouse.

So I would ask the minister if he can comment on when he feels the commencement of this courthouse would take place? Second, is he going to be meeting with the task force on downtown revitalization and others, as invited by a resolution of the council of the city of St. Catharines?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: May I respond to your last question first? I am not aware of any resolution. Maybe I have missed something, but I don't remember getting that resolution.

Mr. Bradley: It probably hasn't arrived yet.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's recent, is it? Okay. As far as I know I don't have it.

Next, I don't think the hon. member wants us to use this piece of property for anything but the courthouse; is that pretty well agreed? I did mention in my estimates on Monday of this week that when we have surplus property first we circulate it among all other government departments. Following this we go to the local governing authority to see if they have any use for it.

Respecting this particular piece of property, I wouldn't want to tie it up to someone other than the Attorney General. The Attorney General is actively considering this building; it's not a dead horse by any means. As I mentioned to you a week ago, it seems to me that every week the member for Brock suggests to me, "Mr. Minister, get on with the courthouse in St. Catharines. We need it."

The estimated cost of this project is $13.5 million. It is active in our list. It is listed at the moment under C, but it is not a dead issue by any means. I just repeat, it seems to me that every week the member for Brock brings this to my attention, as you did a few days ago. But to actually go to another building, I haven't considered anything different.

I did mention on Monday in my estimates that the government is certainly looking at the unemployment situation all over Ontario. I mentioned on Monday the Sudbury building is a result of this. Our negotiations are going on in Hamilton as a result of looking at the unemployment situation. There was the announcement this morning respecting Belleville; it is hoped that this will assist in relieving unemployment. So we are ready to consider any proposals that come forth that will help in the present economic situation.

Mr. Bradley: This is supplementary, I suppose. I was in another committee at the time your last estimates were before the House so I was unable to be present to discuss them, but—and I suppose we are really under capital when we talk about this. The priority seems to shift, Mr. Minister. At one time we in St. Catharines were led to believe that the St. Catharines courthouse was a number one priority, or at least there were no others that had a greater priority in terms of commencement of construction.

Would you care to evaluate where you would place it now? Just looking at courthouses—not at other buildings, but only in terms of the courthouses to be constructed—is it first, second, third, fourth or 24th?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the only response that I could give to that is this, that in our department we have, A, buildings going to tender; B, buildings with plans under way; C, buildings that are not scheduled; they are under consideration. The Attorney General is the only one who can really answer your question. I hate to answer you this way as it looks as if I am trying to pass the buck, but I am not. The Attorney General is the only one who can answer your question honestly and fairly.

Mr. J. Reed: With the Chair's approval I would like to bring up once again a subject that we got into debate on late in the afternoon last Monday. It is the parkway belt and the ministry's action there in expropriating land for Ontario Hydro. The debate, of course, was adjourned that day at 5:55. Some questions had been asked and I wondered if the minister had apprised himself of his ministry's actions there since that time.

My particular concern revolves around the evaluation of land within the parkway belt for purposes of expropriation, considering that the parkway belt is in draft plan form and is only that—it is not, as I understand it, legislation although it may be quite legal. But the offers that have been made to the land owners in the parkway belt do not reflect the values of the land just outside the parkway belt which, in this case, is less than a concession road distance, both on the easterly side and the westerly side. The exact location of the property I'm referring to is south of Derry Road and in the ninth concession of Halton. It would appear that the appraisals being made are being made on the basis of this imposed situation that is called the parkway belt.

I wonder if the minister could shed any more light on this very vexing problem and if he considers it a correct action on the part of his ministry to use that kind of evaluation which, as I understand it to this date, has no basis in legislation?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: On Monday we did get into this in a minor way, I would agree. I personally have put a great deal of study into the parkway belt. I'm well aware of the area you are referring to. Let me reverse my answer; you ask, is there legislation or where does the legality for this come from. It comes about as a policy of cabinet, of Management Board, of government. As I mentioned to you last week—or not last week—Monday of this week—it seems like weeks ago but it was just five days ago—the value which applies is that of a certain date in 1973—in fact, I believe, June 3, 1973—or today's value, whichever is the higher; that is the price that's being used. I believe the hon. member for Halton-Burlington was the one speaking on this on Monday?

Mr. J. Reed: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: And I believe you were the one who questioned me on Bronte.

Mr. J. Reed: No, it wasn't me.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It wasn't you? Oh, I'm sorry. You were here though when I gave the answers on Bronte. When we were speaking about this Monday, you suggested that you could take me to properties a mile or two miles out of the parkway. I don't deny this. I've been made aware of some of these things. I'm ready to answer any questions; if you have further questions, feel free.

Mr. J. Reed: I suppose what I'm trying to get at is the question of how property can be successfully devalued by virtue of cabinet policy, rather than by virtue of legislation. We do zone property all the time; we do it in the urban areas, I think I said Monday. But we do it through bylaw. We do it by elected councillors who pass a bylaw and, as a result, certain property is zoned or given a certain designation and the truth is if the people aren't satisfied with the bylaw, at least it has been done by the elected body.

Here's a case of simply the imposition of cabinet policy coming along and saying to all of those people who own that property, "Well, we are declaring you to be thus and so." I don't care what you call it, whether you call it the parkway belt or the utility corridor or the recreation area for some particular municipality. The truth is it's an imposed designation and the result is that the property is being evaluated and appraised on the basis of that imposed designation, obviously a calculated manoeuvre on the part of cabinet in order to provide themselves with some cheap corridors and some cheap land, if that was the case in time.

I am just astounded, if it is so, that a government, which on the surface is so supportive of a free society and exchanges between willing buyers and willing sellers and all of this sort of thing that we are constantly being lambasted with over here on this side, would turn around and make this kind of designation which is tantamount to confiscation of property. These people have no alternative, and they have also been told—at least, I have been apprised by them that they have been told—that the government may very well need some more of the land in a few years down the road and they can expect probably to get the same 1973 price for it, a little further down.

To make matters worse, the land cannot be used in any other way. It is frozen. What you have done is eliminate from that selective area any of the normal expectations of land values in the future. I am not looking at this from the point of view of whether a speculator got hurt or whether he didn't get hurt or whatever. A lot of those people are individual home owners. They are farmers who have lived there all their lives and farmed all their lives. Now the government has undertaken not only to freeze their property, but also to come along with the final humiliation and expropriate it at this so-called frozen period of time.

Surely, in the name of justice, the government has no business freezing property in this way. If the government wants to designate some sort of thing, why is it not brought to the Legislature and made into a bill? Then we can debate it and, if we decide to support it, we can support it, or, if we decide to vote against, we will vote against it. For heaven's sake, it is pure and simple injustice.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I believe the hon. member was elected on September 18, 1975. If his memory could go back to 1973, which yours does, Mr. Chairman, he would remember that an Act went through this House, the Parkway Belt Planning and Development Act. That Act was debated on the floor of the House and was carried through the House. Following the designation of that Act the government had authority to act as it did in the parkway belt. On June 3, 1973, the plan, as you know, was filed. I say to you that all members of this House are elected people, the same as your municipal council. In fact, they are a senior body to your municipal council. This Act had every consideration in the House and the House did see fit to give this authority to the government.

I would have to differ with the thought that it was done without elected politicians being involved. I would go on further to speak with regard to the valuation. Again, may I refer to the present policy, which is the value of the land on June 3, 1973, or today's value, whichever is the higher. If the June 3 value is higher than today's value, then they will get that value. I would agree that the amount they get may not have gone up, but it has not gone down. They will get whatever it was valued at the date of the registering of the plan.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Minister, I appreciate the information about the Planning and Development Act, but I submit to you that in the evaluation method you are using in this case—you're talking about the higher of the values between 1973 and now—you're talking about the higher of the values within that designated area. You're not relating the values to any normal kind of evaluation, that goes on when land is being appraised.

In this case, that parkway belt is one concession wide and property on both sides in the next concession is trading at much higher prices. It's true that the value of the land has not gone down since 1973; that is very correct. But the truth is that it hasn't gone up either, and it can't go up because of this draft plan, according to policy of cabinet, as you have said.

I'm not as familiar with the Planning and Development Act as I should be and you can be sure that I will apprise myself of the details of it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's a very short Act. You can read it some evening.

Mr. J. Reed: But I would ask you if the Planning and Development Act allows you to make this kind of confiscation. I really would question that the members of this House voted in that Act with that kind of intent. I very much doubt it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in responding to the hon. member, the Act is quite a short Act. I'll be honest with you; I read it on Tuesday night of this week, it's that short. I was in a meeting and I read the Act itself. It had nothing to do with other responsibilities that I have. The member has a good argument from his point and from his position, but let me answer him in this way.

We, as the government, have established this position, and I would think that the only way there will be a change is for the courts to establish that we are wrong. You might well be right. We think we're right. You have a good argument, but we felt that when we established this method we were being fair.

On your argument about higher prices a mile away, I'm aware of these prices. I don't argue a bit. My only response is that I think no doubt someone from the Land Compensation Board will establish whether we're right or wrong.

Item 4 agreed to.

Item 5 agreed to.

On item 6, lease-purchase:

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister has any statement with regard to the lease-purchase arrangements we have.

I mentioned in my leadoff speech that I would be questioning him. Does he have any studies on the method of lease-purchasing compared to owning buildings from day one instead of leasing and then taking over ownership after 25 years? Does the minister have any figures to compare the cost of this to owning at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have a few words I would like to put forth with respect to this. It will take me a couple of minutes to present it but I think it's very important.

"In times of financial restraint and from a short-term perspective, leasing offers enormous flexibility in these terms—negotiated rates, cancellation clauses and so forth. In most municipalities, facilities can be obtained much more quickly by leasing them than by construction. No capital outlay, building design time nor construction followup is needed for the building itself, although alterations in the interior are generally required.

"Leasing can provide flexibility in space management and inventory which in these days of rapid organizational changes is not possible through construction. The lack of any response to a construction tender or short duration of space need makes the leasing mechanism economically preferable.

"There is little question, however, that when the same space quality is compared, leasing in the long term is the more expensive alternative. Nevertheless, part of our inventory should always be in leasing, in situations where the above advantages outweigh those of construction. The present inventory is approximately 16 per cent in conventional leases.

"Construction, on the other hand, permits the province to design, provide, maintain, repair and operate a facility according to the government standards of quality and energy conservation. In the form of a consolidated office building, the construction mode can provide to the public greater visibility and accessibility. It permits the province to actively support and influence urban renewal schemes and municipal plans by associating the project with them.

"The land on which the building is situated is government owned and the design is carried out by the Ministry of Government Services staff or an associated architect. Construction has the advantage of providing a more immediate and substantial stimulus to the local construction and its employment component, than does short-term leasing.

"The 'hands on' approach that a government owned facility permits can be expected to result in improved internal space management and administration, improved service levels within the building and maintenance of the facility to government standards. In some localities where suitable leased space is unavailable, construction becomes the only viable mechanism.

"The financing of construction projects may come from the government's own capital funds or through a lease-purchase contract. Tendering on lease-purchase projects is very similar to the procedure for tendering on capital construction projects, the major difference being that instead of calling for a lump sum price, the tenderer is required to finance construction of the basic project. The province, apart from initial leasehold improvements and the furniture costs, enters into a lease-purchase agreement under which the province pays rent for a fixed term with the building becoming the property of the province on completion of the agreed form. The agreement on a net lease basis means that the province will pay all operating and maintenance costs and a developer will pay initial construction costs only.

"Use of the lease-purchase mechanism adds greater flexibility to the number of ways in which accommodation facilities can be provided. The use of the mechanism has historically been confined to consolidated office buildings in which the Ontario government is the sole occupant, and comprises approximately three per cent of our inventory.

"Capital construction can generally be expected to be more economical than lease-purchasing a facility in the long run. However, in the short, the cash flow for capital construction projects is very high and in relative terms much greater than the lease-purchase mechanism. Thus, in times of fiscal constraint, it is much more advantageous to use the lease-purchase mechanism which spreads the cost of the construction of the project over 20 years or so, whatever period of time, may be proclaimed on each project."

[12:15]

Mr. M. Davidson: I notice in the booklet which you were so kind as to provide us with, Mr. Minister, under the lease-purchase program you indicate most of the agreements are signed for a 25-year period. Would that vary? Would there be agreements signed for longer or shorter periods of time?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Twenty-five years is the preferred term. On a small building we reduce it to 20 years, and I believe on Thunder Bay courthouse we have 30 years. So that's 20, 25 and 30 years.

Mr. M. Davidson: I take it the Thunder Bay courthouse is the one that's slowly sinking into oblivion. In a situation like that, if it is leased property, is there any guarantee in that lease that if a situation such as what is happening to the Thunder Bay courthouse takes place that the government can, in fact, break that lease and get out of it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We own the property. The building is on our property. It's a first mortgage on the property and very difficult to get out of. I wouldn't know any way to get out of it. My only other comment is the building in Thunder Bay is not sinking very fast. If you read the report, over the next 20 years, up to 1998, it will sink one inch.

Mr. M. Davidson: It may sink one inch and then again it may, as I said, sink right into oblivion, but at least then you will be left with the property which you own and will not necessarily have to pay the leasing price on the building.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't think the hon. member wanted a response to that. We're not happy with the construction project, and I am sure you are aware of the financial position the company that built this building is now in, with mechanics' liens and what have you. I only say to you that this building was built five years ago and it would be a very cheap building today. It's worth twice as much today. It's going to take a quarter of a million dollars to make it a number one building, but then it will be worth twice as much as it is actually costing us on today's market.

Mr. B. Newman: I wanted to ask the minister about the new provincial public building in the city of Windsor. That is on a lease basis, is it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, lease-purchase.

Mr. B. Newman: The purchase is $1, is that it, after the lease expires?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. B. Newman: What is the rental per annum on the building? While your official is looking for the rental figure is the length of the lease the normal 25-year period?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Rental is $7,202 per month for a period of 25 years. I really haven't spoken to the contractor to request why he did that. It is a very interesting figure.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, that is approximately $84,000 a year; am I correct?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Quick mathematics would tell me it's about $86,500 a year.

Mr. B. Newman: It's not as reported in the press as $500,000 per year for 25 years?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No. I haven't seen that report in the press. If that is in the press, it is wrong.

Mr. B. Newman: It struck me as being an unusually large figure and I didn't think you, as minister, would come along and tolerate a rental like that, would you?

Mr. Worton: Nobody from Lambton.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would have to admit to the hon. member that I have not been in the building, but I take the word of the hon. member that the $86,000 is a reasonable and fair figure. The $500,000 that he suggested is out of order. If that was the figure, we would be investigating it. I would hope that the hon. member will be at the official opening.

Mr. B. Newman: It's exactly two weeks from today and we'll see you there.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes. About right now we'll be having coffee.

Mr. B. Newman: You know when that building was originally planned, don't you?

Mr. Worton: About 20 years ago.

Mr. Ruston: In 1955.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The hon. member last Monday suggested to me—was it a figure of 12 years?

Mr. Worton: Before your time.

Mr. B. Newman: It was really in 1957, because I fought the 1959 campaign on that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You used that for a campaign? That is 21 years ago. I was warden of my county that year. That's getting back into history.

Mr. Ruston: It took a long time to build it.

Mr. B. Newman: So you can see you eventually listen to us.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You and I have been around a long while.

Mr. B. Newman: You're slow learners but you eventually pay attention. We appreciate the building in there and we look forward to seeing you down there and cutting the official ribbon and declaring the building officially open.

Mr. Worton: Are you going to cut a red ribbon or a blue ribbon?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will have coffee together.

Mr. B. Newman: I understand that you are also going to expend some $20,000 on some internal renovations. Why would not that have been probably foreseen in the original plan of accommodation being provided for various ministries?

Mr. Worton: Twenty-two years is a long time. Things are bound to change.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I want to correct the record. I have given the member wrong figures. The payment is split between the builder and the company that holds the mortgage. There are two payments and I only gave you one payment. The overall figure is not $500,000, but it's $499,368.

Let me answer the balance of your question.

Mr. B. Newman: It's this much less, is it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's not $500,000. That's all I said.

Mr. B. Newman: Even the figure in the press indicated $498,804 a year. I would assume that even the figure you're giving me is probably not exactly accurate because your officials probably used a computer in which the battery had run down.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No. They just put them together. They realized they had given me the wrong information.

Mr. B. Newman: Okay.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Let me tell you what the payments are again so that they will be corrected. The one figure is $92,424.

Mr. Worton: Don't worry. Money is only a medium of exchange.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I've got it right now. Please accept them as being right. These are per month figures I'm giving you. The first one is to the mortgage company, $33,912 per month and to the owner, $7,702 per month for a total monthly payment of $41,614. Multiply that by the figure of 12—

Mr. Worton: That's where we get into trouble.

Hon. Mr. Henderson:—and we get $499,368. Those are our figures and we think they're right. It's in there.

Mr. B. Newman: It's nice to know. Having had your figures corrected, I think you could probably qualify for one of those certificates that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) is looking into today.

Mr. Worton: In mathematics.

Mr. B. Newman: Maybe a PhD from one of these exotic universities.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Could I interrupt the member? You did suggest earlier—and I didn't get around to answering it—the expenditure of some additional $20,000.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, that's right.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't want to interfere but I think I should answer that.

In all buildings that we rent—no matter where they are—we put the partitions and the furnishings in. We make the offices to fit our needs. So that is not part of the building. That is the $20,000 you are referring to.

Mr. B. Newman: I look at it because that is under the new lease-purchase project. So that would fit in just as you explained, Mr. Minister. By the way, who is the owner?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Some company by the name of Ellis-Don.

Mr. Worton: Oh, they are coming back again, eh!

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Would you people over there know them by any chance? I don't think these people would.

Mr. B. Newman: I don't know him from Adam.

Mr. Worton: We have heard of that one.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It wouldn't surprise me that you people might know them.

Mr. B. Newman: But I do appreciate you giving me that information. The only other thing I would encourage you to do is to look seriously at the vacant public property that is behind the provincial public building. You will have a chance to see it in two weeks. Its purchase would be an asset to the building, to the officials working in the building as well as to the public.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I depend on the hon. member personally bringing that to my attention two weeks from about right now.

Mr. B. Newman: You can't help but see it, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Okay, thank you.

Mr. Worton: Take your cheque book with you.

Mr. Ruston: This is a six storey building; what is the square footage of that building?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's 69,587 rentable square feet.

Mr. B. Newman: That's 110,000 in total.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Did I hear the member for Windsor-Walkerville suggest 110,000?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, the square footage of the building being a total of 110,000. That is from an article that I am reading.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That is not the record we have. The figure I gave you is the record we have. I doubt it if you would get 110,000 gross building out of a 69,000 feet that we are renting.

Mr. B. Newman: All I can say to you is that in an article of February 1, 1978, Gerry Glos of Glos Associates Limited in Windsor, architects of the building, said: "The cost would be returned over a few years in air-conditioning savings, as the drapes will stop the loss of cool air in the 110,000 square foot building."

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. member is correct and that we are paying for 69,000 feet and are getting 110,000. I'll accept that as a gift.

Mr. B. Newman: They are counting the roof, Mr. Minister.

Mr. M. Davidson: In any of these lease-purchase agreements which your government has negotiated on behalf of your ministry, do any of them contain a clause whereby the rental fee can be renegotiated after a period of time?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. R. Worton: Boy, you strike a hard bargain.

Item 6 agreed to.

Items 7 and 8 agreed to.

Vote 802 agreed to.

On vote 803, upkeep of accommodation program:

Item 1 agreed to.

On item 2, repairs, operations and maintenance:

Mr. Ruston: With regard to maintenance, Mr. Chairman. Earlier, I mentioned briefly the Burwash situation—as did the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel). You sold some property to the federal government. What is the maintenance cost of that now? In 1975 the maintenance cost was $108,000; in 1976, $347,000; 1977, $380,000; and April 1977 to March 1978, estimated, $247,000. How much did the part you sold to the federal government decrease your cost of maintenance?

[12:30]

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, firstly let me make it clear, one portion of this particular property referred to as Bison Camp has been turned over to the federal government for their use. We got paid for that. That is not costing us any money.

Now, I am not sure that we have the balance of your question here. We'll see in a minute.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member read out some figures. You will note the last item he read out—or I believe he did; I didn't have these figures before me at the time. Let me repeat it: April 1, 1976, to March 31, 1977, the actual cost was $380,000. April 1, 1977, to March 31, 1978, the estimated cost when this was prepared was $247,450. Those are the most up-to-date figures we have at this time. But I just repeat that the federal government is responsible for that portion that they have acquired.

Mr. M. Davidson: I believe even though the property still is in the hands of the Ministry of Correctional Services that you in fact are responsible for repairs et cetera, to the buildings that exist on the Grandview School property.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Are you referring to the Grandview School?

Mr. M. Davidson: Right. Not Churchill House, the remaining property.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's in the hands of Correctional Services.

Mr. M. Davidson: Yes, I understand that. And are they responsible for the maintenance and repair?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes.

Mr. M. Davidson: Okay, fine. Thank you.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Minister, I notice in your public accounts design and construction program for 1978-79 that you list the fire alarm services at the Windsor Jail. When do you plan on starting the installation of those services and how long do you anticipate it will take to complete that?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will have to get that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. B. Newman: While they are looking that up, Mr. Minister, I will also ask you about the installation of standby power for essential equipment at the laboratory building in the community. I have the same questions concerning that. When do you plan on starting and how long will you take to take care of what are contemplated as minor capital projects in the city of Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will have to acquire that. If we don't have it today I will have it on Monday, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. M. Davidson: Under the same listing the member for Windsor-Walkerville was looking at, could you explain the amounts that are going to be spent or the program that is going to be taken in the Kitchener county courthouse—first floor reorganization? And is that the new courthouse that just opened recently?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will have to get that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall item 2, vote 803, carry on the understanding the minister will supply the information requested?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Item 2 agreed to.

Vote 803 agreed to.

On vote 804, supply and services program:

Items 1 and 2 agreed to.

On item 3, printing and stationery services:

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, the ministry in the past has been trying in some ways to reduce the number of its forms and, to some extent, the number in government at all levels. A few years ago, I believe the number was around 50,000, and they reduced it to 46,000. I'm just wondering what progress is being made in retiring some forms and amalgamating some others, and whether the ministry is finding that it's making any particular savings in these.

Everyone is concerned about the number of forms that governments use, because it sometimes seems that they multiply by themselves.

This was discussed a few years ago, I believe. I'm just wondering if this is a continuing thing and whether the ministry is making any progress in it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would respond this way, Mr. Chairman: We started this program back in the early 1970s. We are working with other ministries in trying to develop a common form that will serve a group of ministries instead of individual forms for each ministry. We are making progress, but I don't have the figures here this morning to be able to tell the hon. member what the actual reduction is. I would leave it at that except the hon. member requests more information. He knows the number of forms we have; he mentioned it. We have certain people working on this all the time.

Mr. Ruston: At one time, I believe, the Ministry of Health had around 6,000 different forms in conjunction with the study being done in Government Services. I'm wondering if there's anything specific to report on that particular one.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the only forms I am involved with are the ones where there is a multiple of ministries. The ones the member refers to, the 6,000 of the Ministry of Health, I would not have jurisdiction over. But I do know that the Ministry of Health is also working towards this end.

Perhaps the hon. member will remember the suggestion in the Throne Speech that we're reducing overall our needs, regulations and what have you. Also, I believe there was an announcement a week ago or so about the member for Lanark (Mr. Wiseman), who is the Minister without Portfolio, being appointed as chairman of a committee, with the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth) and the member for London South (Mr. Walker) on the committee, to review all forms of this nature in all ministries, and to report back by the end of this year.

Item 3 agreed to.

On item 4, collection services:

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, would the minister describe the collection services? What do they do and what are their responsibilities? Also, what are they collecting?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: For the collection services activity the budget is estimated at $283,200. The classified staff is 14 man-years. The unclassified staff is two man-years. The goal is to provide a complete central collection service to all ministries for the collection of debts owed to the Ontario government on a profitable basis where collection efforts in the ministries have been exhausted. The activity will provide central collection service for ministries and agencies of the Ontario government, administrative support and direction for special services branch of the ministry. These are some of the significant issues. Due to the existing backlog of 15 man-years of collection service accounts awaiting process in the legal branch, a special committee on collection activities recommended the return to client ministries of approximately $1.7 million in accounts is uncollectable. This reduction will be offset by an anticipated growth in new accounts of approximately $1.775 million. The net effect will be a reduction of $1.5 million in outstanding accounts.

Mr. Worton: You are saying that is for all government agencies, except the Attorney General's department in regard to unpaid fines. Are you collecting for Community and Social Services or is this for debts owing for projects under Government Services? Give us maybe a brief outline of what ministries you are collecting for and some of the things you would be collecting.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: These are uncollectable grants. Student loans are in it. I can think of one that has caused me some concern personally in my own riding. That is the adverse weather grants to some farmers who were not successful and were not able to pay them. Now it's come back to haunt them.

Mr. B. Newman: What about first-time home buyer grants?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We don't have them. The department concerned goes through a process of collection. When they get to the point they feel they have exhausted the process, they are turned over to our department.

Mr. B. Newman: You're the court of last resort.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That's more or less the case. Then, as I mentioned, we will turn close to $2 million back in accounts to the departments to tell them the process is exhausted. They, in turn, will have to write them off. I could list some of them here, though these are old figures: Colleges and Universities, Ontario Career Action, $1,005.95; Agriculture and Food, beef heifer program, $24,847; Solicitor General, miscellaneous, $60.33; Agriculture and Food, IMPIP, $34,000; Agriculture and Food, provincial-federal, adverse weather—that's the one I referred to—$8,000. I could go on. If you want it, I will read it. It's a full page. If you want to look at it, that's fine. I don't think we should take up the time now.

Mr. Worton: I mentioned the Attorney General's department.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: That's $60.33. I can't tell off-hand what it is for but that's all it is. I might say it's the lowest one. No, there is another one from the Attorney General for a few dollars.

Mr. Worton: We have now adopted a program where, if you don't pay your fine, you have a possibility of losing your licence. In fact, you do. You are not involved with that program, are you?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, but I don't believe the program you mention is in full effect yet, is it?

Mr. Worton: Quite a few of my residents phone me up and say they are in jail and have lost their licence.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I thought it was the member who sat down ahead of you who had that problem a few months ago with his licence and his driving activities.

Mr. Worton: No, generally, when my friends go to jail there is some other reason too. I understand there was one family with some $12 million in fines that were outstanding. They may now pick a driver up for non-payment but I thought that was through the Attorney General's collection agency.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Apparently I didn't make myself completely clear. The department concerned, whether it be Agriculture and Food, Attorney General or Colleges and Universities, does everything it can to exhaust the process. They go to the dead end. Then when they give up the idea that it can be collected, they hand it over to us as the last post. So we would not be aware of this $12 million. We're only aware of through the same sources.

[12:45]

Mr. Worton: When it gets to you it is pretty well like getting blood out of a stone, eh?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Pretty well. Yes, you've guessed it right.

Mr. M. Davidson: I must apologize to you, Mr. Minister. I was in conversation with my colleague from Algoma (Mr. Wildman) when you read out the student loan portion of that list and I didn't catch the amount that came under student loans.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You will have to read it in Hansard if you don't pay attention.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: "Colleges and Universities, Ontario Career Action: Original amount of debt was $835.95. The amount outstanding as of May 31, 1977, was $1,005.95. Colleges and Universities, Ontario student loans, the original amount was $7,725.53. As of May 31, 1977, it was $7,916.26. Colleges and Universities Experience '75, $23,127. As of May 31, 1977, it was $23,854.50. Colleges and Universities, student loans, $54,181.09—I don't have the year here, but the amount outstanding as of May 31, 1977, $50,415.49. Education, student aid, $87,172.49; outstanding as of May 31, 1977, $39,976.88.

That is an example that was handed to us. As the hon. member suggested, it is almost a dead end now. We had $87,172.49 handed to us. That has been reduced to $39,976.82, so there was a fair piece of money collected there.

Colleges and Universities, graduate fellowships was $28,092. The amount outstanding in May, 1977, $14,332. That was another fair piece of collection. Colleges and Universities student awards, $1,945,871.06. I'll stay away from the hundreds just so you can digest the bigger figures. The amount outstanding as of May 31, 1977, was $1,465 million. So you see, we collected about a half a million bucks because it's under $1.5 million there. So at a cost of slightly under $300,000, it is paying big dividends.

Mr. M. Davidson: The reason I asked for some of those figures, Mr. Minister, was that in the public accounts committee, it was recommended by the auditor and, I think by the public accounts, that some of these debts, particularly relating to student loans, go back, I believe, into the 1959 area.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, we in our department who are here this morning don't have that information. It might well be. You would get that through the public accounts better than through our department.

Mr. M. Davidson: But the amount of money that was owed in that category was very considerable and I'm very pleased to see that you are taking some action in this direction and are making some recovery of the money that is outstanding. When you find someone, for example, who has held a loan, say, since 1965 and has made no attempt whatsoever to make any repayment to the government, is interest charged on that money?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I am only speaking from memory. As I remember the student loan program, the interest starts once school ceases.

Mr. Worton: It is news to me that you have that responsibility, and evidently your ministry is doing a good job under the conditions when it has gone through all other ministries first before it gets to you. However, I always had the impression that somewhere along the line the federal government had backed these loans, and I have had cases where it has also taken action.

The other thing I would like to raise, Mr. Minister, is the fact that last night I spoke with a young lady who had been to both the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch) and the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott) about a grant she had been given in 1973-74 and they have now asked her for repayment of some $1,400. The unusual part about it is they have still made another grant to her this year and she has no way of meeting these obligations. Where do you enter into it with the federal government in regard to collections?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I am not in a position to answer that. Maybe I should be, but I will be very honest with you, I have not been involved in those negotiations. I would suggest that you ask the Minister of Colleges and Universities or even the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). It doesn't come under our department. I can't answer your question. It is not under our jurisdiction.

Mr. M. Davidson: Regarding the money that the province provides through the student loan programs, would all of the money that was outstanding and that had been owed, say, for two years, be recorded under those figures now, or would the ministry still be attempting to recover some of that money?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the ministry only gives to us what it thinks is not recoverable, so again I can't give you a straight answer. I wish I could, but I really can't. If they think there's a chance of collecting some, they keep it until they exhaust their means of collections. I can't give you a positive answer. I think you understand that.

Mr. B. Newman: Is there no fixed period of time in which the ministry attempts to collect the money? For example, say the Ministry of Colleges and Universities might have eight years or so to collect the funds and when it can't collect them, turn them over to you. There's no such period as that, is there?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not to our knowledge. You would think that maybe seven years would be a logical time, but I would think that as long as they are able to collect some they will keep it within their department. Some of them turn them over after six months. Some are written off. Where the individual has gone into receivership or something, the department would be quick to realize that it is not going to collect and it turns them over to us immediately. We do get some at six months.

Mr. Worton: You are the chief bill collector of the province, eh?

Item 4 agreed to.

On item 5, vehicle repair and trucking services.

Mr. M. Davidson: I see there is quite an increase in the estimate for this year over last year, and I am just wondering what the reason for that would be.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Under our present procedures all recoveries from all departments go to the Treasury. And in this particular case, Treasury is getting some of the recoveries. So that automatically puts our expenditure higher. It makes a difference in the total changes of $59,900; the $9,900 is increased cost, the $50,000 is accounting.

Mr. B. Newman: Vehicle repair and trucking services is only dealing with vehicles belonging to your ministry, or do you do some vehicle repair for other ministries?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: There are other ministries associated with this. Not the Ministry of Transportation and communications. There are some others; I don't have them all here this morning. Could we get that to you?

Mr. B. Newman: The reason I ask is that I wonder why this wouldn't have been done under the Ministry of Transportation and Communications rather than your ministry. I would think that they have so much to do in there, that maybe the necessary equipment plus the expertise would be a little greater with them than it would be with your ministry; unless you have sufficient work there and too much work is being funnelled to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. Maybe when you concentrate it in one ministry, there is greater efficiency and greater productivity.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We have a repair and service centre at Mimico. It is very convenient for the people who are downtown to go there for their repair service. I couldn't disagree with your suggestion that it perhaps should be under Transportation and Communications; but it is under our ministry, and the reason is for the availability of it here in Mimico.

Mr. B. Newman: You generally have to carry such an inventory of certain types of parts when you are in the repair business, that if it is concentrated in one ministry I would think it would be more efficient and more practical. I know that you will use your good judgement in deciding.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Your recommendations will be considered. As I say, I can't differ with you; I couldn't argue with you over the point.

Item 5 agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Grossman, the House adjourned at 1 p.m.
